If the Republican imagines it can soft soap the Germans of this county and induce them to vote the Republican ticket hereafter, it will find "hope a delusive phantom in the hour of need." We have been intimately associated with the German people since our boyhood, and we know them to be beyond the reach of such flattery.

Democrats can now see the importance of active and energetic work at elections, as in the recent election, the large democratic majority in Indiana had scarcely been announced when the name of Hon. Thos. A. Hendricks was sounded throughout the entire west and south as the democratic nominee for President in 1880, and why? simply because the large democratic majority placed Indiana in the foreground with Hendricks as the party leader, whose strength must be acknowledged in the national convention.

Now that the State Legislature is Democratic, we hope to have a fair apportionment for legislative and congressional purposes—an apportionment of which no party need feel ashamed. The life of political organizations depends upon the fairness and honor with which pledges made to the people are carried out, the democratic party has promised a just and fair apportionment of this State, and the people of every county should demand of their representative that the promise made be faithfully performed. DeKalb county has elected a man who will be found at his post ready to fight any attempt to gerrymander, he has no political axe to grind and no selfish ends to accomplish, therefore DeKalb may be put down right in the start for a fair, square deal, in the apportionment business.

45 Years Before the Public.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. MCLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

A Beautiful Tribute.

We clip the following from a speech made by Hon. John F. House, at Nashville, Tenn., after receiving the nomination for Congress in the 6th Tenn. district. It is worth reading:

"In the next contest between the two great parties they will divide upon governmental policy and without sectional animosity. Sectional hatred will be eliminated from the contest. So far as the south is concerned, I am certain that such will be the case. I can not, fellow citizens, find it in my heart to indulge in feelings of malice toward the people of the north. When I witness their magnanimous and generous conduct toward the southern people, I feel like pulling off my hat and standing uncovered in their presence. Oh, grander than the victory of the Appomattox is the victory won by the people of the north in their noble and generous contributions to the stricken and suffering south. Upon that fatal field the south surrendered her sword—Within the shadow of the dark wing of the pestilence, beside the new made graves of her heroic sons and daughters with bowed head and tearful eyes, she extends her hand and surrenders her heart to the generous and magnanimous north. God's own hand has bridged the bloody chasm. Let not the ambition of man seek to reopen the wounds and rekindle the embers of sectional strife."

FASHION'S FREAKS

AS DISPLAYED AT THE GRAND FALL OPENING OF ROOT & CO.

Fort Wayne Sentinel.

Although we are at times given to railings against the frolics of fashion, it makes not the slightest difference so long as such marvelously beautiful goods are displayed. The fall and winter opening began this morning at the mammoth establishment of Root & Co., and like the preceeding ones of this enterprising firm, was a complete success. Before entering, the attractions of the window must be noticed. Mr. W. H. Brady superintends this department and well deserves the many compliments his excellent taste called forth. The decorations in the north window comprises the articles contained in a large and varied stock, and represent a fortune in hangings of rich and rare lace, flouncing over gay colored silks, row after row of brilliant neckties, forming a perfect rainbow in appearance, buttons of every description, and seal skins of wonderful richness. This collection with a background of lovely carriage robes, formed a pretty sight.

In the south window new and beautiful carpets and rugs are displayed. Passers by are tempted to go inside for a closer inspection than can be obtained through French plate glass.

Entering and winding with the crowd through the maze of finery temptingly spread out on all sides in the general salesroom, visitors are attracted first by the glove counter, which is well presided over by Mr. Hoagland. Gloves of every description are shown in all colors and prices. The embroidered ones seem to be the favorite, although a splendid stock of plain ones is shown. Evening gloves and lace mitts in the lovely gas light tints are in abundance. Some new and very handsome fans are shown. Next in order is the hosiery department. Mr. Shuckman caters to the ladies' taste by placing before them all their dear hearts can desire in this line. A fine lot of silk hose, especially black, is shown, and lisle thread embroidered in all patterns and colors. A complete stock of children's hose may be had here. Opposite will be seen the notion department, which beggars description. Laces, ribbons, new and lovely lingerie, neckwear without end and buttons, a marvelous collection, never before excelled in this city. There are Japanese buttons, every one of which is a little picture. This stock could not be improved. Mr. Brady and assistants, with genuine courtesy, administer to the wants of the public. In connection with this department will be found dress and cloak trimmings, of which the new grass fringe with marabout beading, is beautiful beyond description. There are also rich and elegant ornaments for cloaks in abundance.

From this counter we pass over to that of the more useful—dress goods—which is presided over with courtly politeness by Messrs. Harter, Herr and Elbert. Here will be found cashmeres in all shades, from 50 cents to $1 per yard, all wool; also the pictu bourette, French novelties; cross over and chuddah cloth with a full line of Knickerbocker and plaids; also matellessa cloth for polonaise, with a complete line of the standard Jamestown alpacas.

Entering the silk department one meets a stock of black cashmeres, containing several thousand yards, from 40 cts to $1 65 per yard.

Colored silks in gros grain, taffeta and faille, are tastefully arranged by Mr. Shultz, whose fine judgment as a silk clerk is warranted. In all the new shades a full line of trimming silks and satins, with a complete stock of elegant velvets at from $1.40 to $14 per yard. In mourning goods the Herrietta and crepe cloths are the favorites, together with a full line of camel's hair polonaise cloths and all the standard brands of black silks, Lyons, Grodu, Rhine, Cyclops, Guinet; also lovely brocades in all colors and black.

Ascending the stairs something decidedly new and elegant meets the eye of the bewildered admirer. Three rugs of wonderful beauty are hung around the railing. The Silesian valued at $150; another, a Persian, price $185, and the other has a center of red Turkish carpet with a light border. The rugs in general are very pretty this year.

Not True.

In an attempt to prejudice the business men of Auburn against the COURIER the Republican of last week says: "An article from the COURIER, of this place is going the rounds of the press which declares in substance that in consequence of the Hazzard swindle all the business men of Auburn are bankrupts and are without credit."

In the first place the article in question is NOT "going the rounds of the press," and if it was, it would not effect our merchants in the least, and when we are represented as saying that "all the business men of Auburn, are bankrupts and without credit," we are compeled to brand the accusation as false in every particular, and refer to our former article as proof. Again, it says "the article is doing our business men and the business interests of Auburn great injustice." Another misrepresentation which cannot be substantiated, we scarcely imagine that the business interests of Auburn are effected by a squib in the COURIER, nor even in the Republican, notwithstanding its assumed guardianship of the public's welfare. The facts are that the article in the Republican was written for "bunkum."

Deals Directly with Nature.

In extracting fruit flavors, Dr. Price deals directly with nature, and leaves the use of artificial extracts to those who have not the chemical knowledge to extract from the true fruits. Dr. Price's special flavoring extracts are conceded to have no peers in the market.

—If the conduct of the boys and some of the young men at Ensley's Hall last Saturday evening is a criterion of their good behavior on such occasions, we wonder that the better class of society does not become disgusted and retire. The proprietor of the Hall, the town marshal, or some person having authority should see to it that such rowdyism is prevented for the good of the public. The idea of a mob of young men and boys being allowed to interrupt an entertainment by talking aloud, moving the seats, smoking, whistling, roosting on the back of the chairs like a flock of carrion-crows, and keeping up a continuous disturbance is simply outrageous, and should not be tolerated in a civilized community.

Fragrant and Delicate Odors.

Each flower contains a fragrant substance, and the separation of this substance in a manner so as to retain all of its sweetness, requires the greatest experience and care. Dr. Price's Unique Perfumes are prepared by a process that so retains their natural fragrance.

A RAID.

J. K. Culbertson, of this county, and R. White, of Allen county, never made a more successful raid than a few days ago They made a requisition on the stoves of W. H. Kiblinger & Co. of Auburn, and captured two of the celebrated Golden Era Cook Stoves.

—Friday, Wheeler C. Ellis, of Georgetown, Colorado, was married by telegraph to Miss Lena Sellers, of Washington Court House, Va., three thousand miles apart. They were engaged, and young Ellis was to have come east to be married, but he could not leave his business, and sent for the young lady to come west. Her mother objected. Rev. Mr. Carpenter suggested the telegraph, and in half an hour the words passed over the line, "What God has joined together let no man put asunder,"—Fort Wayne News.

Sam—Hello, Johnny! that is a nobby suit you wear, and mighty nice goods, what did it cost you?

Johnny—How much do you think?

Sam—Well, goods are very cheap now, I should judge that suit cost you about $30.00.

Johnny—Oh, no! you see I had it made to order at Yesbera's and it only cost me $20.00.

—The Indiana Farmer recently complimented Mr. Lockhart for the stand he took to prevent liquor from being sold on the State Fair grounds, but in the last issue it says there was two or more liquor establishments in full blast in the very center of the grounds, and asks Mr. Lockhart to explain whether his decision was overruled by the board of directors, or where the responsibility rests. No doubt Mr. Lockhart will answer satisfactorily.

—Here's a tear to the memory of poor Tom. Mays, late Democratic candidate for Clerk of DeKalb county! Tom was stricken down in the house of his friends, as DeKalb gave a majority for the Democratic State ticket. He was once editor of the Auburn COURIER, and while serving in that capacity did valiant service for the cause of Democracy and his defeat convicts DeKalb county Democrats of being an ungrateful set of "scratchers." Cheer up, Tom; the Lord may be reserving you for a nobler mission.—Wabash Courier.

—MR. EDITOR—I see by your paper that you have no correspondent from this place, and as the election is over there is not much of importance. I will proceed to give you such as I can think of this evening.

—We had a very sudden death on Sunday night in this neighborhood, Lewis Tiffany, one of the old pioneers of the county died at the residence of his son-in-law, Geo. Bleeks, in Orangville, he was as well as usual in the evening, and no one discovered anything the matter with him until four o'clock in the morning, when they woke up and found him dead.

—I see that the editor of the Republican is well satisfied with the result of the election, well we might expect this, but he says he always goes for the best men. Strange as it may seem they always have all the best men (to hear them tell it) including those that are all the time filching from the public. I am glad to hear that we have good men, especially as a majority of them are Democrats, and the ones that we need the worst to watch those they did get in. I am satisfied with what we have done, but would have been better satisfied if all my ticket could have been elected.

—We are having scientific lectures semi-occasionally, the first was entitled "Its hard on Dad but its the making of the purp," by the teacher, and another by a Rev. gentleman entitled "night brings the stars." But it was cloudy and they did not come.

Hazzard.

For the last ten days our citizens have been watching the Hazzard case with considerable anxiety. The presence of the bank examiner created a suspicion that things were not just as they should be at the bank, depositors soon ascertained however that their money was forthcoming on demand, that the bank officers were disposed to show their ability to pay all claims as fast as presented, this disposition on their part had a tendency to allay all feelings of distrust and create a desire to know what the examiner would do in the premises. After a careful examination of the books the examiner decided that in order to save the bank a certain deposit of $90,000 made at the instance of Geo. Hazzard, must be satisfactorily explained, which resulted in a dispatch to Hazzard in Nebraska; in reply Hazzard requested the officers of the bank and the examiner to meet him in Chicago to arrange matters; in the meantime a United States marshal was advised to be in waiting in Chicago. The meeting took place in Chicago as arranged, Hazzard was indignant as usual, the government official took the game cock under his wing and delivered him before Commissioner Hoyne for examination. Hazzard waived examination, at the same time requesting that he be taken before Judge Blodgett, of the district court, and was held under $20,000 bonds. On being taken before Judge Blodgett, Hazzard made a brief explanation in connection with his alleged defalcation to the Auburn bank, and claimed that he could not make a proper defense without free access to the books of the concern. In the interest of justice he asked and was granted permission to have the case transferred from that district to the federal courts of Indianapolis. In granting the prisoner's request, Judge Blodgett remarked that the case would probably prove a complicated one, and he believed that the court most convenient to all parties interested would be the proper place to bring it to use. Hazzard was taken to Indianapolis and his trial was set for last Monday, the officers of the bank and several of Hazzard's endorsers were summoned to appear as witnesses. When the time came for trial the district attorney moved a postponement for want of evidence, and Hazzard was released on a $5000 bond for his appearance at the November term of the United States district court at Indianapolis. On yesterday morning after the return of the bank officers, it was surmised that Hazzard had followed them to Fort Wayne, a warrant for his arrest was issued (for forgery) and placed in the hands of parties who proceeded to Fort Wayne and found Hazzard in a saloon near the depot, he was arrested and brought to this place, where his appearance created as much excitement as a Norwegian with a trained bear.

Thursday morning—The First National Bank was closed this Morning. Mr. Elis the examiner will have charge until a receiver arrives. Hazzard still in town, under guard.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A fire at Edinburg, Pa., almost completely wiped the town out of existence, 225 houses being destroyed. Loss $350,000 to $400,000.... The most severe storm for fifteen years prevailed along the East Atlantic coast on Oct. 13. The damage to shipping was immense and there was some loss of life.

George J. Hathaway, the defaulting treasurer of the Border City Mills, of Fall River, Mass., has been sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary. Chace, the President of the company, had previously received a ten years' sentence.... Jesse R. Oakley, the defaulting cashier of the Merchants' Exchange National Bank of New York, who fled to Europe in 1870, but who returned recently and pleaded guilty, has been sentenced to five years at hard labor in the Albany penitentiary.

Arthur Cheney, manager of the Globe Theater, Boston, is dead.... Some excitement has been produced among New York stock speculators by the failure of Haar & Co., stock and bullion brokers. The senior member of the firm was arrested on a charge of swindling, and held in $80,000 bail. He charges that a conspiracy, headed by Jay Gould, was the cause of the firm's downfall.

THE WEST.

A special correspondent of the Chicago Times gives an interesting account of the adventures of Col. Thornburgh's command which started from Sidney, Neb., in pursuit of the fugitive Cheyennes. Through the incapacity of guides and scouts, and a singular degree of ignorance concerning the topography of the country on the part of the officers, the command seems to have been lost among the sand-hills between the railroad and the Black Hills. The men and animals were without water or food so long that they became nearly helpless, and in this condition they were in danger of perishing among the Sahara-like sand drifts. Fortunately they struck the trail of Carlton's command, obtained assistance, and got through to a point near the old Red Cloud agency. The Cheyennes seem to have known the country better, and, after leading the troops into the sand-hills, disappeared utterly.

The town of Mount Vernon, Posey county, Ind., has been thrown into a wild state of excitement by a series of the most disgusting crimes and tragic revenges which ever startled the people of a civilized community. Eight negroes went to a house of ill-fame near the outskirts of the town and perpetrated the most beastly outrages upon three women inmates, winding up by robbing them of what little money they possessed. Warrants were sworn out for the arrest of the negroes, and Deputy Sheriff Thomas, with a posse, in attempting to effect the arrest of Dan Harris, one of the participators, was shot dead by Harris' father, an old negro of 80. Harris and three other negroes were finally captured and lodged in jail. The news of the killing spread like wildfire through the community, and by nightfall a mob of 200 armed men had been organized. A raid was made on the jail, the four negroes forcibly taken therefrom and hanged to the limb of a tree in the jail yard. A fifth was stabbed to death and his body carved in small pieces by the infuriated lynchers. The mob then quietly dispersed.

Donnelly, the lion-tamer connected with Pullman & Hamilton's circus, was nearly killed by one of his pets at McArthur, Ohio, the other day. It was with great difficulty that he was rescued from the cage alive.

A Deadwood (Dakota) dispatch says that a fight took place near that city, between the Sheriff and posse and two road-agents, in which one of the latter, Tom Price, was four times wounded, twice fatally, and is now in the hands of the authorities. His companion escaped.... Rice's Surprise Party, a new burlesque combination of undoubted merit, are giving the people of Chicago two extravaganzas this week—"Horrors, or the Marajah of Zogabad," and "Hiawatha." This troupe includes some popular burlesque comedians, notably Willie Edouin, Mestayer, Lewis Harrison and Miss Alice Harrison. They appear at Haverly's Theater, which was refitted during the summer vacation.

Potter, the man who wagered that e would roll a wheelbarrow from a point in Ohio to San Francisco, has accomplished his task in a time less than that agreed upon.

Evangelist Moody is on a flying visit to Chicago, his old home. He will winter in Baltimore, where he proposes conducting a series of religious meetings.

The Constitutional Convention of California has adopted a resolution to memorialize the President and Senate of the United States to so modify the Burlingame treaty as to prohibit Chinese immigration.

THE SOUTH.

William P. Langley, a noted Texas desperado, was recently hanged at Giddings, in that State. He is known to have killed eight men, besides shooting many others who survived.

There were 50 deaths from yellow fever in New Orleans on the 13th inst., and 128 new cases reported; total cases to that date, 11,537; total deaths, 3,490. At Memphis the deaths numbered 16; at Vicksburg, 1; at Chattanooga, 9, with 205 sick. The fever had broken out in a large number of towns along the line of the Memphis and Charleston railroad, between Chattanooga and Memphis, and a panic existed all along the road. There was little abatement of the fever in the interior towns of Louisiana and Mississippi, and no hopes of its dying out before the appearance of frost.... A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune at Memphis telegraphs as follows under date of Oct. 13: "Have just returned from a 150 miles run out on the Memphis and Charleston railway. Along the entire route the sight was sickening. The towns and villages are deserted, and present a dilapidated appearance. The citizens bar their doors against visitors from Memphis, while all around them their neighbors are sick and dying. It is for the relief of this class of people that the Howards have organized medicine and relief trains on both the Louisville and Charleston railways, and they have found plenty to do. In the 300 miles run one or two barrels of meal were all that could be got on the route for love or money. Every station and wood-pile on the line of these roads has a number of cases, most all proving fatal."

A Vicksburg dispatch of Oct. 14 reports that "there was a political meeting going on at Waterproof, La., and ex-Chief Justice John T. Ludeling had been addressing them. A disturbance arose, and arms were freely used. During the fight Capt. Peck and four negroes were killed. Among the negroes killed was one named Fairfax, a nominee for Congress in Tensas parish. He could not be found, and seems to have been gotten away from the scene of action. There was great excitement. The negroes were threatening to sack the town, and the whites had dispatched to the adjoining parishes for reinforcements."

Advices from the fever-infected districts of the South to Oct. 16, report hot weather all along the Mississippi valley, and the outlook exceedingly discouraging. The disease was fastening itself upon new country localities daily, and the same sad scenes were being witnessed that has characterized the appearance of the plague at Vicksburg, Grenada, and other stricken towns. The fever has broken out at Helena, Ark., and Little Rock had set up a rigid quarantine against the afflicted town. At New Orleans the deaths for the preceding twenty-four hours numbered 30, with 135 new cases; at Memphis there were 18 deaths; at Vicksburg the fever had about run its course, for want of material to feed upon; at Chattanooga, 6 deaths; Decatur, Ala., 12 new cases and 2 deaths; Cairo, Ill., 2 deaths and 3 new cases; Baton Rouge, La., 46 new cases, 4 deaths. All the towns throughout the interior of Louisiana, Mississippi and Tennessee where the fever has appeared report no improvement, and no hopes of an abatement of the plague before the appearance of frost.

A dispatch from Natchez, Miss., dated Oct. 16, says: "A fight occurred with the negroes yesterday in Goldman's field, some four miles above Waterproof, La., in which it is said that thirty-six negroes were killed, and the whole of them dispersed. Some apprehend further trouble, while the general impression is that the negroes will not again assemble. Assistance was pouring in from all directions. Fifty more men left here this evening, in answer to a call from St. Joseph, La. No plantation has been burned. A communication just received from a citizen of Waterproof, states: 'All quiet and settled. Two negroes killed yesterday.' Waterproof is situated immediately on the banks of the Mississippi, in Tensas parish. The parish at the last election registered 5,000 colored and 460 white voters. The following is said to be the origin of the trouble: Fairfax, candidate for Congress for the Fifth district, called a meeting of colored Republicans at Waterproof. The quarantine officers interfered, and the negroes collected in large numbers around Fairfax's house, just out of town. An armed posse sent out to expostulate with them were fired upon, and three of the posse killed."

A shocking accident is reported from Lynchburg, Va. During a marriage ceremony at a colored Baptist church, which was crowded to suffocation, a piece of plastering fell from the ceiling. Some one in the audience became alarmed and cried out that the roof was falling. The scene that followed this announcement was indescribable. An uncontrollable panic ensued. Persons in the second and third stories jumped from the windows to the ground, fifty or sixty feet below, meeting instant death or permanent injuries. The persons in the auditorium rushed for the doors, and in the excitement that followed were crushed and mangled frightfully. At the first sound of alarm the bridegroom and bride elect made a rush for the door, followed by the waiters. Not one of them ever reached that opening, but were tramped to death before they could escape, the bride, it is believed, by some one jumping on her from the gallery. The groom met his death by a piece of the rail from the gallery being thrown upon him, injuring him so that he could not rise, and was trodden upon by the excited crowd and killed. Ten persons were killed outright by jumping from the windows, and about forty or fifty, most of them women, were wounded.... Among the victims of the yellow fever at Memphis figures the name of Jeff Davis, Jr., aged 21.

Advices from the plague-ridden localities of the South to Oct. 18 report the advent of cooler weather and a gratifying decrease in the mortality roll. The fever broke out on the relief boat Chambers, which was sent down the Mississippi loaded with supplies for the isolated points along the river, and the expedition was ordered to proceed up the river to quarantine, below St. Louis. Lieut. Benner, the commander of the vessel, died, and was buried at Vicksburg. There was great grief at his untimely taking off, and nearly every well person in Vicksburg followed his remains to the grave.

GENERAL.

Cronin, of Oregon—he of electoral notoriety—is among the dead of the week.

A. W. Richmond, owner of the newly-arisen star, Hopeful, is so satisfied that he has the fastest trotting horse in existence that he has issued a challenge against all the world to trot two races, namely: Mile heats, three in five, in harness, and mile heats, three in five, to wagon, for any reasonable amount.... Statistics of the commercial failures in the United States for the first nine months of the present year have been furnished by Dun, Barlow & Co. They number 2,853, as compared with 1,815 the same quarter last year. Liabilities for the last quarter, $66,000,000, as compared with $42,000,000 the same period of 1877. For the first nine months of 1878 the failures number 8,768, as compared with 6,565 the same period in 1877. The liabilities for the first nine months of 1878 were $197,000,000, against $141,000,000 for the nine months of 1877.

The books of the New York Mine Company, which were recently seized at Marquette, Mich., by Tilden's counsel, have been delivered up, in accordance with the order of the United States Court.

The trial of the Montreal Orangemen for unlawfully assembling on the 12th of last July has resulted in their acquittal. It is likely that damages for false arrest will be instituted by the Orangemen against the prosecution.

POLITICAL.

A Cincinnati dispatch says that "official returns of the late election have been received from all the counties in Ohio but fourteen. Unofficial reports have also been received from these, so that very close estimates can now be made upon the result. The total vote cast will fall short of that of last year. The Republican majority for Secretary of State will be 4,102. The National vote will reach somewhere between 30,000 and 35,000, a small increase upon last year."

The Vermont Legislature has re-elected Hon. Justin S. Morrill to the United States Senate for another term, which, when completed, will make eighteen consecutive years he will have served in that capacity.

The full official returns of the Ohio election give the following as the total vote cast for each candidate for Secretary of State: Barnes, Republican, 274,120; Paige, Democrat, 270,966; Ray, National, 38,332; Robinson, Prohibition, 5,674; Barnes' plurality, 3,154.

Samuel J. Tilden is out with a letter denying all knowledge of the cipher telegrams recently published in the New York Tribune, alleged to have been exchanged between his friends in relation to the purchase of electoral votes in South Carolina and Florida. He says of the alleged telegrams, "which relate to an offer purporting to have been made in behalf of some member of the State Board of Canvassers of Florida, to give, for pecuniary compensation, certificates to the Democratic electors who had been actually chosen, none of these telegrams, nor any telegrams communicating such offer, or relating to such offer, was seen by me, translated to me, or the contents of it in any manner made known to me." In relation to the ciphers bearing on the canvass of votes in South Carolina Tilden says: "I can speak of them no less definitely and positively. No one such telegram, either in cipher or translated, was ever shown to or its contents made known to me. No offer or negotiation in behalf of the State Canvassers of South Carolina, or any of them, or any dealing with any of them in respect to certificates to electors was ever authorized or sanctioned in any manner by me, directly or through any other person."

WASHINGTON.

At a Cabinet meeting, the other day, it was decided that troops cannot be used in assisting internal-revenue officers to break up the manufacture of crooked whisky. The Collector at Little Rock, Ark., who asked for such aid, has been instructed to call on the United States Marshal and to employ as large a posse as may be necessary for the purpose. Should it be shown that the civil authorities are powerless to execute the laws the President will issue his proclamation commanding the offenders to cease their violations of the law, and if not obeyed the military will be employed to break up such illicit stills.

The October returns to the Department of Agriculture indicate the average condition of the cotton crop is 90—the same as September. Compared with October, 1877, the growing crop shows an improvement of 11 per centum. The October condition equals that of the splendid crop of 1870, and excels any intervening year. Insect injuries are unimportant. With an increased acreage planted, the crop now promises to produce more than 5,000,000 bales.

FOREIGN.

During a performance at the Coliseum Theater, Liverpool, a cry of fire was raised, when a terrible panic ensued, people rushing for the doors and sliding down the pillars of the gallery on the heads of the occupants of the pit. A post impeded exit. Thirty-five men and lads and two women were suffocated. Many persons were severely injured.... The firm of Heugh, Balfour & Co., one of the oldest Eastern shipping houses in Manchester, England, has failed for upward of £2,000,000.

Dupanloup, Bishop of Orleans, and a member of the French Senate, is dead.... The Russians claim that the territory between Constantinople and Adrianople is not affected by the treaty of Berlin; therefore, under the preliminary treaty of San Stefano, they have a right to occupy it until the definite treaty shall be concluded.... Mr. Noyes, American Minister to France, has received 60,000 francs collected in Paris for the relief of yellow-fever sufferers in the United States.

The revolutionary feeling so widely prevalent in Russia has been manifested lately in a way exceedingly unpleasant to the authorities at St. Petersburg. Seditious placards are posted and incendiary pamphlets distributed in spite of all the vigilance of the police, assisted by a military patrol. Government officials receive threatening letters, and the evidences of dangerous agitation are constantly visible.

Austria has been officially notified by Turkey that the latter power will oppose by arms the advance of the Austrian troops upon Novi-Bazar.... Count Von Bismarck, nephew of the German Chancellor recently committed suicide at Venice by shooting himself with a revolver. The act was caused by physical suffering.... The awards to the American exhibitors at the French Exposition number 750, namely: Ten grand prizes, thirty diplomas of honor, 134 gold medals, 200 silver medals, 220 bronze medals, and 156 honorable mentions. The aggregate is larger than the whole number of American exhibitors at the Paris Exposition of 1867 or at the Vienna Exposition of 1873, and is a larger proportion awarded to exhibitors than to any other nation represented at this Exhibition.

It is announced in a cable dispatch from Rome that "the first basis for an arrangement between the Vatican and Germany having completely failed in consequence of the attitude of the Center party in the Reichstag, a new and less radical basis will be substituted, and the relations between the church and state will be regulated as nearly as possible in accordance with the existing German laws.... A Bombay dispatch says the reply of the Ameer of Afghanistan has been received by the Viceroy of India, and is unsatisfactory.

The Child Preacher.

There is now in Louisville a little negress who is a perfect child wonder. She is a scriptural marvel. She does not even know her letters, yet she can quote accurately almost any passage in the Bible. At the age of 9 months she could talk, and would frequently tell her mother what her idea of heaven was. As she grew older she would sit for hours and expatiate on the beauties and glories of the other world. The old colored folks would listen to her sayings for hours. A reporter interrogated her. "What is your name, little girl?" "Alice Coatny." "How old are you?" "I'se just 4 years and 28 days old to-night?" "Where were you born?" "I was born in Liverpool, England—'cross de Atlantic." "How long since you felt the power within you?" "I don't know; I'se always felt the power of God." "What do you talk about when you speak to a crowd?" "I talk about Jesus, about heavenly things, about how Jesus died and was crucified; how he rose again in three days and sitteth at the right hand of God." "Can you spell?" "No, sir; I don't know my A B Cs yet." She then went on in a rapturous strain about things biblical and spiritual, completely nonplusing the reporter. She was accompanied by two colored men. They talked in an enthusiastic manner about her. She said in her conversation that she believed in two kinds of baptism. She spoke of the different modes of salvation; how to reach paradise; how to be converted from a bad man to a good one, etc. Her sayings were entirely original, and were not spoken in a hesitating voice, but in a quick, keen and forcible manner. As young as she is, a negress, without education in the principles she sets forth, her power partakes strongly of the marvelous.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Gold and Silver of Colorado.

Colorado ranks third among the gold and silver producing States of our Union. In her mountains is hidden a world of mineral wealth. In fact, mining stands first in the resources of the State. The yield of gold and silver from Colorado for the past six years is as follows:

1872	$3,785,000	1875	$5,434,257
1874	5,362,000	1877	7,365,283

It is thought that the yield for 1878 will exceed $10,000,000. The total production from the Colorado mines up to the 1st of last January, amounts to the magnificent sum of $72,000,000. New mines are discovered and opened and new mining works built every year. In fact, the seemingly inexhaustible mineral deposits of the State have but just begun to be developed. We visited the Boston and Colorado smelting works at Black Hawk, under the management of Prof. N. P. Hill, the largest on this continent, and probably the largest in the world. Over 20,000 tons of ore are treated each year in this establishment, and the yearly production of gold and silver is over $2,500,000 (coin value). The hills and mountains around Black Hawk are mined and tunneled and blasted until they are literally honeycombed. As you walk the streets of the town hundreds of miners are at work far beneath you, tearing the precious ore from the rocks.—Cor. Troy Times.

At Long Point, Tex., the colored people put bells upon the necks of their children to keep them from getting lost in the high weeds that surround the town.

LOST IN THE DESERT.

A special correspondent of the Chicago Times, who accompanied Maj. Thornburgh in his chase after the murderous Cheyenne Indians, furnishes the following account of that expedition and its remarkable experiences:

The march has been through a country which is a geographical blank, and a desert untenanted by scarcely a living thing. The wagon trains were abandoned at the Platte river, two of them being stuck in the quicksand. The men took two days' rations on their saddles and started northward toward White Tail creek, where the scouts reported the savages encamped. A fog so dense that it obscured objects twenty yards away bewildered the scouts, and, before they struck the trail, eight miles away, twenty miles had been traversed in objectless detours, and the savages had escaped. Their camp fires were smoldering and their trail was still fresh. The column pushed on with scouts supposed to know all about the country, but they proved their utter ignorance by leading the column through an inaccessible country and losing the trail.

The track of the savages was finally discovered by members of Thornburgh's staff, and the cavalry moved on at the highest possible speed. We made a dry camp underneath the hills, where a semi-circle of rifle pits had been dug in the sand. We pressed the savages so closely that twenty ponies had been abandoned, and near the rifle pits there were some with packs on their backs, all wet with perspiration. During the night the Indians were heard around the camp, but the scouts were not able to strike them. The command was in the saddle before daybreak, following the trail, which led toward the south. Seventy-five miles had been traversed without a drop of water. The day was hot and dusty, and the men and animals suffered frightfully.

A private of Company H of the Fourth Infantry, dismounted by the falling of his horse, was left on the road to wait for Mauck's command, which was following twenty miles in our rear. Two hours after the column passed out of sight he was attacked by several Indians. He took refuge in the rifle-pits, and stood them off several hours. The Indians, circulating around him, poured a hot fire upon him, and, although some of their bullets cut his clothing, he escaped unhurt, Mauck's command appearing in sight just after the Indians succeeded in shooting the trigger off his gun. We reached a small creek near the North Platte river on Sunday noon. The men were almost unable to articulate from the effects of their torturing thirst. The wagon-train, left in the rear, was attacked by fifteen Indians. The guard repelled the assault until relieved by the arrival of Mauck. All the scouts who had been engaged deserted the expedition, and Col. Thornburg could only push on in a northern direction in hopes of striking the trail. Finally we struck the great sand hills of Nebraska. The sand was knee-deep to the horses and was carried by the wind in blinding clouds. Ceaseles currents of wind piled it up in monstrous castles or whirled it up into drifts like snow. The column marched forty-five miles without water and with no food save a little hard-tack and raw bacon. Just as the sun was going down our glasses revealed a lake in the distance. We reached it at 8 o'clock, but found it to be bitterly alkaline. The next day we struck Carlton's trail and followed it, abandoning all hopes of intercepting the Indians. The best horses in the command were sent forward bearing couriers, to ask Carlton's assistance. We marched forty miles, and passed en route a camp made by Carlton's men. Horses and men, dropping out of Carlton's column from exhaustion, came straggling into our camp, near an alkali lake, at all hours during the night. Wednesday morning the probability that the whole command would perish in the sand was generally discussed. New couriers were sent forward, and every effort made by the commanding officer to relieve the increasing distress of the troops. He succeeded at 3 o'clock in communicating with Carlton, and an hour later we camped on the headwaters of the Snake river, where Carlton's relief met us. The horses were so thin that the men almost pulled them over in attempting to mount. The expedition is a complete failure so far as the capture of the renegade Cheyennes is concerned. It failed because illy fitted out, something for which Thornburgh cannot be held responsible. Another cause of the failure was the unreliable character of the scouts furnished the expedition. The department of the Platte was outgeneraled. The savages baffled the troops at every point, and led them into the sand-hills, from which they might never have emerged.

How a Million Men Died.

A writer in an English magazine studies from birth to death the march of an English generation through life, basing his remarks on the annual report of the Registrar General. The author singles out, in imagination, a generation of 1,000,000, and finds of these more than one-fourth die before they reach 5 years of age. During the next five years the deaths number less than one-seventh of those in the first quinquennium. From 10 to 15, the average mortality is lower than at any other period. From 15 to 20, the number of deaths increases again, especially among women. At this period, the influence of dangerous occupations begins to be seen in the death-rate. Fully eight times as many men as women die violent deaths. The number of such deaths continues to rise from 20 to 25, and keeps high for at least twenty years. Consumption is prevalent and fatal from 20 to 45, and is responsible for half the deaths. From 35 to 45 the effects of wear and tear begin to appear, and many persons succumb to diseases of the important internal organs. By 55 the imagined 1,000,000 has dwindled down to less than one-half, or 421,115. After this the death-rate increases more rapidly. At 75 there remain 161,124, and at 85, 38,565. Only 202 reach the age of 100. At 53 the number of men and women surviving is about equal, but from 55 onward the women exceed the men.

Hog Cholera.

Dr. Dunlap, in his lecture here last week, brought out a great many new and interesting facts regarding a hog and his diseases. He said the hog was not a native of this country, but had been brought over by the Pilgrims. He is a native of a warm climate, and therefore the idea that the warm weather was injurious to him is false. As he is a stranger to our climate, we should carefully study his habits. The hog in his wild state gets most of his nourishment from the ground. This being the case, he should have the same articles of food given him that he would get in the ground. If fed artificially, the salts and other substances found in the ground should be supplied artificially. He said there was no such disease as hog cholera in reality. All diseases of hogs are grouped together as cholera, although it is improperly done. He has made the study of the disease his business of late. He calls the disease typhoid fever; says they have the same symptoms people have with this fever. It is caused by a peculiar poison in the blood; had examined nearly 100 in the last few weeks; duration of disease is from seven to fourteen days; will take disease in from seven to fourteen days after exposure; the first symptom is headache; won't eat; keep food away; don't try to force him to eat in this stage; has a slight cough; a stiffness of back and hind quarters; is sore in bowels; don't give severe cathartics, but gentle; hog is constipated; the causes of the disease are numerous; the principal are bad air, crowding, bad food, bad water, etc., etc. Slough water is one of the principal causes; filth is another great cause; says to never use straw for bedding; but use clay always, and be careful to keep the pens clean; give them plenty of pure water, but keep them away from sloughs; is opposed to inter-breeding; believes it generates disease; recommends cross-breeding as much as possible. The following is the recipe for the cure of the cholera which he gave, and says it has never failed to work a cure: Hyposulphite soda ten pounds, bicarbonate soda five pounds, copperas one pound; mix together; give one pound of mixture to thirty sick hogs twice or three times a day, or to thirty well hogs every morning on an empty stomach. If bowels are costive, add glauber salts half ounce with each dose, until bowels are moved. Mix a pound of the above mixture in slop made of milk and ground feed (not sour); add two teaspoonfuls of carbolic acid before giving. The hogs must be kept on dry ground and allowed no raw corn.—Atlantic Messenger.

Battle With Moonshiners.

On the 1st inst., Special Deputy Collector J. M. Phillips left here with fifty well-equipped men for a raid on the illicit distilleries of Overton, Putnam, Fentress and Jackson counties, destroying eight illicit concerns valued at $1,300. Phillips says that on approaching the distillery of Jonathan Allred, on the 3d inst., they were fired into at short range by James Pitman, an employe of Allred, but without effect. At the distillery of C. N. Bowman, four shots were fired at them, and two or three men were seen at a distance with arms in their arms. On reaching Crawford mill, on Roaring river, at a mountain torrent which passes through some of the roughest country in Christendom, consisting of high, abrupt hills, bluffs, and deep ravines, they heard a horn blown, and, in response, four or five men made their appearance on the crest of a bluff 100 feet in height, which commanded a ford which Phillips and his men expected to cross. Phillips sent Special Deputy Collector Mauphin with eighteen men up the river with instructions to cross that stream and come down in the rear of the wild-cat men. As soon as Mauphin and his men came in sight of the distillers on the opposite side of the bluff from Phillips, the moonshiners formed in regular line of battle and at once opened fire on Mauphin, who returned it, killing four illicit distillers, breaking another's thigh, and slightly wounding another. The revenue men were then forced to retreat for want of ammunition, but were not followed by the moonshiners, who still kept around their very advantageous position. None of the revenue raiders received a scratch. Citizens who claimed to know told Phillips that there were not less than 100 moonshiners armed with long-range guns, and that they are being reinforced by parties from other localities. The illicit distillers fired at random, making scattering shots, while the revenue men, who are composed equally of ex-Federal and ex-Confederate soldiers, coolly reserved their fire, and only put their bullets where they thought most was to be accomplished. The illicit distillers had formed an ambush for the revenue men, supposing they would cross the ford on their way to Flat creek. They were prepared to cover their rear from the first point where the moonshiners were observed, drive them through a narrow pass into the very clutches of the illicit distillers, who would be enabled to fire at them from four sides, and thus annihilate them.—Nashville (Tenn.) Cor. Chicago Times.

The Nightmare.

"Ethel Vane" sends us a poem, "Why Does Sweet Slumber Shun My Eyes?" Why? Sit down here, Ethel, where we can tickle your rosy ear with the waxed end of a short mustache, while we whisper to you that when a girl scarcely 19 years old eats an 8-o'clock supper of cold tongue, broiled steak, salt mackerel, fried potatoes, doughnuts, cold apple pie, fried eggs, fresh peaches, a slice of watermelon and one or two cups of coffee, horrified slumber will pack its trunk and climb onto the first train that will take it furthest away, and all the poetry in the Baptist College won't bring it back to you for a week. Don't ask any more such conundrums, Ethel; these are stirring, earnest times, that thrill with peril and impending danger, and our lyre is tuned to loftier strains.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

Tincture of iodine has been fully tried at some of the Indian agencies in the West as a substitute for quinine in the treatment of malarial diseases, and with entire success. Dr. Fordyce Grimmell writes: "I have been astonished and delighted with the results."

The seeds of timothy grass, clover, pine and fir from high latitudes are distinguished from those of southern lands for their high germinating power, which is shown not merely by the large number of fruitful seeds, but also by the energy, cleanliness and absolute weight.

Sir Wm. Armstrong has invented a jointed cannon which unscrews into three pieces, thus rendering it easily transportable on the backs of mules. This gun has been subjected to very severe tests, which it stood very successfully, and has been adopted by the British army.

The dangers of spontaneous combustion of bituminous coal are illustrated by the fact that no less than 4 per cent. of all the coal-laden vessels that have left English ports during the last five years for destinations south of the equator have been lost by ignition of their cargoes.

The composition of niello, or Russian silver, hitherto a profound secret, has been discovered. It consists in nine parts silver, one part copper, one part lead and one part bismuth, melted together and saturated with sulphur. The mixture produces the gorgeous blue known as steel blue.

A new method of cooling hot journals has been successfully employed on large ocean steamers. It consists of a mixture of sulphur and oil or grease. The fine metal dust formed when the journal runs hot forms a sulphide with sulphur and grows soft and greasy, preventing any appreciable amount of friction.

Sir C. Wyville Thomson believes that there is now sufficient data collected to warrant the assertion that the average depth of the ocean is a little over 2,000 fathoms, and that the depth nowhere exceeds 5,000 fathoms. It is rare to find depths greater than 4,000 fathoms, and they appear to be pits in the neighborhood of volcanic islands, but there are submarine valleys of considerable extent, in general parallel to the axes of the continents, where the sounding line reaches 3,000 fathoms.

A. S. Wilson presents the following facts to show the marvelous industry of bees. Approximately, 100 heads of clover yield 0.8 gram of sugar, or 125 heads give 1 gram of sugar, and, therefore, 125,000 heads 1 kilogramme of sugar. As each head contains 60 florets (125,000x60), not less than 7,500,000 flower tubes must be emptied of their honey to obtain 1 kilogramme of sugar. The honey may, roughly, be estimated to contain 75 per cent. of sugar, and hence we have 1 kilogramme equal to 5,600,000 flowers in round numbers, or 2,500,000 visits for 1 pound of honey

The Mexican Border.

A recent telegram from San Antonio, Texas, says: "The transfer of 12,000 Mexican troops to the Rio Grande border is certain. Gen. Ord thinks the move one of policy on the part of Diaz to strengthen himself in the estimation of the Mexican people, as Trevino, the chief commander of the Mexican forces on the Rio Grande border, aspires to the Presidency. Ornellas, the Mexican Consul here, says the object is to settle Indian affairs in Northern Mexico. He states that internal matters are being quieted, and that there is no other office for the troops. All accounts, however, show general turbulence throughout the country, which induces the belief that Gen. Ord is correct, and that Ornellas only talks to mislead conclusions as to the object of sending these forces to their present destination, as the Mexican troops at present along the Rio Grande are not properly fed, and have to be guarded to prevent their desertion. People here and the military think some consequences will ensue when the larger force arrives, and anticipate great trouble. The few hundred Mexican soldiers at Saragossa, Newton, and other places, are furnished beef half from Texas, and it is also thought this greatly-increased force will depend upon the same source for its meat."

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

Why It Should Not be Trusted—Its Manifold Crimes Succinctly Stated.

William B. Moran, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee of Michigan, recently addressed a note to Hon. William L. Webber, of East Saginaw, requesting his views on the political situation. The latter responded in an able letter of great length, from which we make the following extract:

I do not believe our country can ever prosper except when the Government shall be administered in accordance with Democratic principles. No party discarding those principles can long prosper. The seeming exception of the success of the Republican party for eighteen years grows out of the peculiar circumstances of the situation; but the incapacity of that party to correctly administer the Government in times of peace is most clearly demonstrated by the present condition of affairs.

With such a platform, and with such a glorious record as the Democracy has made for itself in administering the affairs of the nation in times past, it is not surprising that Democrats cling to it as the sheet anchor of the nation's safety. No Democrat can forsake it; it cannot be killed, because truth is immortal and Democracy is founded upon the rock of truth.

The Republican party was founded upon a sentiment, not a principle. It was formed as a sectional party and has ever existed as such. It can never become a national party, because its objects and its aims are not in accordance with the principles upon which the Government was founded. They are revolutionary in their tendency.

There are bad men in all parties, but the mass of all parties are equally honest and equally desirous that such policies should succeed as will best promote the good of all. A party is not to be held responsible for the acts of a bad man simply because he has allied himself with the party. A thief is no less a thief whether he calls himself a Republican, a Democrat, or a National. He is an enemy to society.

It is only when a party screens the wrongdoer, by reason of his partisan associations, or when it continues him in power, or rewards him after his iniquity is known.

If this is done, then the party is to be held responsible.

Mistakes may be made by men of all parties, but as soon as a mistake is discovered it should be admitted as a mistake and be discarded by the party. If the party approve it and persist in it, then the party becomes responsible. These propositions are believed to be sound, and tried by this test the Republican party must be held responsible for a series of crimes against our form of government, and against the people, which can only be expiated by its total extinction.

We are making history, and for the sake not only of ourselves, but of those who may come after us, the people should crush the Republican party, that its practices may not become precedents.

With the extinction of slavery the original mission of the Republican party was ended.

It was organized to tear down; it has no skill to build up. But it was in power in the nation, and in most of the States, and it asked only how that power could be best retained.

It never learned that the strength of a nation consists in the affection of its parts.

Love of country as a cement to bind many into one was foreign to its thoughts. Force was the only means considered.

It sought to make secession a success by declaring the Union already broken and that the rebellion of citizens had produced that effect.

Defeated in this by the Supreme Court, under the pretense of protecting the negro in his rights but really to keep itself in power, it gave him the ballot, and then in defiance of law these colored citizens (equal in the eye of the law with the wisest and best) were taken under guardianship without their consent, and it assumed that they would unitedly give it their votes. When these newly-enfranchised citizens sought to vote as they pleased, by force and against the law, elections were declared void and the officers elected were refused permission to take their offices, and this in direct violation of the constitution.

It assumed in Congress to pass laws on subjects not within the power of Congress, and thus sought to effect a revolution in government.

This party arrogated to itself a power above the constitution. Under the tyrant's plea of "necessity," a higher law was proclaimed, and this party constituted itself the exponent of that law. All who opposed the doctrine of the higher law were vilified and persecuted. To refuse obedience to the fiat of the party, no matter what had been the service or sufferings in the cause of the Union, was to incur the severest punishment the party could bestow, and this without regard to any law known to the courts. So long as the fiat of the party was obeyed, no matter how much the law was violated, the offender was screened. Witness, for example, the fiendish attempt to impeach President Johnson for striving to enforce the provisions of the constitution, and the shameful spectacle of the President of the United States volunteering his evidence, and thereby his influence, to save Babcock from merited punishment. Witness the contribution from the present Chairman of the Michigan Republican Committee of a thousand dollars to aid Babcock to escape.

To enumerate the crimes of the Republican party against the people would require a volume. This volume will be written, but that is the work of the historian. I can give but few items.

At the expense, not only of every principle of civil liberty, but of vast sums of money drawn from the taxpayers, it kept the Union in turmoil for more than ten years after the war closed.

It has declared in substance and effect that the war for the Union had destroyed the union of the States, and that power was centralized in the General Government, by the war in defiance of the constitution, which declares that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively," or to the people.

Regardless of the heavy burdens necessarily imposed in defense of the Union, it has wantonly increased those burdens by creating new and unnecessary offices as rewards for partisan favorites, and to perpetuate its power given them high salaries, and has also greatly increased the salaries formerly fixed by law, doubling the pay of the President, voting back pay to its Congressmen, and defrauding the soldiers by its post-traderships and the people by fraudulent contracts in the navy and other departments.

It has also to answer for the crime of forcing the freed negro to be a prey to unscrupulous and selfish miscreants who only sought to use him as a means of power and emolument. The next census will tell a fearful tale in this regard.

By its action and the action of its party leaders it has corrupted the moral sense of the people, and the fearful catalogue of defalcations and breaches of trust which the country has witnessed are but the legitimate outgrowth of its example.

It has discriminated between the Government and the people, assuming their interests to be unlike, and striving to build up a strong government to keep the people in subjection.

By force and fraud it defeated the will of the people, at the last Presidential election, and thereby greatly endangered the peace of the country, which was preserved only by the forbearance and patriotism of the Democracy, who preferred to suffer even this great wrong, for this once only, rather than plunge the country into bloodshed for the enforcement of their rights.

On all financial matters it has favored the rich even at the expense of the Government, and relying on the strength of the army has bidden defiance to the struggling poor.

It passed the Public Credit act, pledging the faith of the nation to pay more than the contract called for, and agreeing that the Government should not avail itself of privileges given by the contract.

It has provided one currency for the bondholder and another for the people.

It has built up a non-taxpayers' class by its exemption of bonds from taxation.

It increased the expenses of the Government from $2 for each person in 1860 to $9.78 for each person in 1868, as shown in President Johnson's last annual message, an increase of 388 per cent., while in the same time the population increased only 23 per cent and the assessed valuation of the country increased less than 20 per cent.

It has vested the administration with such a discretion and control over the finances as to enable it at its will to expand or contract the circulation, a power valuable only to enable its favorites to acquire fortunes on Wall street, but which the good of all demands should never be left in discretion but controlled by law.

It has made civil-service reform a by-word and a reproach. When Mr. Jewell refused to permit the assessment of his clerks for partisan purposes his resignation was demanded. When Bristow in good faith sought to enforce the law against the whisky ring, he was obliged to leave the Cabinet. The whisky ring had bled for the party, and its power would be broken should the "sinews of war" fail.

It has made the military superior to the civil power.

Its constant action has been revolutionary, tending to a permanent change in the form of government.

The Administration Adopts a New Policy at the South.

A special dispatch from Washington to leading Republican journals of the country communicates some very interesting information in the following words:

Attorney General Devens to-day telegraphed the following instructions to the United States District Attorney for North Carolina:

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5, 1878.

In cases of interference by Democrats with Republican meetings, called for the purpose of taking initiatory steps toward the election of members of Congress, I call your attention to chapter 7, and especially section 5,520, Revised Statutes. You will be expected to give your personal attention to all cases arising under the above section. Meetings called for the purpose of advocating and supporting the election of candidates for Congress should be undisturbed, and each party must have freedom to suppor the candidates of its choice. You will show this letter to the Marshal of the district, who, is to be hoped, will render you all assistance by appointing discreet and proper deputies to execute the provision of the statute.

CHARLES DEVENS, Attorney General.

SEC. 5,520. If two or more persons in any State or Territory conspire to prevent by force, intimidation, or threat, any citizen who is lawfully entitled to vote from giving his support or advocacy, in legal manner, toward or in favor of the election of any lawfully qualified person as an elector for President or Vice President, or as a member of the Congress of the United States; or to injure any citizen in person or property on account of such support or advocacy; each of such persons shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment, with or without hard labor, not less than six months nor more than six years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The partisan character of the Attorney General's order is the first thing that will strike the reader. "In cases of interference by Democrats with Republican meetings," he says; but nothing is said about the interference by Republicans with Democratic meetings.

This order is the first clear indication of the reversal of the administration policy toward the South. Leniency and liberality have created no Republicans. Having tried tufts of grass to no purpose, the administration has now determined to see what virtue there is in stones.

The Longest River in the World.

Recent investigations have so well settled this matter that the proper correction should be made in the geographies. In reply to a question as to the "longest river," a writer in the New England Journal of Education says:

"There can be no doubt that this title belongs to the Missouri river, reckoning (as we should do), from its source in the Madison, the Red Rock and the Gallatin lakes to the Gulf of Mexico; the Mississippi being properly a branch of the Missouri, and not the Missouri a branch of the Mississippi, though the accident of the earlier discovery and exploration of the latter stream gave rise to the error, which our geographies still perpetuate, of calling the longer and the greater stream a branch of the shorter and smaller one.

"Above their junction the Mississippi drains 169,000 square miles, and has a length of but 1,330 miles, and, at their junction, it has a mean discharge per second of 105,000 cubic feet of water; while above the same point the Missouri drains 518,000 square miles, has a length of 3,047 miles from Madison lake (and I think something more, going up the Jefferson fork to the Red Rock lake), and at the junction has a mean discharge of 120,000 cubic feet per second; its discharge, though one-seventh greater than that of the Mississippi, being smaller proportionately, because its upper waters drain a region where the rain-fall, one year with another, averages but little, if any, more than one-half that of the Upper Mississippi. Above their junction one may go, on the Missouri, in a good-sized steamboat, to Fort Benton, Mon., a distance of 2,682 miles, or more than twice the entire length of the Mississippi from Itasca lake to its junction with the Missouri.

"This makes the Missouri river (as the name should really be all the way to the Gulf of Mexico) 4,347 miles long —1,361 miles longer than the Mississippi (now so-called) and 597 miles longer than the Amazon."

Population of Chicago.

The school census of the city of Chicago for the year 1878 shows the population of the city to be 436,731. Of this number 432,343 inhabitants are white, and 4,388 are colored; 201,709 are under 21 years of age, and 123,114 of school age —that is, between the ages of 6 and 21; 107,917 persons live in the South Division of the city, 87,897 in the North Division, and 236,529 in the West Division.

A PERSIAN populace is not like a European one. In Europe a monarch returning to his people after a lengthy voyage would be received by loud acclamations of joy and welcome, but when the Shah recently landed in his own dominion, on his return from his European tour, the people of the towns through which he passed merely bowed down their heads in silence.

A WOMAN in Herkimer county, Mo., recently set foot upon a snake, and her glossy black hair turned white in a few hours.

THE GREAT DANGER.

I assert that the masses in this country are in danger from the same causes which have produced pauperism in Europe. The power of wealth is as fatal to liberty, equality, and general prosperity in a republic as in a despotism. Unequal taxation, exemptions from taxation, a public debt in the hands of a few wealthy men, drawing interest and paying no taxes (not even an income tax), corporate monopoly loaning its debts as money, in partnership with the Government; all these we have already in this country, and all the other features minus royalty itself, and, perhaps, that also will be added, unless the tendencies of the last few years be arrested. We have a public debt in this country more than half as large as the debt of Great Britain, contracted within the last twenty years, drawing a much larger rate of interest. In fact our annual interest debt is about equal to the interest debt of Great Britain. Our State and municipal debts aggregate to an amount nearly, if not quite, equal to the interest-bearing debt of the nation, and the rate of interest much greater. Then our railroad indebtedness, our other corporate bonds and mortgages, and the mortgages on real estate of individuals swell the interest-bearing debts of the American people to the almost inconceivable sum of not less than $12,000,000,000. The average rate of interest on this vast debt cannot be less than 6 per cent. semi-annually which would amount to $720,000,000 It cost, to run the Government and pay the interest on the national debt in 1877, $595,289,898.91. The cost to run the State and municipal Governments, including schools, amounts to a sum quite equal to the national expenses. Here, then, we have, Total amount interest upon all debts, $720,000,000; cost of Governments, national, State, municipal and schools, not less than $1,100,000,000, and a grand total, drawn from the industries of the people, of about $1,800,000,000 annually, or about $40 per every man, woman and child in the nation. The total taxable value of the property in the United States is $12,000,000,000. Suppose the real value is $30,000,000,000 and the annual increase of property is 4 per cent., we have a total annual increase in the wealth of the people of $1,200,000,000 with which to pay an annual expense, including interest, of $1,800,000,000. In other words, the producers of wealth, as a mass, come out every year $600,000,000 behind; or, again, the working masses are growing poor in this country at the rate of $600,000,000 a year. It is quite certain that the masses have been growing poor at a much greater rate than this during the last five years. This absorption of the products of labor is constantly reducing the average accumulations of the masses, constantly and systematically increasing the wealth of the wealthy classes who loan money or rent property, constantly and systematically reducing the number of the wealthy men at one end of society, and constantly and systematically increasing the number of the poor and intensifying their poverty at the other end of society. It has been ascertained that workingmen in Massachusetts now earn on an average a little upward of $400 a year. By our system of revenue the national burden of taxation falls chiefly on those articles which producers most largely consume. The man who is most actively engaged in agriculture or manufacturing, who consumes most of raw material most heavily taxed, pays most of the national revenue. The working masses consume most by their crafts, and in their families, and therefore pay most to support the National Government. The State and municipal Governments and the public schools are supported by a most unjust and unequal system of land and personal-property tax. The farmer or manufacturer is assessed for the value of his farm or shop, though mortgaged for two-thirds of its value. Thus he pays interest on his mortgage, and taxes on what he owes —on his debts—while the holder of the mortgage generally manages to escape taxation altogether; and the holder of Government bonds is by law absolutely exempt from taxation. The burden of taxation under our system, especially for State, municipal, and school purposes, chiefly falls on the man who is the least able to bear it. Although our system differs from the English, we are accomplishing the same results by different methods. We have too many small land-owners and house-owners to exempt real estate from taxation, and so we tax the poor man's real estate and his debts, and allow the rich man with his bonds and mortgages to escape by exemption and concealment. Our revenue system must be equalized by a tax on incomes, and excluding debts from taxation. Also, the national-banking system is essentially like the Bank of England, with its branches. It is an infamous copartnership between the purse and the sword against the producing classes, and the parallel holds good between our system and the English as far as is possible in a republic. Our bank system is more infamous than the English system, because it affords no security whatever for depositors, and the Government gets less from the banks as a consideration for privileges conferred. With our system the people are taxed directly, for the benefit of the banks, about $19,000,000 annually, for which they get no consideration whatever. This system of robbing the many for the benefit of the few must be abolished, the bank notes retired, and greenbacks issued to fill the place they occupy, the bonds which belong to the bankers paid off in greenbacks, and the law which exempts bonds and greenbacks from taxation repealed. We must stop the enormous drain of interest, which, as a nation, we are paying, and a good place to begin is with the gratuity which we pay to national bankers, for which we get no consideration or equivalent whatever. We must have equal taxation, both for the support of the General Government and for State and municipal purposes, and thus stop our rapid progress on the road to the goal which every nation in Europe has reached, viz.: a rotten aristocracy on one hand, and beggary of the masses on the other. If it had not been for the wealth of soil and minerals in our public lands, and their rapid rise in value in the hands of those who have taken possession and settled upon them, this nation at this hour under the system of taxation and banking we have copied from the despotisms of Europe, by which the working masses chiefly support the Government, and the rich are permitted to loan their debts to the poor as money for high rates of interest, while affording no security to depositors—I say if it had not been for our almost illimitable public lands, under such a system as this, at this time, we should have been where the masses of England are—beggars under the heel of a few thousand bankers, land-owners, corporate monopolists, and money sharks.

ABSOLUTE MONEY.

We want absolute money, not redeemable in anything, not valuable in itself. Now, that strikes men who have not reflected upon this matter with some oddity. Why don't you want it valuable in itself? For two reasons: Who issues it? The Government. It cannot give it away. It must receive some value for it. Now, if I have a silver dollar in my hand, the Government bought that silver and gave its bond for it, at 4½ per cent. interest. Now, if I lose that dollar I have lost it and so has the Government, too. We both have lost it, have we not? The Government cannot get it again to redeem the bond. Suppose that is a greenback dollar, that did not cost the Government anything, except the printing of it (one fourth of a cent or so), I lose it, and the Government gains it.

If it is a silver dollar both of us lose it; if it is a greenback dollar, I lose it, and the Government gains it. Let me illustrate this, because I want to make it plain to your minds. Four years ago we had the old fractional currency 50-cent pieces and quarters. There never was such convenient currency in the world. Everybody was satisfied with it. No petition went up to the Government to have it changed. One could carry a quantity in his pocket without wearing the pocket out. It was a profitable thing to the Government, because it issued it and agreed to redeem it. When I lost a half a dollar of it the Government gained it. And when it came to be called in, out of the $50,000,000 issued, $12,000,000 could not be found, it having circulated some twelve or fourteen years. Twelve millions gained; more than twenty times the cost of printing. The Government has got it. It was part of the non-interest-bearing debt of the United States; it did not cost the people anything. We had no interest to pay. Not only that, the loss of it was paying a considerable amount of interest. We sent over in Kentucky and got a lawyer for Secretary of the Treasury. Of course, being a lawyer of Kentucky, he knew everything. What did he do? Acting under the call of the men who desired to force specie payments upon us, he borrowed $50,000,000 of silver to coin into halves and quarters, to take the place of fractional currency, and he borrowed it for thirty years at 5 per cent. interest. The fractional currency was drawn in, and the silver put out.

Now, what gave the fractional currency its value? The stamp of the United States. "That is 50 cents." What gave the silver its value? The stamp of the United States. He was afraid the silver would be exported if he gave it full value. Therefore he cut it down almost 12 per cent.—14, I think. So that after all, when you have got half a dollar in your pocket, you have not got the full weight and value. You depend upon the stamp. If you depend upon the stamp of the Government for that much, in the name of heaven why can you not depend upon it for 50 cents? Nobody, I say, was troubled with this fractional currency.

Now let me tell you what burdens the borrowing of that $50,000,000 has put upon your backs and mine. Fifty million dollars, at 5 per cent. semi-annually compounded, as we have to pay it, in thirty years will amount to $200,000,000, and at the end of thirty years this silver coin will be worn out and lost. For the mere use of this hard money, subsidiary coin, wearing out our pockets for this generation, for the purpose of change, we have got to pay $200,000,000—over $5 a piece for every man, woman and child in the United States. That is what they call financiering down in Washington. Now, I don't think that the Secretary of the Treasury ever stopped to go into that calculation, as I have. I don't think he knew any better, but if he did, and put that burden on this generation, there is no punishment too severe for him.

I don't want the Government to put the greenback upon anything of intrinsic value. I want them to say, "That is money." Put it upon the cheapest and most convenient thing they can find, and there is nothing cheaper or more convenient than paper. Therefore, I am for fiat money, absolute.

Now, my friends, I have heard a great deal of wit expended upon the expression "fiat money." The word "fiat" don't seem to please our newspaper friends. Some of them don't understand what it is. It is Latin.

What is the meaning of the term "fiat?" It is simply the order of the creator of a thing that that thing shall be. When was it first used? When the earth was without form and void, and darkness covered the earth and the waters of the sea, God said, "Fiat lux!" "Let there be light;" and the morning stars sang together in joy, and all the earth put forth in beauty and fruitfulness. Let the Government say, "Let there be money among the people," and prosperity and joy shall come to us all. And if the morning stars do not sing together in joy the daughters of the people will make fine music from ocean to ocean. The word means "decree." Let the Government decree it.

Oh, these men indulge in calling hard names! They try to frighten us from preventing our property being eaten up by mortgages and swallowed up by taxes and run away with by swindlers. We are called "socialists," "communists" and "lunatics." Our money is called the "rag baby," and every other name. "Fiatist" is the latest expression. Never you mind that, fellow-citizens. If hard names ever hurt anybody I would have been dead long ago. We want another change in our money. We want it non-exportable—an American money, for a free, enlightened and highly business people. We don't want it like our yard-stick; we don't want it lengthened in France to thirty-nine inches when they want to buy, and shrunk to thirty-six when they sell to us. We want it to be ours, so that it may not be called for by anybody else. Therefore, we do not want it of any value as a commodity. That has been the trouble with our money from the beginning of the Government. We had it based on gold and silver. We had bank paper, always based on gold and silver.

Now, I state this boldly, without fear of contradiction: Heretofore, until this war of ours, the money kings of Europe controlled the price of wheat in Indiana, making it low when they wanted to buy it, and making prices high when they wanted to sell their iron, their cloth, their leather and their manufactures to you. I will tell you how they did it. I showed you some time ago that, by taking away a portion of the gold, they could make contraction. Perhaps I had better give you the whole illustration:

Suppose the family of the Rothschilds, the Jew bankers of Frankfort (who are able to do it to the amount of $200,000,000, undoubtedly; who could easily do it to the amount of $50,000,000), should call for $50,000,000 of gold, our currency being based on gold. If that basis was four to one, this would call for a contraction of $200,000,000. (Fifty millions would be enough, because it is the balance only that settles these things.) That contraction brings down prices; everything goes down. Therefore they buy everything they want to, cheap. They have made the contraction, they brought down the price of wheat and corn, and bought everything they desired to buy, cheap. Very well. They are now about to pay for what they buy, by sending us, not gold, but by sending over their manufactures here in competition with your manufactures. They send over $50,000,000 of gold; that causes an expansion of circulation, four to one, and prices rise. When they rise, they send over their clothes, their knick-nacks, their laces—everything that we want to buy, and sell them at those high prices. And so they have gone backward and forward for the last fifty years, and we have been the slaves of the money kings of Europe, until the war took place. Then we had a currency of our own; and when there was a war between France and Germany, and they wanted $40,000,000 of our gold, we sent it over to them, and no man ever missed it, so far as its effect upon business was concerned.

It is said that it won't do to have fiat money, absolute money, issued by Congress, because Congress may make mistakes about issuing it, and may issue too much, or may issue too little. Congress will undoubtedly endeavor to do as well as they can for the interest of the people, if the people will watch them and see how they attend to the business of the people, instead of looking after the resolutions of '98, if they are Democrats, or the abolition of slavery, if Republicans. But, whether Congress will do right or wrong, I would rather trust the Congress of the people of the United States to settle the value of property of the people of the United States by the issuing of money than to trust the Jew bankers of Europe to do it. If you have gold, they will do it; if you have the greenback, issued by Congress, Congress will do it, under your sanction; and if you will wake up and stand together, good men and true, on this subject, there will be no trouble.

Now, then, you say, "Very well, Gen. Butler, that is a very nice scheme of yours about money, but how are you going to get it out?"

I think I can tell you. Let us see if we can't get it out. I know the papers say that our plan is to start a printing-press to work and send the money all around among the people. No such thing. No honest man ever gets any money that he don't earn. The men who managed the Credit Mobilier and the various stock-jobbing schemes, and who water railroad stock, got money they don't earn. But I never expect to get any money out among the people in that way. It is to be earned by the business man through his industry, intelligence and capacity for business, and by the farmer by hard sweat and toil in the field, by the workingman through his labor, either at the loom, in the workshop, at the bench, or in the field. That is the only way the people are going to get it. It is hard enough, I grant.

We are spending every year about $250,000,000 for the necessary expenses of the Government. How do we get that to spend? By taxing the people—selling their property to pay the taxes. Suppose that we stop a year or two on taxing the people, and issue this money to pay our debts and expenses; wouldn't it get out money among the people? I want you to think about this a little. This is an idea that hasn't got into the newspapers yet. Now I can suggest exactly how I think they can get it out: Let them keep their tax on whisky, because the less whisky a man drinks the better. That doesn't trouble me. I should have no objection to taking the tax from friction matches, because I know of no small tax that bears so hard upon the people as that. England tried to raise $500,000 on friction matches. She couldn't carry it; while we raise between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000. I think we could stop taxing tobacco, for I am content that the laboring man shall have his pipe when he goes home, without paying a great deal more than I do for any luxury of mine.

There is no luxury that the rich man has—champagne wine, silks, brandy, laces for the ladies, kid gloves—there is no luxury on earth that pays so high a tax as does tobacco, principally consumed by the poor man, and the poorer the quality the higher the tax. But suppose we do not rearrange the tariff. Let them collect the taxes and pay off the debt with the greenback; and then I think the greenback will get out among the people.

Now, let us have it in another way: We have $320,000,000 of national-bank circulation. Suppose every time a national-bank bill goes into the treasury they hand out a greenback instead, and let that get out among the people, and we shall have some money, not that which we borrow from the national banks and pay them about 18 per cent. interest for, when we come to reckon it all around. Let those bonds be bought up in that way.

Now, another way: Every year we appropriate from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 for various forms of public improvement, all of which is paid for by taxation; and that doesn't finish any one thing; just a little is done in one year. The officers watch what they have done that year until the next year, and get a little more money; build a little more that year and watch what they have done until next year, and get a little more money; and they watch it year in and year out. Why, the New Orleans Custom House was begun in 1853; it is not finished yet. The Capitol was begun before that; it never will be finished. So with all these public buildings. Let us step up like men, and see what improvements we want, have them constructed on an economical scale, more so than they are done now; and I don't think I would take for my model your State House here, either. Find out how much we want to build within the next ten years, and do it in one year. Employ the idle laborer, start business, and get rid of the horde of officers that have to stand by and watch the building. I don't think there will be any difficulty.

Whenever you get a man at the head of the administration of financial affairs who is not under the thumb of the bankers, he will find a way to do the will of the people and put out the money of the Government in a manner which will be for the advantage of the Government and the best interests of the people. "Where there is a will there is a way," always. The trouble is, there has been no will except to make offices and salaried places for cousins, aunts and nieces, brothers and sons. In this time of distress let us employ every man who wants work. We have got enough to do. We can do it by employing men enough in one year as well as by employing a few men for ten years. Put out a couple of hundred millions in that way at once, in payment for good, honest, faithful, hard work. Give every man something to do who will do it, and any man who won't do it, put him where he will have to work for a living. The difficulty is that we can not distinguish now between the man who wants work and the man who don't want work. We know there are hundreds who cannot get work, and we know there are dozens who don't want work. Let us give every man a chance to work and then we will know which is which, and we will take care of the last "which." That is something like the business of government, and I think any administration could be better employed in doing that than in making speeches at agricultural fairs or singing psalms, however holy. There will be no difficulty about getting this money out, whenever it is wanted to be got out. The reason why you can't put any money out now is that no money can reach the people until the banker has taken his toll out of it. Is not that so?

I am speaking here to business men, to men of experience. You cannot carry on your business because you are eaten up with interest and usury. You know it. Every business man knows it. You have been able to pay your 10 per cent. or 12 per cent, because you have been skimming your land of the cream and selling your crops; but you have grown no richer, and your mortgages have eaten it up. There is no business under heaven that will allow 10 per cent. interest. It cannot be done. Whenever a man loans money at 10 per cent. he knows, as a rule, that he has got to eat up the man he loans it to. The man that borrows it don't know it. That is the difference between them. In 1866 and 1867 we got rid of interest to a great degree, because money was plenty. When money became contracted we had to borrow and give usury. That is what is eating into the vitals of the people this day and this hour. Why, my friends, God himself, from Mount Sinai, amid the thunders and lightning of that awful day, sent down the law of Moses for His chosen people, "Take thou no interest or usance from thy brother, but fear God."

A Strange History of "Saviors."

A new book gives the history, so far as it is known, of sixteen "Saviors" who flourished from three to seventeen centuries before the Christian era, and all of whom, it is said, were crucified. They were Chrishna, Hindoo, date unknown; Sakia, Hindoo, B. C. 600; Thammuz, B. C. 800; Wittoba, of Telingonese, B. C. 552; Iao, of Nepaul, B. C. 622; Hesus, of Celtic Druids, B. DR. PETERMANN'S SUICIDE.

Why the Eminent German Geographer Took His Own Life.

(Berlin Cor. New York Herald.)

The sad circumstances surrounding the death of him who is widely admitted to have been the foremost geographer of his age, Dr. August Heinrich Petermann, come tardily to light. His sudden death, announced to have occurred on the 27th ult., was stated to have been the result of an apoplectic stroke, but it was not suspected that a tragedy lurked behind the announcement that startled the quiet town of Gotha.

Dr. Petermann had for some time suffered from repeated attacks of bronchitis. He coughed almost continuously, and complained of constant pain. His nervous irritation increased, and, added to the physical suffering, was a mental excitement of a domestic nature which rendered him almost frantic at times. He complained of a headache so acute that the least touch upon the forehead produced violent pain. He was but 56 years old, and it was hoped that his strong constitution would pull him through. On the morning of the 25th ult., after a restless night, Dr. Petermann, who had been tenderly watched over by his wife and daughters, exhibited an agitation which they alarmingly noted, but never for a moment attributed to its true cause. He begged them to retire from the room.

Here it may be proper to observe that the lady who, with his two grown-up daughters had watched by his bedside was his second wife, whom he married four months ago. He had lived unhappily with his first wife, an English lady. A divorce was decreed between the ill-mated pair in 1877, and since then it is stated that the first wife has bent her endeavors to destroying his peace of life. After his second marriage everything appeared to be going prosperously with him, when his first wife, it is alleged, by anonymous threats, recommenced her persecutions, and worried the great scholar to distraction. In his own family, too, he had troubles enough and to spare. His father and his brother had died by their own hands, and their fate apparently haunted him. With this knowledge of his life, it may be guessed upon what a load of mental and bodily torture his wife and daughters closed the door as they went forth at his urgent request.

They did not remain absent long—scarcely fifteen minutes—but on their return they met a sight which petrified them with terror. The husband and father was hanging limp and lifeless from the window. Assistance was hastily summoned; the body was cut down; restoratives were tried, but in vain. He was dead, and crumpled in one of his hands with the clutch of death was a paper. It was a letter addressed to his youngest daughter, and contained his will. It bore the date of Sept. 6, showing that he had harbored the fatal intention for nineteen days.

An easily-understood motive led to a strong effort on the part of the family and friends to keep the cause of the death secret, but enough leaked out to lead to the unveiling of the entire distressing tragedy. Thus it was that Dr. Petermann, in the ripeness of his scholarship, at the age of 56, fell, owing to reaction from excessive work and conjugal torments he was unable to withstand, an easy prey to the hereditary self-destroying mania; the man whose vast mind had grasped and solved the most difficult geographical questions in both hemispheres succumbed to private infelicities that the world took no account of.

Massachusetts and South Carolina.

Gov. Hampton, of South Carolina, in a letter to Gov. Rice, of Massachusetts, regarding the refusal of the latter to surrender Hiram H. Kempton for trial in South Carolina, says: "I regret that the Chief Executive of the great State of Massachusetts should have committed so flagrant a violation of the supreme laws of the land—a violation irreparable in its nature, as the State suffering thereby has no possible redress. Had you confined yourself to giving a simple refusal to surrender the fugitive I should make no further comments upon your letter, as the disregard by the executive authority of one State of the rights of another State concerns the whole people of the United States; but, inasmuch as you have seen fit to base your action on the ground that, in your judgment, the object in procuring the indictment against Patterson, Parker and Kempton does not appear to be for the purpose of trying Kempton for the crime charged against him, but for a different purpose, it is my duty, as Governor of South Carolina, to add that your statement is entirely unwarranted, and to repel the unworthy imputation, as I do, with indignant scorn."

Remarks by a Colored Brother in Georgia.

"Breddren, my 'sperience is dat it ain't de perfession of 'ligion, but de 'casional practice' of it dat makes a man 'ceptable up yonder. When yer gits to de golden gate an' Peter looks yer right in de eye and yer shows him yer long creed an' says, pompous like, dat yer 'longed ter de big 'Piscopalian church, de 'Postle 'll shake his head an' say, 'Dat ain't nuff ter get yer through.' But if yer takes all yer bills under yer arm, yer grocer bills an' yer rent bills, an' he looks 'em over an' finds 'em all receipted, he'll say, 'Yer title's clear,' an' unlock de gate an' let yer pitch yer voice for de angels' song. But 'tain't no use ter trabble along dat narrer path 'less yer can kerry, folded up in yer creed, a good rec'mendation from yer creditors. Hebben ain't no place fur a man who has to dodge roun' a corner fur fear ob meetin' some one who'll ask fur dat little bill dat nebber was paid."

SOMEBODY has taken pains to hunt up the average length of artists' lives, to prove that they live longer than do other folks. Of 1,112, there died under 60 years old, 474; 60 years and under 70, 250; 70 years and under 80, 243; 80 years and under 90, 134; 90 and under 100, 19; above 100, 1; the mean age at death of the whole number being 55 years.

A year of pleasure passes like a fleeting breeze, but a moment of sorrow seems an age of pain.

The affection of parents is best shown to their children by teaching them what is good and true.

Courage, the commonest of the virtues, obtains more applause than discretion, the rarest of them.

Censure is most effectual when mixed with praise; so when a fault is discovered, it is well to look upon a virtue to go in company with it.

Never retire at night without being wiser than when you rose in the morning, by having learned something useful during the day.

The man who violently hates or ardently loves, cannot afford being in some degree or sense a slave to the person he detests or adores.

The habit of resolving without acting is worse than not resolving at all, inasmuch as it gradually sunders the natural connection between thought and deed.

Many persons are purified and exalted by sickness, as if the hand of disease had been stretched out over them only to make the sign of the cross on their souls.

A diseased mind turns every chance accident to its own distempered view, and makes the terror, or the sorrow, which exists but in its own imagination a very reality of evil.

Mr. Harrison only engaged in farming last spring, and having no experience himself was obliged to hire a man to superintend the work. The other day he read in his paper that "dressed chickens" brought the highest prices in the city markets, and he showed the paragraph to his wife with the remark that "blamed if he was going to the expense of buying dresses for his chickens if he never sold them." Mrs. Harrison was a city-bred girl, and knew no more about farming than the late Horace Greely, but she suggested that perhaps she had some old dresses which she could cut up and convert into polonaises and overskirts for their chickens if there was much advantage in having them "dressed" before sending them to market.—Norristown Herald.

Envy.

The moment a man achieves brilliant success there's always somebody at hand to tell how poor, how obscure, how no "account" he used to be, and to express wonder and astonishment that he should ever have "amounted to anything." The fact that he has amounted to something, that he has proved himself a success, seems to make some of his acquaintances feel that they have been robbed in a manner, and by so much as he has risen above them in position or influence, by so much are they dwarfed. Men who have grasped blindly to find a fitting place for the exercise of their talents find it, and when it comes naturally appreciation, money influence, prosperity. Can their good fortune cause anything but rejoicing in a magnanimous and noble mind? There are very few men of note before the American public who have not fought their way up poverty, obscurity, disaster and countless opposition of adverse circumstances. In fact almost everybody "that is anybody" has worked for his crown, and when he gets it shouldn't everybody rejoice with him? Doubtless there's many and many a rough diamond that is never polished and set, but lies buried in mountain gulches covered with mud; many a "mute inglorious Milton" sleeps in quiet country churchyards; but the world is flashing with light from diamonds that are set, singing with melody from Miltons that are not mute. One thing is certain; the man or woman who is occupied in picking to pieces the crown lawfully won by a successful neighbor is not likely ever to wear one; for time thus spent is worse than wasted and the disposition that can find pleasure in employment so ignominious and degrading, can never find those aspirations, labors and toils congenial which brings deserved reputation, honor and success.

NOTICE
TO CONSUMERS
—OF—
LORILLARD Tobacco

The great celebrity of our tin tag tobacco has caused many immitations thereof to be placed on the market, we therefore caution all chewers against purchasing such immitations.

All dealers buying or selling other plug tobacco bearing a hard or metalic label, render themselves liable to the penalty of the law, and all persons violating our trade marks are punishable by fine and imprisonment. See act of congress, Aug. 14, 1876.

Taxes paid Gov'm't in 1877 about 3, 00,000, and during past 12 years, over 20,000,000.

Abolish the Army.

Secondly—For its Costliness.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: From the adoption of the Constitution till the days of the Mexican war the United States never had a regular army in the sense in which it is now used by the Military Ring at Washington. This appears on the face of history. President Washington tried the experiment of establishing such a force in the American Legion, but he himself was the first to recognize its unsuitableness under a government of the people, and it was disbanded during his term of office. Thereafter, until 1816, the regular troops, so called, were really volunteers, of the same class as those who fought in our civil war—that is, their regiments were raised as required and disbanded when the necessity was over. From 1816 to 1830 only a few regiments of infantry and batteries of artillery were kept in service, and they were obliged to earn their wages like other Americans. The Florida war and the extension of the fur trade on the plains gave us only two cavalry regiments (the old First and Second Dragoons), and it was not until the Mexican war that the present exclusive, useless, and expensive regular army began to accumulate power and to influence legislation in its own favor. All our present general officers and heads of staff departments entered the service during the Mexican war, or immediately after. It was during the Mexican war that the jealousy between volunteers and regulars commenced, and that the regulars first exhibited their hatred of their fellow soldiers, simply because the volunteers did not depend on Government pap for a livelihood in times of peace. It was in the Mexican war that the West Pointers first started the opprobrious name of "mustang officers" for all those who entered the army from civil life; and the jealousy then roused has only increased ever since. In Mexico, also, the system which prolonged our civil war to such a period was first inaugurated, that of giving the volunteers all the work, while the regulars got the prizes and glory. What the regular army is now it has become under the rule of Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan, all men formed in that epoch.

These men have started the cry, familiar in Administration journals, that volunteers are "costly and extravagant" in comparison with regulars. They point to the debt of the Union for the civil war as $3,000,000,000, and insist that had half of that money been spent in preserving a regular army in proper state we should have been saved the rebellion.

Let us examine this question of relative cost, and see where we come out.

From 1851 to 1861 the United States Government expended nearly $200,000,000 on the regular army, yet it did not prevent the rebellion, while about half of the West Pointers in its ranks joined the enemy, many of them leaving the service almost under fire, while every man drew the last available cent of his pay. Did this $200,000,000 justify itself by service, when, as noted in a former letter, not one regular officer or soldier died in defence of his post, until the green volunteers were called from plough and counting room to shame the "professional soldier" into some show of manhood. Let us suppose that we never had a regular army, but depended on volunteers from 1816 to 1861, raising them as required. We might still have had a rebellion, but the country would have been about a thousand millions richer, and Jefferson Davis and Robert E. Lee would not have been able to make the trouble they did by means of the knowledge acquired at the national expense at the Military Academy of West Point.

What is the use of maintaining as we do to-day, at an expense of $30,000,000 per annum, a regular army which is no protection to us in war, which never yet saved the United States from any danger, and which has to be replaced by volunteers whenever fighting is necessary? The Military Ring at Washington answer by referring to the chain of forts in the Military Division of the Missouri and to the police duties performed by the soldiers. If they do render such services, let us, as the Canadians do, call them by their right name—police.

Let us abolish the regular army entirely, and strip it of its coat of tinsel and sham. It never was and never has been an army of soldiers, and never will be under its present system. The only soldiers the United States has ever had have been volunteers. The regulars have always been policemen, and nothing else. Let us call them by their right name, as they do in Canada, and save $25,000,000 out of $30,000,000 a year.

We should then avoid leaning on a rotten reed, as we did in 1861. The whole history of the United States regulars show them to be policemen, and nothing else, ever since the period of the Mexican war. The volunteers, who were the real soldiers, refused to turn policemen in 1865, to spy on the southern population; but the the regulars rejoiced in their work, and waxed fat and insolent in garrisoning Southern States. Now, it is time this police force were reduced to proper dimensions, as in Canada. The whole of the Indian tribes in Canada, from the forty-ninth parallel to Alaska, are controlled by 240 mounted police, with a superintendent, a deputy, and four Captains. The army of Canada—its real army—numbers 80,000 men, more than our regular army, and is called militia. The militia may be raw and unpracticed, but it has never failed to fight when attacked, and would develop into an army as good as our volunteers in one campaign. It costs $300,000 a year, the mounted police $200,000, making half a million dollars for all of Canada each year.

We have a regular army, so called, costing thirty millions per annum. How does it compare in utility with that of Canada? First, it fails to keep the Indians in order, and shows itself worthless as police. Secondly, if war were declared between Canada and the United States to-morrow, Canada could place 30,000 men on New York soil in a week, passably disciplined, and fair shots at the target. If the United States depended on the regulars alone, that week could not possibly see more than 1,500 regulars put in line to oppose the 30,000 Canadian militia. The fighting would, as in 1861, have to fall on New York militia and volunteers.

Is it not then time for the American people to wake up and abolish this expensive body of police, going under the name of soldiers, that never has been, is not now, and never can be, a protection to the country?

This letter treats of nothing but facts easily to be tested by figures and records of our Government. It has pointed out two things—the uselessness and costliness of the present American regular army, so called. In the next we will consider what are the dangers of this army to the American government of and by the people.

A CITIZEN SOLDIER.

The Next Presidency.

[Fort Wayne Sentinel.]

Shrewd politicians have for some time been canvassing the posibility that the next president will be chosen by the house of representatives. In the event that there are three or more candidates, each of whom fails to obtain a majority of all the electors, the choice will devolve upon the house of representatives. The vote will be cast by states, each state having one vote. A majority of the delegation from each state will control the vote of that state. It is already settled that the democrats will have a numerical majority in the next house; in view of the contingencies likely to arise, it is interesting to estimate how that body will stand counting by states. The following table gives the political status of all the states in the present house, except those in italics which have been changed by the recent elections:

Democratic.	Republican.	Divided.
Alabama	Colorado	California,
Arkansas,	Illinois	Florida—2.
Connecticut,	Iowa
Delaware,	Kansas,
Georgia,	Maine,
Indiana,	Massachusetts,
Kentucky,	Michigan,
Louisiana,	Minnesota,
Maryland,	Nebraska,
Mississippi,	New Hampshire,
New Jersey,	New York,
North Carolina,	Pennsylvania,
Oregon,	Rhode Island,
Ohio,	Vermont,
South Carolina,	Wisconsin—16.
Tennessee,
Texas,
Virginia,
West Virginia—20.

It will be seen that the democrats have gained by the recent elections Indiana, Oregon and Ohio, and the republicans have gained Colorado. Of the two divided states Florida may safely be claimed by the democrats, while California is in doubt. At present the republicans have a majority of one in the New York delegation, and the democrats have a majority of one in the New Jersey delegation. Each of these state may be put in the doubtful column with the chances in favor of the democrats. The republicans cannot possibly obtain a majority unless they keep all the states they now have and gain Connecticut, California, Florida and New Jersey. This is the next thing to impossible. Therefore, if the election of the next president should go to the house, the democratic candidate will certainly be elected, while the democratic nominee for vice president will of course be chosen by the senate.

It is said that the roots of the red clover plant will reach a depth in the earth of nearly five feet; that those of Indian corn will descend 7 feet, those of onions 3 feet, those of lucerene 15 feet, and of rye, beans, and garden peas, 7 feet.

Thomas A. Hendricks.

To-day we have placed the name of this gentleman at the head of our columns as our candidate for nomination by the next democratic national convention for president. In doing so we do not only announce our own choice, but we believe he is the choice of a large majority of the people of the United States. In Indiana the democratic party is for him to a man. Mr. Hendricks is peculiarly well suited for the democratic candidate for president in 1880. His public record is without a blemish; his private character is without a stain. He lives in the bosom of the great west, the future seat of political power in this country. He is a citizen of Indiana, the most reliable democratic state in the north. His position upon public questions is sound, and the country would have confidence in his wisdom and discretion. His enemies have sought to make the impression that he was non-committal on public questions; but those who have watched his course have seen that he has only been cautious in taking his positions and consistent in maintaining them. He does not embrace an idea to-day to reject it to-morrow. If the position which Mr. Hendricks announced on the financial question had been pursued by the government, thousands of victims of the unwise policy of Mr. Sherman would have been spared. Asserting that the time honored principle of our fathers was correct, that gold and silver were the true measures of value, Mr. Hendricks could see that forced resumption must strike hard at the labor and industry of the country, and he was opposed to it. While he desired to reach specie resumption in time as being the normal condition of all prosperous and enlightened nations, still he wanted to reach it in a way that should not destroy the debtor classes and improve labor. Instead of having it come as the storm or hurricane, leaving destruction and ruin in its train, he wanted to see it come as the gentle shower that should bring healing on its wings.

One of the best tests of capacity that can be applied to any man is whether he fills the position to which he may be called with ability and credit. No public man ever passed this ordeal better than Mr. Hendricks. In all positions he has ever filled, including his term as senator and governor of Indiana, he has retired with the verdict on the part of the people that he had discharged his duties ably and well.

Such a man we present to the country as our candidate for president in 1880.

THE SUN FOR 1879.

THE SUN will be printed every day during the year to come. Its purpose and method will be the same as in the past: To present all the news in a readable shape, and to tell the truth though the heavens fall.

THE SUN has been, is, and will continue to be independent of everybody and everything save the truth and its own convictions of duty. That is the only policy which an honest newspaper need have. That is the policy which has won for this newspaper the confidence and friendship of a wider constituency than was ever enjoyed by any other American Journal.

THE SUN is the newspaper for the people. It is not for the rich man against the poor man; but it seeks to do equal justice to all interests in the community. It is not the organ of any person, class, sect or party. There need be no mystery about its loves and hates. It is for the honest man against the rogue every time. It is for the honest democrat as against the dishonest republican, and for the honest republican as against the dishonest democrat. It does not take its cue from the utterance of any politician or political organization. It gives its support unreservedly when men or measures are in agreement with the Constitution and with the principles upon which this Republic was founded for the people. Whenever the Constitution and constitutional principles are violated—as in the outrageous conspiracy of 1876, by which a man not elected was placed in the President's office, where he still remains—it speaks out for right. That is THE SUN'S idea of independence. In this respect there will be no change in its programme for 1879.

THE SUN has fairly earned the hearty hatred of rascals, frauds and humbugs of all sorts and sizes. It hopes to deserve that hatred not less in the year 1879, than in 1878, 1877 or any other year gone by. THE SUN will continue to shine on the wicked with unmitigated brightness.

While lessons of the past should be constantly kept before the people, THE SUN does not propose to make itself in 1879 a magazine of ancient history. It is printed for the men and women of to-day, whose concern is chiefly of to day. It has both the disposition and the ability to afford its readers the promptest, fullest and most accurate intelligence of whatever in the wide world is worth attention. To this end the resources belonging to well-established prosperity will be liberally employed.

The present disjointed condition of parties in this country, and the uncertainty of the future, lend an extraordinary significance to the events of the coming year. The discussions of press, the debates and acts of Congress, and the movements of the leaders in every section of the Republic will have a direct bearing on the Presidential election of 1880—an event which must be regarded with the most anxious interest by every patriotic American whatever his political ideas or allegiance. To these elements may be added the probability that the democrats will control both houses of Congress, the increasing feebleness of the fraudulent administration, and the spread and strengthening everywhere of a healthy abhorrance of fraud in any form. To present with accuracy and clearness the exact situation in each of its varying phases and to expound according to its well known methods, the principles that should guide us through the labyrinth, will be an important part of THE SUN'S work for 1879.

We have the means of making THE SUN, as a political, a literary and a general newspaper, more interesting and more useful than ever before; and we mean to apply them freely.

Our rates of subscription remain unchanged. For the DAILY SUN, a four page sheet of twenty eight columns, the price by mail post paid, is 55c a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight page sheet of fifty-six columns, is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year post paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages fifty-six columns, is $1.00 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10.00 we will send an extra copy free. Address,

WEAVING THE WEB.

"This morn I will weave my web," she said,
As she stood by her loom in the rosy light,
Followed afar the swallow's flight.
"As soon as the day's first tasks are done, While yet I am fresh and strong," said she,
"I will hasten to weave the beautiful web
Whose pattern is known to none but me.

"I will weave it fine, I will weave it fair,
And ah! how the colors will glow!" she said;
"So fadeless and strong will I weave my web
That perhaps it will live after I am dead."
But the morning hours sped on apace;
The air grew sweet with the breath of June;
And young Love, led by the waiting loom,
Tangled the threads as he hummed a tune.

"Ah! life is so rich and full," she cried,
"And morn is short though the days are long!
This noon I will weave my beautiful web;
I will weave it carefully, fine and strong."
But the sun rode high in the cloudless sky;
The burden and heat of the day she bore;
And hither and thither she came and went,
While the loom stood still as it stood before.

"Ah! life is too busy at noon," she said;
"My web must wait till the evening,
Till the common work of the day is done,
And my heart grows calm in the silence wide!"
So, one by one, the hours passed on
Till the creeping shadows had longer grown;
Till the house was still, and the breezes slept,
And her singing birds to their nests had flown.

"And now I will weave my web," she said,
As she turned to her loom ere set of sun,
And laid her hand on the shining threads
To set them in order, one by one.
But hand was tired, and heart was weak;
"I am not as strong as I was," sighed she;
"And the pattern is blurred, and the colors rare
Are not so bright, or so fair to see!

"I must wait, I think, till another morn;
I must go to my rest with my work undone;
It is growing too dark to weave!" she cried,
As lower and lower sank the sun.
She dropped the shuttle; the loom stood still;
The weaver slept in the twilight gray.
Dear heart! Will she weave her beautiful web
In the golden light of a longer day?

WALTER BRADLEY'S SECRET.

When Asa Bradley was sentenced to the State's prison for life, for the double crime of forgery and manslaughter, many people said that a wicked man was now where he could do no more harm; but it was a dreadful misfortune to his wife and son.

Six months afterward Mrs. Bradley died, and the friends of the family asked, "What will become of poor Walter?"

But this little burst of sympathy was all "poor Walter" ever got from them; and when the boy was sent to the almshouse it was agreed that the place was good enough for the son of a convict. For five years the almshouse was Walter's only home. Then the overseers of the poor informed him that he must be "bound out," and earn his own living.

Young as he was (he was scarcely 13), Walter had a stout heart, and it needed only this sudden send-off to rouse a latent sense of independence. For the first time he realized his position clearly, and found his native pride. He declared with spirit that he would no longer be beholden to pauper help, or would render pauper service, and with this resolution he went his way to fight the battle of life alone.

He little knew the difficulties he would have to meet and conquer. After applying in vain at several places in town, he went to Rockland, a thriving factory village, and spent three days in fruitless search for work.

Weary and discouraged, he finally met a farmer who wanted some help in his haying.

"I'll work for you cheap, and hard, too," said the boy, with a brightening eye.

"That sounds well. Where do you live?"

"I came from Stony Brook."

Walter approached the wagon for inspection.

"You look willing, at any rate. What's your name?"

"Walter Bradley, sir."

"I hope you ain't no way connected with Asa Bradley, who killed Thomas Iding."

"I am—his son," faltered the boy, with averted face.

"Well, that's unlucky! I want to hire a good lively boy, not a son of—" Then came a long, embarrassing silence.

"Well, I guess on the whole I won't hire you," said the farmer, reflectively. "I know you ain't to blame for what your father did, but I guess I'll look a little further." And, starting his horse, he was soon out of sight.

Poor Walter! A sharp pain shot through him as he realized afresh how hard and unjust the man's decision was, and his own friendless condition. But at length his elastic spirit took hope again, and he walked resolutely on to the next village.

Here he was more fortunate. A placard with "Boy Wanted" was conspicuously displayed in the window of a large dry-goods store, and he applied for the situation. His open, manly face made a favorable impression on Mr. Lewis, the merchant, and he agreed to take him on trial for one week.

Walter was active and faithful, and gave perfect satisfaction. But Mr. Lewis chanced to learn that he was "the son of the forger-murderer, Asa Bradley," and, when the week was out, he coldly told Water he could look for a place elsewhere.

The boy took this dismissal grievously. Knowing as he did the reason, it touched him like a death-chill. Was he to be cursed through life for inheriting a name loaded with disgrace? The thought filled his soul with bitterness, and prepared him for the stern, almost fierce, determination which followed. This tainted name should no longer be a hindrance to him. He would discard it forever.

Walter's maternal grandfather was Gilbert Henshaw, a man whose character was above reproach, and to be called after whom would be an honor to any descendant. Henceforth he would be no more Walter Bradley, but Gilbert Henshaw. He would go where he was unknown, and the secret of his old name would be revealed to no one.

More than 300 miles he traveled on foot, begging food by the way after the little money Mr. Lewis had given him was gone, and often at night having only the damp ground for his bed. He reached the boundary line of Ohio, and at once began anew the weary search for employment.

One warm summer evening he entered a field, and found rest and refreshing sleep in a heap of new-mown hay. The sun was way above the hills before the tired, foot-sore boy awoke. Old Mr. Gardiner and his man came out with forks in hand to open the hay.

"Jimmy!" exclaimed Abel, "if here ain't a boy asleep, and I came near a-pitchin' my fork right into him!"

Walter opened his eyes and looked wild and frightened.

"What are you here for?" demanded Mr. Gardiner, gruffly.

"I—I—I was going to Ashburton to try and find work. I hadn't any place to sleep, or any money, and laid down here for the night."

"You won't get work in Ashburton. The mills have stopped," said Mr. Gardiner, in a mollified voice.

"Do you know of any one who would like to hire a boy? I'd be glad of even a small job, for I must either work or starve."

"Well," said he, kindly, "go in and get some breakfast, anyhow; and if you're a mind to you may stay here to-day, and I'll try you. What's your name?"

He was not yet sufficiently accustomed to his "new identity" to announce it without a certain self-reproach. Still there was a kind of assurance of freedom in the sound of it. Like another boy, who, from childhood and youth burdened with the disgraced name of a vicious father, grew to be one of the noblest of our Vice Presidents, he had cast off the old appellation, lined only with ignominy and unhappy memories, and chosen another, which would leave him free claim to the character and merit that was his own; though in assuming a new name without first taking legal steps to such a measure Walter, as must any boy so venturing, trod on dangerous ground, as we shall see.

He toiled faithfully all that day, and did so well that old Mr. Gardiner decided to keep him a week; and, when the week was ended, Mrs. Gardiner had found him so obliging and useful in the house that she said to her husband—

"I think we'd better keep this boy till the harvesting is over. He's very handy, and will save us a great many steps."

"Yes," responded Mr. Gardiner; and the matter was settled.

Weeks and months passed. Gilbert was happy in his new home, and the comfort and plenty around him made the long autumn like a continued holiday.

Old Mr. Gardiner and his wife grew more and more attached to him, and their kindness to him was unfailing.

One peculiarity in the boy, however, puzzled the worthy couple and piqued their curiosity. Gilbert never alluded to the past, and never would tell directly where he came from, or if his parents were dead or alive. But they were considerate enough not to press him, and preferred to think that he had some sad reason for his silence, which involved no blame of his own.

When winter came, the Gardiners were less inclined than ever to let Gilbert go. He stayed with them, attended the village school, and worked morning and evening, taking care of the cattle.

One day, Mrs. Gardiner was looking over a large mahogany box which contained valued family relics. She took out an ambrotype, and, after gazing at it long and tenderly, she said to Gilbert, who was near, with much emotion:

"This is the picture of my only brother, Thomas Iding. He came to a dreadful death. A wicked man named Asa Bradley murdered him."

Gilbert's knees shook under him. He gasped for breath and his face looked wild and white.

"The jury brought in a verdict of manslaughter," she continued, "but it was murder—deliberate murder!

"Why, Gilbert, how pale you are! What is the matter?"

"I—I don't feel very well. I guess I will go out." And, hurrying from the house, the poor boy, overwhelmed with horror and distress, went to the barn, and sat down alone.

That his best friends, his benefactors, who of all the world had in his need given him employment and a home, should prove, after all, to be the sufferers by his father's crime, was too much. How would they feel if they knew they were harboring the son of their brother's murderer?

It seemed that he must fly from the place at once—fly to the ends of the earth, hunted by a paternal ban. But calmer thoughts returned, and he succeeded in quieting the tumult of his feelings. To run away would be a suspicious and cowardly act; to confess who he was could do no possible good. There seemed to be nothing left to him but to seek to atone, as far as possible, for his father's crime by self-sacrificing devotion to those whom that crime had so terribly afflicted. He could do this, though he should never break to them the dread secret of his real name and kindred.

Winter and spring passed, and summer came again. One morning, as Gilbert was returning from the postoffice, he saw a man riding up the street whom he instantly knew to be Peter Harrington, one of the overseers of the poor in Stony Brook. Great was his consternation. If Mr. Harrington should recognize him, and reveal that he was the son of Asa Bradley, and had lived five years in the almshouse, all his present hope and happiness would be at an end.

He quickly turned his face away, and stood leaning over the railing of the mill-stream bridge, gazing intently into the water.

Mr. Harrington stopped his horse. "Boy," he said, pleasantly, "which road must I take to go to Ashburton?"

No answer. Gilbert seemed not to hear him.

Still no reply.

"Can't you speak, or don't you know?" touching Gilbert's shoulder with the handle of his whip.

Still Gilbert neither moved nor spoke.

"He either can't hear or won't hear," muttered Mr. Harrington, as he started his horse and rode on.

Gilbert stopped to call on a sick friend, and an hour later reached home. As he entered the sitting-room, the first person he saw was Peter Harrington, in conversation with Mr. and Mrs. Gardiner. With a crimson face and wildly-beating heart, he slipped out by the nearest door. As Mr. Harrington had merely glanced toward him, he hoped he had escaped recognition.

But Gilbert was mistaken. Hardly had the door closed after him when Mr. Harrington asked, in much surprise:

"Is that boy, Walter Bradley, living with you?"

"That lad's name is Gilbert Henshaw," replied Mr. Gardiner. "He has been with us over a year."

"Ha, ha, ha! You have been well duped. He is the son of Asa Bradley, who killed your brother, Thomas Iding."

"Impossible!" exclaimed Mr. and Mrs. Gardiner, simultaneously.

"It's a fact," persisted Mr. Harrington. "I knew Walter Bradley well. He was in the almshouse a long time. Over a year ago he disappeared, and most people thought he'd gone to sea. So he has passed himself off on you as Gilbert Henshaw? A pretty bold push, I call it."

As may be supposed, Mr. Harrington left the Gardiners greatly disturbed in mind. Their astonishment upon learning they had befriended a son of the dreaded convict, Asa Bradley, seemed overpowering.

"I understand now why he never alludes to his past life and will say nothing about his parents," said Mr. Gardiner, reflectively.

"And this explains why he turned so white when I showed him brother Thomas' picture, and told him he had been murdered by Asa Bradley," said Mrs. Gardiner.

"Well, wife, this boy's father took the life of your brother, and it's for you to say what we shall do with him."

Mrs. Gardiner was silent a few moments.

"Husband," she said, at last, "Gilbert has lived with us over a year, and all that time he has evidently tried his best to be a good boy. We have caught him in no wrong-doing, and have seen no signs of a bad disposition in him. He has been industrious and faithful. All we can charge against him is that he came to us under a false name. He has been an outcast onee; it would be cruel to send him adrift again. Let him stay."

"That's just my mind!" exclaimed Mr. Gardiner, fervently. "We have no children, and it may be that God has given us this boy. We will not turn him away for his father's sin."

When Gilbert came to dinner, he cast an anxious look into the faces of the old people, but no trace of any revelation was visible. They were even more gentle and tender toward him than they had ever been before.

Five years passed. Gilbert lived, happy and beloved, under the roof of the good old Mr. Gardiner and his wife. He had attended school, and received a good education in the ordinary branches. His benefactors had no cause for regret for taking the friendless youth to their home and heart.

One night Gilbert suddenly awoke, and was startled by a strange glare of light. Through his window he saw the elms and poplars outside glowing lurid red. He sprung up, and hurriedly raised the sash.

The shed was on fire and the flames had just seized the house.

Gilbert rushed down stairs, shouting the alarm, and in a moment every sleeper was awake. The family worked valiantly to put out the fire, but in vain. A fresh wind was blowing, and in half an hour the house and all the outbuildings belonging to Mr. Gardiner were in ruins. The good old man and his wife were homeless.

"It came hard to pay the interest on the mortgage," said Mr. Gardiner, in a hollow tone, "and now we haven't a place to lay our heads."

"God will provide," responded Mrs. Gardiner, trying for his sake to stifle her own sadness.

"You have me left to you," said Gilbert, tenderly. "I am strong to work, and you shall never want while I live."

A portion of the furniture had been saved. This Gilbert removed to a little unpainted house offered by a neighbor, and the old couple were made as comfortable as circumstances would permit.

A month later the following letter was received:

> FRIEND GARDINER—If the boy who called himself Gilbert Henshaw is with you, or you know anything of his whereabouts, please inform him that his great-uncle, Joshua Bradley, has lately died in St. Louis, without family, and has left no will. By law he is one of the heirs to the property. I regret your loss by fire, and believe me, truly your friend,
>
> PETER HARRINGTON.

The next day Gilbert started for Stony Brook, and was absent two weeks. Then again his happy face brightened the old people's humble home.

"I have news for you," he said, "which will give you both pain and pleasure."

"Give us the worst first, and the better last," said Mrs. Gardiner, smiling.

"I have a secret to divulge which will distress and astonish you. In all the time I have been with you, I have never told you my real name or parentage. I am not Gilbert Henshaw. I am—"

"We know who you are!" exclaimed Mr. Gardiner. "You are Walter Bradley, son of Asa Bradley."

"Mr. Harrington told us all about you five years ago," said Mrs. Gardiner.

"And you have given me a home, and love, and sympathy, knowing all this time I was the son of your brother's murderer!" said Gilbert, with moistening eyes.

"Dear boy," returned Mrs. Gardiner, fondly, "we could not drive you from us for your father's sin! You have been a constant comfort and blessing to us—the child of our old age, given us by the Lord."

"And I shall not forget your generous kindness and true love. My share in Uncle Joshua's estate is $5,000. We will build a new house on the old site with our money," said Gilbert.

"Your money, my boy," they both said.

"No, ours. What is mine belongs to you—to my second parents, who made my hapless, forsaken life happy again."

In a few months a commodious house was erected where the former home of the Gardiners had stood, and the old couple moved into it with their "son."

Gilbert gained a right to his adopted name by making application through the form of law, and he is now a prosperous farmer, a generous, noble-minded man, in whom the unfortunate and destitute always find a friend.

The aged people lived several years to enjoy their new home, and their consideration and charity for the boy in his sore need returned to them an ample reward.—Youth's Companion.

Little Classics.

One morning, on their way to the academy, and while they were yet in the city, two eminent disciples of Socrates, who were cramming for the Junior examination, as they walked along, heard the human voice uttering remarks in [illegible] at the rate of 100 words a minute. The remarks were made in pure, classical Greek. Both students paused to listen.

"Construe," said Appollodorus, with mock sternness.

"It's the old girl."

"And yonder goes the master," said Appollodorus, as a venerable-looking man, in a linen duster and a helmet-hat, fled swiftly down a side street in the direction of the Peiraic gate, hotly pursued by a cistern-pole with a red-headed woman at the end of it, while the boys of the neighborhood rent the air with shouts of "Whoa, Emma!" and "Soc et tuum!"

"The master's good wife," remarked Xenophon, who hastily thrust a translation of his master's lectures in his pocket, as he joined them, "puts me in mind of a brakeman killed in a collision."

"Something about she ought to be switched off?" asked Appollodorus.

"You make my head light," said Plato reprovingly. "Now she puts me more in mind—"

"That's right," interrupted Appollodorus, "pilot on; don't you suppose our master Socrates would like to see a cow-catcher? Now I think—"

"You're too eccentric," said Xenophon. "She'll throttle you if she hears—"

"I was going to say," said Plato, affecting not to hear, "that she puts me in mind of the boy who kicked over the bee-hive down on the Agora."

"Something about buzz, I allow?" said Appollodorus, who was a little slow. Plato shook his head.

"No," said Plato, "because she's tongue to death."

"But," Xenophon protested, "that won't materialize; it's the master that's stung to—"

"But it's mistress that's tongue, isn't it?" angrily replied Plato.

"Yes," interrupted Appollodorus, "but it isn't the master's tongue that—"

But Plato, declaring that Appollodorus had too long a name to argue with, and that such a cold-blooded, logical dissection would ruin the best conundrum that ever escaped the dictionary, asked Xenophon to let him see his pony a minute, and was soon deeply engaged in his studies, while Appollodorus remarked that there was nothing that would unearth fraud and confuse hypocrisy so quickly as a searching investigating committee.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Choate's Criminal Clients.

In his arguments for persons who had become complicated in seemingly-criminal acts of which they were, at least, not so guilty as they were accused of being, his masterly way of putting himself, by imagination, in the place of his clients, and exhibiting all the pathos that could be elicited from their embarrassments and struggles, often drenched his clients themselves in irrepressible tears. They hardly knew before what heroes and martyrs they were. They wept at the eloquent recapitulation of what they had suffered and done; they became poetic personages, worthy of the pen of Scott or Dickens; indeed, they were so much affected that they considered Lawyer Choate should charge little for presenting them before the community in their true light, and, therefore, often forgot or neglected to pay him anything. His dramatic power in exhibiting the interior feelings of the half guilty, the quarter guilty, and the guilty who are perfectly innocent in their own conceit, and therefore regard a prosecution as a persecution, was so wonderful that many of the persons who were acquitted through his exertions never paid him what they would have paid an advocate who had less identified himself with their interests and characters. Indeed, after his work was done he appeared himself to set a modest estimate on its value. The occasions when he obtained large fees were due to his partner, who made the contracts beforehand; for Mr. Choate generally considered the obstacles in the way of getting a verdict for his clients formidable until the case was settled, and was indifferent to the amount of the fee only after he had succeeded.—Edwin P. Whipple, in Harper's Magazine for November.

MR. FLOWERS, a London magistrate, during the hearing of a charge at Bow street against a man, who said he had been a soldier, of having knocked a policeman down and kicked him, said that "soldiers, unless they were Russians, did not kick people when they were down." This little incident has created a stir at London utterly disproportionate to its importance, and a Parliamentary inquiry is threatened.

THE PEDANTIC LAWYER.

Hired my lawyer, Windy, [illegible]
My neighbor Jones for damage due
The plaintiff, on the valid ground
That he, said Jones, had put in pound
Unlawfully, against the peace,
Three certain sheep of finest fleece,
My property; and valued, say,
At twenty dollars. "Please to lay
The damage high, and go ahead,
And, Windy, make him feel," I said,
"The statute's full and speedy force
In trespasses!" He said, "Of course!"
And six months later made report—
The case was up—before the court.
When Windy's speech seemed nearly done,
And he as yet had scarce begun
To touch the matter in dispute—
I—growing anxious for my suit—
Said, in a whisper: "Don't forget,
You haven't touched the case as yet;
You've talked, I know, an hour or more
About the statutes made before
The Norman conquest, and have brough
Before us what Justinian taught,
And Coke on Littleton; have gone
All through the Code Napoleon;
And very learnedly, no doubt,
[illegible]
[illegible]
And how the leading cases ran
Before Lord Blank held so and so;
Now let the ancient corpses go,
And, ere the court falls fast asleep,
Do say a word about the sheep!"

An Intelligent Mother-Mouse.

A young lady of this city a day or two since, in moving a barrel, came across an old mouse with half a dozen young ones. The mother ran away, but the little ones, which were too young to move, were taken up and put in a wire trap, which was thus baited and set to catch the old mouse. It didn't work very well, though, for on looking in the morning it was found that, in so far as catching mousey was concerned, mousey had played it on them, for she had successfully entered the trap and carried away the entire six without springing it. The family dog afterward found them in the chimney.—Newburyport (Mass.) Herald.

PARLOR MAGIC.

(From St. Nicholas for October.)

This series of experiments is designed for the use of young people who are interested in the wonders and the beautiful realities of nature, and who delight to observe for themselves how curious are the phenomena revealed by scientific knowledge. Simple instructions are given for the performance of a number of pretty experiments, all of which are perfectly safe, and cost very little money. For "evenings at home" it is hoped that these experiments will be found indefinitely amusing and recreative, at the same time that they will lead the minds of boys and girls to inquiries into the entire fabric of the grand sciences which explain the principles on which they are founded. All the materials spoken of, and all the needful apparatus, which is of the simplest and most inexpensive kind, can be obtained at a good chemist's. It is of the highest importance that all the materials be pure and good.

THE MAGIC APERTURE.

Put several lighted candles upon the table, in a straight row and near together. Lay upon the table, in front of them, a large piece of smooth, white paper. Have ready a piece of pasteboard large enough to conceal the candles, with a small hole cut in it above the middle. Place this so as to stand upon its edge between the row of candles and the sheet of paper in front, and there will be as many images of flames thrown through the hole and upon the paper as there are burning candles.

GREEN FIRE.

Obtain some boriacic acid, mix it well with a small quantity of spirits of wine or alcohol, place the alcohol in a saucer upon a dish, and then ignite it with a match. The flame will be a beautiful green. To see the color to perfection, of course, the room should be somewhat darkened.

A green flame may also be produced by using chloride of copper, instead of boracic acid. And, instead of mixing it with the alcohol, a small quantity may be imbedded in the wick of a candle.—Leo H. Grindon, in St. Nicholas for October.

CADAVEROUS FACES.

This is an amusing contrast to the lighting-up by means of magnesium. Again let the room be nearly darkened. Put about a teacupful of spirits of wine in a strong common dish or saucer, and place the dish in the middle of the table. Let every one approach to the distance of about a yard. Then ignite the spirit with a match. It will burn with a peculiar yellowish-blue flame, and in the light of this the human countenances, and all objects of similar color, lose their natural tint and look spectral. The contrast of the wan and ghostly hue with the smiling lips and white teeth of those who look on is most amusing. The effect of this experiment is heightened by dissolving some common table salt in the spirit, and still further by putting into it a small quantity of saffron. Let the spirit burn itself away.

PARLOR SUNSHINE.

Obtain a yard of "magnesium tape," or "magnesium wire," sold very cheap by most druggists. Cut a length of six or eight inches; bend one extremity so as to get a good hold of it with a pair of forceps, or even a pair of ordinary scissors, or attach it to the end of a stick or wire. Then hold the piece of magnesium vertically in a strong flame, such as that of a candle, and, in a few seconds it will ignite, burning with the splendor of sunshine, and making night seem noonday. As the burning proceeds, a quantity of white powder is formed. This is pure magnesia. While performing this splendid experiment the room should be darkened.

THE BREATH OF LIFE.

Procure a tolerably large bell-glass, such as is used for covering clocks and ornaments upon the mantel-piece. It should not be less than eighteen inches high and eight or nine inches in diameter. Provide also a common dish, sufficiently large to allow the bell-glass to stand well within its raised border. Then procure two little wax candles, three or four inches in length, and stand each in a little bottle or other temporary candlestick. Place them in the center of the dish and light the wicks. Then pour water into the dish to the depth of nearly an inch, and finish by placing the bell over the candles, which, of course, are then closely shut in. For a few minutes all goes on properly. The flames burn steadily, and seem to laugh at the idea of their being about to die. But presently they become faint—first one, then the other; the luster and size of the flames diminish rapidly, and then they go out. This is because the burning candles consumed all the oxygen that was contained within the volume of atmosphere that was in the bell, and were unable, on account of the water, to get new supplies from outside. It illustrates, in the most perfect manner, our own need of constant supplies of good, fresh air. The experiment may be improved, or at all events varied, by using candles of different lengths.

ROSE COLOR PRODUCED FROM GREEN.

Obtain a small quantity of roseine—one of the wonderful products obtained from gas-tar, and employed extensively in producing what are called by manufacturers the "magenta colors." Roseine exists in the shape of minute crystals, resembling those of sugar. They are hard and dry, and of the most brilliant emerald green. Drop five or six of the little crystals into a large glass of limpid water. They will dissolve; but, instead of giving a green solution, the product is an exquisite crimson-rose color, the color seeming to trickle from the surface of the water downward. When the solution has proceeded for a short time, stir the water with a glass rod, and the uncolored portion of it will become a carmine.

A Remarkable Suicide.

A faithful nurse, who had poisoned by sheer accident a patient in the St. Louis Female Hospital, committed suicide recently, after writing a letter to her mother and sister which cannot be read without a heartache. Corrosive sublimate was given to a young girl in place of a solution of salts. The nurse could not account for her blunder, and could only repeat the words, "My God, doctor, I did it; I alone am to blame. I have killed her, ruined myself, and only hope it will not ruin you." She watched beside the patient for several days, frequently declaring that she would live if Alice lived and die if Alice died. When the poor girl breathed her last the terror-stricken nurse cried, "Don't talk to me; I'm crazy." In an hour she was herself in the agony of death, having taken a large quantity of carbolic acid. Among the last words written to her home friends were these: "My dears, if it is God's will that she should die, then I shall go with my victim at the same time, life for life. This is the way I make atonement. Through the night to light."

A TEXAS HORROR.

The Massacre of the Lynch Family.

[Hockley (Texas) Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.]

The "Hockley horror," as the Lynch tragedy and massacre are called, is still fresh in the minds of the people of Texas.

George W. Lynch, a most respectable, honest and honorable citizen—a native of Texas—a Master Mason in good standing—years ago married a Miss Hargrave, belonging to one of the most reputable families of Central Texas. They lived happily together. Her husband built them a quiet and beautiful home in Waller county, seven miles northwest of Hockley.

Besides the father and mother—the latter having died two weeks before the dark tragedy that ushered her offspring into eternity—the family, now in their graves, consisted of the following: Miss Carrie Lynch, a beautiful young girl of 17; Miss Loraine Lynch, her handsome young sister, aged 13 years; Lodie Lynch; Abigail Lynch, Jerome Lynch, aged 11 years; China Lynch, Phœbe Lynch and Hayes Lynch. The last-mentioned was the innocent babe (a few weeks old) bequeathed by the tender wife of Mr. Lynch to his keeping, and which also perished in the conflagration set by the hand of the devilish assassin.

A Globe-Democrat correspondent recently called upon George W. Lynch, the father of the ill-fated family, who, since the affair, and the more effectually to recover from his wound, has been removed to Hockley, where alone, in the midst of his friends, his life is deemed safe from the same infernal demons that sent his innocent children to their grave. When the correspondent alluded to his lost ones, the unfortunate man burst into tears and wept like a child. Said he: "They say the bodies of all my children were recovered from the ruins of my house; but I know better; only six bodies were found."

"What became of the other two, and was the body of Miss Carrie one of them?"

"I don't know;" and Lynch, who is a strong man, mentally and physically, averted his gaze, and shed tears again.

Hence the question arises among the horrified people of Texas, if the body of Miss Carrie Lynch, his unfortunate girl, was not recovered from the ruins of the burned building, what has become of her? If she was not burned up with the other children, what was her fate? Abduction? The future alone must answer.

Lynch's story is as follows: After attending to some farm duties, he entered his home about 8 o'clock and lay down to seek repose in the midst of his eight motherless children. He intended arising again to feed the baby, who, with Miss Carrie Lynch, occupied a bed in a corner of the large hall, and near the fire-place. The other six children lay on beds in the same apartment. A lamp was dimly burning on the bureau. Lynch says when he lay down all the children were asleep, and the last he saw of Miss Carrie she was slumbering with her face toward the little babe. It was past midnight, and the brilliant stars looked down upon the shadow that stealthily crept into the doomed home. Lynch was suddenly awakened by the report of a pistol and a ball piercing his bosom. His eyes were opened by the shock to perceive a dark object bending above him. No word was spoken. The demon fired again. This time the ball penetrated his breast under the collar-bone. He fell senseless. How long he was insensible he does not know. The next he remembers he was making his way out on the veranda, while a sheet of flame licked its red tongue out through the doorway. He was, in a narrow lane in front of his residence, encountered by two of his horrified neighbors, Lado and his brother-in-law, Hargrave. Lynch said: "I'm shot twice, and my children are all burned up. Look for them." The wounded man was taken to a neighbor's house, that of Mr. Weaver.

Just as the two neighbors came up the north wing of the building was falling in, and the entire structure going down before the fierce flames that were wreathing around the bodies of Lynch's eight children—everything he held dear on earth. For a day or two Lynch was unaware of the certainty of the fate of his children, and until one of his friends, sitting by his bedside, said:

"George, it is my duty now to tell you that you have not a child on earth!"

It has been concluded by some of the best detectives that the eight children had either been killed or rendered insensible before their father was aroused by the shot of the assassin. Their bodies were found in the exact position they occupied when they lay down to sleep. Not one had been turned over or changed position. Some think they were chloroformed, and probably their father, who was only awakened from his stupor by the shock of the murderer's bullet. This view is strengthened from the fact that the neighbors who first arrived heard no cry nor infant's wail, as the flames formed their fiery winding-sheets. It is argued that, had any of these innocent victims been alive or influenced by some drug, the first shot at their parent would have awakened some one of them, who would have made their escape. The victims uttered no screams as they all went down in their fiery death. This it is that gives this unparalleled tragedy its inexpressible and thrilling horror. How long had these eight beautiful children been killed before the conflagration was set, and how were they killed? These are questions that still remain a dreadful and apparently inscrutably mystery.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

TO CURE BILIOUS HEADACHE.—Drink the juice of two oranges, or of one lemon, about half an hour before breakfast every morning.

BAD COLDS.—A medical authority asserts that the severest catarrh cold can be removed in about ten hours by a mixture of carbolic acid ten drops, tincture of iodine and chloroform, each seventy-five drops. A few drops of the mixture should be heated over a spirit lamp in a test-tube, the mouth of which should be applied to the nostrils as volatilization is effected. The operation should be repeated in about two minutes, when, after the patient sneezes a number of times, the troublesome symptoms rapidly disappear.

HABITUAL DRUNKENNESS.—The Scientific American contains an account of an experiment test of Liebig's theory for the cure of habitual drunkenness. The experiment consisted of a simple change of diet, and was tried upon twenty-seven persons with satisfactory results. The diet proposed is farinaceous, and in the cases reported was composed of macaroni, haricot beans, dried peas and lentils. The dishes were made palatable by being thoroughly boiled and seasoned with butter or olive oil. Breads of a highly glutinous quality were used, care being taken to prevent their being soured in course of preparation. In his explanation of the theory, Liebig remarks that the disinclination for alcoholic stimulants, after partaking of such food, is due to the carbonaceous starch contained therein, which renders unnecessary and distasteful the carbon of the liquors.

CURE FOR BRONCHITIS, LARYNGITIS AND QUINSY.—Mr. G. A. Sala, in a recent Illustrated London News "Echo," writes: "Until two or three evenings since I had never heard of the treatment of bronchial complaints by the external application of the most precious of metals. I was talking to an American gentleman on the subject of bronchitis and spasmodic asthma, when he said: 'Why don't you try a gold necklet? I have worn one, my wife has worn one, my children have worn such necklets for months together. I have recommended the remedy to hundreds of my friends, and in no case have I found it fail as a cure for bronchitis, laryngitis and quinsy sore throat.' He went on to say that the necklet should be worn so just as to be concealed, in the case of men-folk, by the shirt-collar. It should not be so tight as to inconvenience the wearer, but it should be made to press flat on the throat."

A CURE FOR DIPHTHERIA.—Dr. Chenery, of Boston, has lately discovered that hyposulphite of soda is the specific remedy against diphtheria—that so-much-dreaded ailment, which of late years has carried off many valuable lives. He reports a very large number of cases (158 within his own practice) saved by the use of this remedy. The dose of the hyposulphite is from five to fifteen grains or more in sirup, every two to four hours, according to age and circumstances. It can do no harm, but if too much is given it will purge; as much as the patient can bear without purging is a good rule in the severer cases. The solution or mixture can be used in doses of five drops to half a drachm in milk. The amount for thorough stimulation is greater than can be taken in water. The doctor usually gives it in such doses as can be easily taken in milk, using milk besides as a food for small children. One fact, however, needs to be borne in mind, namely, the hyposulphite prevents the digestion of milk, and it should be given in less than an hour after taking the medicine. They may be used alternately, however, without interference, in sufficiently frequent doses.

ACIDITY OF STOMACH.—A sufferer for many years from want of appetite, acidity of the stomach, etc., has constitutional weakness, and relief can be only hoped for; the advice and medicine of a good physician will give that. Abstaining from certain articles of food and practice would materially help; eat no soups, soft dishes, like boiled, steamed or stewed meats, hominy, oat-meal, etc., and no cheese, cake, pies, fried meats, fish, spices, catsup, mustard, sauces; use no Indian meal, no spring wheat or rye; use only white winter wheat made into good bread; use no potatoes or milk for fermentations; use no warmed-up potatoes, no fresh-baked bread unless it is baked out dryish; use no black tea or English breakfast, only weak green tea, pure coffee, and in moderation. Remedies—Elixir of vitriol, as sold by all druggists; dose five to ten drops, in a half-tumbler of water, after breakfast; four drops mother tincture of nux vomica, in tumbler of water; dose, two teaspoonfuls two or three times a day, a little bicarbonate of soda placed in the mouth and swallowed, and as much flower of sulphur as can be placed on a 3-cent piece on going to bed. Parched corn, boiled lean meats, baked or boiled potatoes, good Vienna bread, or such kind of bread, weak green tea, and weak pure coffee, and, as the health improves, other things.

Well-Toned Systems.

Systems toned and renovated with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are most effectually defended from disease. That supreme invigorant soon overcomes that distressing feebleness consequent upon ailments which impoverish the blood and relax the muscles. Vigor, appetite, sleep return to the wasted frame, and every physical faculty gains greater activity through its benign influence. Nor is this all, for the Bitters have a most genial and cheering effect upon the mind of the despondent invalid, which is the natural effect of the increased bodily vitality which they produce.—Nervous symptoms disappear in consequence of the use of this medicine, and the evil consequences sure to result from a premature decay of the physical energies are averted. Dyspepsia, liver complaints, rheumatic ailments, urinary and uterine irregularities, malarial diseases, and many other disordered conditions of the system, are remedied by the Bitters.

DR. WILHOFT'S ANTI-PERIODIC OR FEVER AND AGUE TONIC!—Wilhoft's Tonic has established itself as the real infallible Chill cure. It is universally admitted to be the only reliable and harmless Chill medicine now in use. Its efficacy is confirmed by thousands of certificates of the very best people from all parts of the country. It cures malarious diseases of every type, from the shaking agues of the lakes and valleys to the raging fevers of the torrid zone. Try it! It has never been known to fail. Our Barometer.

The best and surest—and, we may add, simplest—barometer we ever saw is the cord by which manuscript, etc., is sent up and down from our counting-room and composition-rooms. It is made of good hemp, just about the proper strength to hang a tramp who carries and threatens to use, or does use, a pistol. When the weather is damp and threatening rain, it gradually contracts, so as to become very tight; and, as warmer and clearer weather sets in, it relaxes correspondingly. We can tell quite as soon as the weather-glass can inform us when we are to have any change of weather. A well-twisted hemp cord, tied between any two points, will operate similarly, and prove a sure and cheap barometer.—Concord People.

A Seasonable Hint.

The Boston Commercial Bulletin, reminding its readers that the next few weeks give the best season of the year to "plant fences," supplies some very remarkable figures as to the use of wire fence, and especially of the Barb Fence of the Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company. Since the introduction of wire fence, twenty years ago, one hundred and fifty thousand miles of wire fence have been constructed. The Barb Fence has been before the public only three seasons, yet already twenty-four thousand miles of this fence are in use in this country and various parts of the world. It is in the highest favor with land owners, for farm and home protection against depredators of the crops and orchards. The fence is constructed of Galvanized Steel Wire, and carries steel barbs firmly attached by the process of manufacture patented in this country and very widely abroad. The Barb Fence is literally a steel thorn hedge with all the defensive qualities of the most perfect hedge, and all the durability of galvanized steel wire. It is cheap as a material, easy in construction, and has almost the life and tenacity of a stone wall. The Barb Fence Wire is being extensively used in single strands to perfect and give efficiency to walls and fences of old construction. It will turn the breachiest steer, and is as useful in the home inclosures as in the outlying fields.

That Boy.

Dramatis personæ.—A young American in roundabout and leggins, perched upon the fence devouring a huge piece of mince pie, and a maiden of five summers, in pantalettes, looking very wishfully at the gourmand on the fence. Young America—"I say, sis, does your mar make mince pies? If she does, I'll bet they ain't so good as my mar's." Little Miss (timidly)—"I like mince pie awful well." Young America—"Well, now, that's funny! Just look here (drawing a quarter of a pie out of his jacket pocket), and it's boss, too! Ain't my mar good?" (carefully stowing it away in his pocket). That boy "is father to the man" who must have his cigars and any other masculine luxury his contemptible selfishness craves, while his poor sickly wife must do the work of two women ("girls waste more than they earn," he says), and for the want of a little money to purchase a few bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the sovereign remedy for female diseases and weaknesses, she is literally dying by inches—and all because of that masculine selfishness that would not divide the childish luxury with his playmate, and now tacitly refuses his wife the luxury of health.

PHYSICIANS recommend Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR as a cure for Heart Disease, showing they have confidence in it. A lady says:

"From a child I have been subject to Palpitation of the Heart, and for the past few years have continued to grow worse, palpitation being followed by dizziness and suffocation, so much so that if I attempted to lie down my heart would seem to cease beating entirely, causing great prostration. I was obliged to have a physician in attendance for nearly a year. At last he advised me to try Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR, which I did, and have not taken any other medicine since. Am nearly well, and have great reason to believe I shall get entirely cured by continuing to take the HEART REGULATOR.

THEODORE REED, - - Editor.

What the Newspapers Say About Hendricks.

Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks.

(Richmond (Va.) Star.)

We republish to-day an article from the Indianapolis Sentinel, the leading democratic paper of the northwest, presenting Thomas A. Hendricks as the man for the democratic nomination in 1880. Of his suitableness as a candidate for the presidency there can be but one opinion. To him, Voorhees and Pendleton, we owe the redemption of Indiana and Ohio from radicalism. He has toiled incessantly and successfully for the democracy. His splendid abilities, his unspotted character and the great hold he has upon the affections of the democracy throughout the land, makes him the strongest man that could be put forward. It is due to him and the great State of Indiana that he should be our standard bearer in 1880 No other man can rally the democracy as he will. He has always been a fast friend to the south and Virginia. No Virginian ever came in contact with Mr Hendricks but knows the sincere admiration and affection he has for the old dominion. We cordially endorse the sentiments of the Sentinel, and can assure the staunch and able organ of the western democracy that wherever they are read in Virginia they will meet a hearty response and approval. No party machinery will have to be used to nominate Hendricks. He is the choice of the people.

Achilles of Indiana.

(Indianapolis Sentinel.)

Governor Hendricks is eminently a safe man. He does no inconsiderate thing. He deliberates before he acts. He takes no position to-day and recants to-morrow. He is guided by his judgment, and not by his impulses; therefore he makes no mistakes. He has large experience in public life. As a member of our State Legislature; as a member of the Convention which framed the Constitution of our State; as a Representative and Senator in Congress and as Governor of Indiana, he has reflected honor upon his State, and dignified the offices he has occupied. In all the places he has filled—from the court room to the Senate chamber—he has proved himself equal to the occasion—always coming fully up to the mark. Governor Hendricks is a man of pure private character. There is no stain upon his garments nor blot upon his name. His private actions have ever been in consonance with his public career. Should he be nominated in 1880, there will be no questionable transaction for his friends to explain. Calumny will harm him not, for, unlike Achilles, he has no vulnerable spot to be reached.

Indorsing Him With an "If."

(Houston (Texas) Telegram.)

The fact that Indiana went Democratic by an increased majority is considered a great card for Hendricks for the next Presidency. Well, we want somebody who can beat Grant and Wall street, and who, after he is elected, will not, like Tilden, try to buy the place the people have given him from the robbers who stole it, but will maintain his and the people's rights and take by force his own wherever he finds it. If Mr. Hendricks is such a man, then we are for him.

The Coming Candidate.

(Indianapolis Sentinel.)

The efforts of the Republican press of Indiana to abuse Hendricks as soon as the democratic victory is over show that his enemies regard him as the coming candidate.—New York Herald.

Since Mr. Hendricks is invulnerable to the attacks of the radical press in Indiana or elsewhere it is at liberty to whack away to its heart's content. Mr. Hendricks is the coming candidate for president in 1880. The fiat of fate was never more distinctly written.

Never.

(Wilkesbarre (Penn.) Record.)

The Democratic papers of Indiana speak of the triumph of the party in that State as "Voorhees' victory." And pray where does the venerable Mr. Hendricks' honors come in? Is he, too, in the hands of a "receiver?" Voorhees may presently come up as a Presidental candidate, and where will poor Hendricks be then?

Welcome to Hendricks.

[Pottsville Chronicle.]

Governor Hendricks has promised to make a few speeches in Pennsylvania. He will meet with a rousing reception from the Keystone Democracy, who always had a warm side for the Vice-President.

—If there is one perfect gentleman in the great State of Ohio, that man is Hon. R. Ellis, Jr., Bank Examiner for that State. He was sent here by the government to act in the difficulty the Bank had with Hazzard, and his prompt action and great interest on the side of the people, his unwavering patience, clear business tact, and polite manners won for him high compliments from all. He returned to Cincinnati last Friday leaving many warm personal friends to be gratified in all his future success.

Warsaw Union: A farmer wanted to borrow a gun from a neighbor for the purpose of killing some yellow birds in his field of wheat, which were eating the grain. His neighbor declined to loan the gun, for he thought the birds useful. In order to satisfy his curiosity he shot one of them, opened his craw and found in it two hundred weevils and four grains of wheat, and these four grains the weevil had burrowed. This was a most instructive lesson, and worth the life of the poor bird, valuable as it was.

That immense political rooster recently exhibited by the Wabash "Courier" has caused some inquiry by exchanges, as to his breeding; which is given by the publishers, as follows: "Said rooster was sired by that sturdy old chanticleer, "Democracy" and is damned by every Republican who sees him. Now, study out the breed, if you can."

The first snow of the season fell last Sunday.

—Frank Scholes, who has been absent some weeks attending school, returned home last week intending to teach the coming winter.

—Morris Headley was the successful candidate for the school at Hoisington's at the school meeting, and will teach the boys and girls of that district the coming winter, providing they don't get away with him.

—Minnie VanHyde, who was formerly agent at this place for the B. & O. Co, is at present one of the happiest men on the line—its a girl and kicks the beam at 8½ pounds. His friends in this vicinity will no doubt feel happy and congratulate Van on this event.

—While Mr. Dick Culbertson was absent from home last Wednesday, some one entered his house and stole $8.00 in money and canned fruit, taking out a pain of glass to gain an entrance. Dick would like to know where the fruit is, not caring for the money. We inform that chap that Dick has a revolver now after the damage is done.

—Mrs. Samuel Flint died Oct. 26th, after an illness of three months. Mrs. F. was one of the pioneers of DeKalb county, having come here about the year 1842, and has for the past thirty years resided on the farm which her aged companion now occupies. She was about 80 years of age at the time of her death. She leaves a large circle of friends to mourn her loss, but their loss is her gain. It can be said of the deceased that she always lived an exemplary life, and there can be no doubt that she is to-day reaping her reward.

—J. Stafford, who has been so well concealed in LaOtto, was arrested Oct. 23d, charged with stealing money from the express office at this place. He was taken before 'Squire Neff for trial, and upon examining the papers they found there had been a mistake made. Stafford's attorney stepped out and motioned for Stafford to follow. He did so, and the attorney took off his $5 hat and put it on Stafford and told him to "git"—he got. Sammie Broughton started after him with a revolver and told him to "halt." Stafford told him to "go to h—l" that he had "no authority to take him." Sammie skipped back to the house and the constable went after him, but could not catch him. It has been rumored he was seen at Kendalville.

—The Mishawaka Enterprise gets off the following which is endorsed by every newspaper man. "It may not be generally known, but is a fact, nevertheless, that editors are only mortal, and like other mortals have only one pair of eyes and the same number of ears, on an average. It is sometimes difficult for them to be everywhere at the same time, and to see and hear everything that is going on in the place. Also, as a general thing they are not "mind readers." Yet some persons take it as a personal insult if the paper fails to mention that "Jim Jones has got a boil," or "Peter Piper has built a new sidewalk," or "Mrs. Grundy has gone on a visit," or "just returned from Jimtown;" or that "accomplished Miss Flora McFlimsey of Madison Square is sojourning in our midst for a few days;' and set it down as rank favoritism on the part of the editor when a few such items that chance to fall within his notice are admitted into his columns, to the exclusion of others that he knows nothing about. Now let it be understood once for all that there is no favoritism about this thing. An editor is always glad, as a general thing, to have any such personal items, as they help to fill up, and add to the local interest of the paper. But it is impossible, as we said before, for one person to see and hear everything, consequently he must depend on his friends for particulars, names, dates and other information deemed worthy of notice. This we are constantly trying to impress on our readers, but so far with very poor success. Tell us the news, friends, and it will be recorded.

Local and Miscellaneuos

—Female loveliness is never more grandly displayed than when engaged in acts of benevolence and charity. Beauty of character as well as of face and form, has assigned to women a proud sphere in the social world, and with her energies and sympathies fully aroused, all obstacles are surmounted in the amelioration of the condition of the poor and indigent around her. True to nature two of our most bewitching young ladies, Miss Sadie Hollister and Nellie Wheelock, very quietly and graciously sought and obtained means for the relief of a family named Turnbull, who were suffering and in need.—A nice little sum amounting to $7.50 was raised and their wants relieved. All should be alive to the needs of the poor and destitute.

◆

Winter comes. The advance guard promises an early arrival. Prophets predict extremely cold weather of long duration; and when the winter storms take full possession, and the winds howl around the hovel of the destitute then will come the cry for aid and protection to prevent suffering and starvation. Each succeeding winter brings with it more want and misery; each, demands more charity. Then let us suggest to the citizens of DeKalb County, more especially those of the larger towns, the necessity of organizing benevolent societies; commence at once the work of charity by making an effort for a general organization to embrace all the different elements of society, adopt some plan whereby social gatherings can be made to return a profit.—The mites of many when aggregated will go far to alleviate the destitute from the agony of pinching poverty.—Who will make the move?

◆

—Doctor McDonald of the Plymouth "Democrat" suggests the following prescription for the cure of hard times. No royalty for its use. "As we are well aware that many of our fellow countrymen are severely troubled with a horrible disease called "hard times," and believing it to be contagious, and an epidemic at times, we will here give a prescription for its cure, gratis: First, rise every morning at five o'clock, and take immediately one tablespoonful of perseverance and one tablespoonful of temperance thoroughly mixed; on sitting down to breakfast, take half a wineglass full of rigid, domestic economy: at supper take four grains of benevolence dissolved in a wineglass full of honesty; on going to bed take ten grains of stop grumbling. Continue this treatment for two years and then take a careful inventory of yourself and your finances and if they are not found to be sound and prospering, just set us down for no doctor."

◆

"Victory and Voorhees" is the heading to the election returns in the Rochester Sentinel of last week. It is disgrace enough to crow over a Democratic victory, but when a newspaper circulating among an intelligent people, shouts for "Voorhees," it must have lost all respect for itself and the feelings of its loyal readers and sunk entirely beneath the filth and polution of Democratic rottenness.—DeKalb County Republican.

The editor of the Republican is certainly troubled with worms. His buzzard belch about "filth" and polution of "Democratic rottenness," calls loudly for a bottle of vermifuge or some other strong worm exterminator. The sweeping Democratic victory in Indiana has set most of the radical editors to howling like scared dogs. The idea of one of these remaining fragments of a wrecked party talking about Democratic polution is too ridiculous to be answered. Just think of it; a man who indorses the Presidential steal, a man who belongs to a party whose leaders and statesmen (?) have been drowned in the sea of corruption, a man who edits a paper that indorses the dare-devil returning boards, a brazen radical like that, with the cheek of a professional tramp, attempting to paint the towering "tall Sycamore of the Wabash," black with his polluted brush of malice Well may these forlorn radicals send up their howls of dispair, their days are about numbered. Yes, we repeat it: "Victory for Voorhees," Victory has followed the brilliant Daniel wherever he has traveled, and is now perched upon his unfurled banner. Senator Voorhees, like the late lamented Morton and other illustrious men, has occasionally changed his course to "conform to the logic of events," which has been the cause of showers of abuse that he has braved like a grand old ship in a cyclone. There he stands a majestic tower of ability. Like Saul among his brethren, "the tallest of them all."—Now, Mr. Editor of the DeKalb County Republican, we have the honor and pleasure of introducing to you one of Indiana's United States Senators, the Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees, who will speak for himself when the next American Congress convenes.—Rochester Sentinel.

—The number of farmers' teams upon our streets within the last week indicates a decided revival of business.

—Rev. Mr. Welsh, formerly pastor of the M. E. church in this city, is a guest among his old friends here at present.

—A good opening for a first-class shoemaker at St. Johns station. For particulars call on, or address S. J. St. Johns.

—The proceeds from the sale of a load of wheat will shoe the people of a whole township, at the Boot Upside Down.

—Good undershirts and drawers for 25c a piece. Good canton flannels 8c, 9c and 10c. per yard at Schaab, Beugnot & Co's.

—C. B. Blair, a Laporte county farmer, has gathered over 2,800 bushels of cranberries from his marshes near Michigan City.

—If your hogs have symptoms of cholera or diphtheria, go to Davenport's and purchase some of those powders that never fail to cure.

—The New Castle "Courier" (rep.) says Democrats never "scratch." Perhaps not, we are disposed to think they do in DeKalb however.

—G. C. Ralston is handling clover-seed in large quantities, Those who have not sold their seed will do well to give him a call.

—Query: "Why will men smoke common tobacco, when they can buy Marburg Bros, "Seal of North Carolina" at the same price.

—This cold weather has somewhat injured the staying qualities of "cow butter," we are now buying in pound lots—when we have money enough.

—White Fish, Mackerel, Boneless Cod-fish, Herring and Sardellen all kept in stock and sold at bottom prices, by our enterprising groceryman F. A. Hoff.

—Schaab, Beugnot & Co., have the best assortment of overcoats and ladies cloaks [illegible] be found in the country and are selling 15 per cent cheaper than any other house in Northern Indiana.

—At a recent hanging bee in this State, the convict not wishing to delay the ceremony, glanced at the Sheriff just before dropping and complacently remarked, "I'll see you later."

—How many men are pacing through this forest world chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy, and squirting the juice of the bitter upon the skirts of their neighbor's garments.—Adams Co. Union.

How many women.

—Two cases of trichina of the worst description are under treatment in Mansfield Both are young men who had been eating pretty freely of partly cured pork. On the body of one a large number of abscesses have developed themselves.—Bryan Argus.

—The value of the thorough-bred stallions in Kentucky and Tennessee is probably not far from $1,000,000, and the value of their brood mares half as much more. This does not include trotters.

—The following are a few of the prices at the millinery Bazaar of H. H. Stamets.

Ruches as low as one cent each.
Corsets for 25, 40 and 50 cents.
Fine silk bows 15 to 20 cents.
Best two-button kid gloves 95 to $1.65
Embroideries and laces at all prices.

—Our worthy friend, H. E. Baker, who has been connected with the Whitley County Commercial for several years, has taken entire control of that paper. "Ed." has our best wishes for financial success.

—People should be careful while preparing for comfort during the winter, and see that they have no deffective flues, that the stove pipe is properly adjusted and that a safe place is prepared to deposit ashes. A little precaution may save a comfortable home.

—The Defiance (O.) Democrat, formerly a two-sheet pasted eight page paper, made its appearance last week as a nine column folio, the editor "having become tired of living on wind in order that the office receipts might go toward paying the expense of a big paper."

The four-year-old mare Maud S. who recently trotted at Lexington, Ky. in 2:17½ was sold the next day to W. H. Vanderbilt, of N. Y., for $21,000. Her former owner Capt. Stone, of Cincinnati bought her when she was a yearling at the annual sale of Mr. Alexander in Kentucky. She was sired by Harold.

—The Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. church, will have a tea meeting in the lecture room, on next Friday evening. Supper will be served from five to six o'clock. A cordial invitation to everybody. Supper only ten cents.

Mrs. Casebeer, Sec'y.

—The Manhattan Savings Bank, of N Y. city, was burglarized on the morning of the 27th inst. Securities to the amount of $2.757,700, of which $2, 505,-700 were registered in the name of the institution, and are not negotiable, and $78,000 are in coupon bonds, and 11,-000 in cash was secured by the robbers.

—The following are specimens of the spelling on the entry cards at a county fair recently, "Rho Dilan greening, bell flour, alexanders, Steel Read, Hub Bard, tomkins, Road Greening, Inglish Streake, Strawberray, Fall pair, Engliss Foot Rugg, Chair Cushing, Patrige Coachen." The next premium list in that county will contain a premium on spelling.

—An attempt has been made to assissinate King Alfonso, of Spain. The attempt was made in a public thoroughfare by a person who says he came from Tarragona "purposely to kill the King,' but his aim was too low and the bullet passed through the head of a soldier who was standing guard on the opposite side of the street. Gen. Grant witnessed the shooting.

—T. H. Sprott, our enterprising real estate agent will conduct an excursion to Kansas, leaving Auburn on the 5th of next month. A large number from this part of the State will accompany him with a view to purchasing or trading for a home on the rolling prairie. He has arranged for very low fare, and persons who have a desire to see the garden of the west should embrace this opportunity. This is the best season of the year to go.

—The following from the Angola Herald is rather suggestive, yet not too severe. The average printing office loafer requires large doses given often. "That contemptible sneak who spends a portion of his time loafing at the Herald office, talking to the compositors and even reading the copy on their cases, then reporting the result of his observations to our contemporary, will please take notice that cards of invitation will be issued in future when his presence is wanted at the Herald office.

Special Notice.

I must have a settlement with all on subscription and other accounts, and I hope all will come in and pay up either to Mr. Reed or myself without further delay. I do not want to be forced to other means to get a settlement, yet these accounts must be attended to immediately.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

◆

She Won't Marry Him.

It has been currently reported through the press that Samuel J. Tilden was soon to marry Miss Nellie Haseltine, of St. Louis. In a recent interview that lady is reported as saying:

"Oh! no, there is not a particle of truth in it. It is the same old story that was told two years ago, which somebody seems to have renewed. Why I have never even met Mr. Tilden. I met Governor Hendricks at Saratoga during the presidential campaign, and he told me that Mr. Tilden expressed a desire to meet me, but he has never been introduced to me. Besides I never would marry a man so much older than myself."

There's no 7 to 8 about that.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case Try it. Sold by W. McIntyre & Son.

THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

Dr. C. McLane's Liver Pills, in cases of Ague and Fever, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a fair trial.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression Dr. McLane's Liver Pills.

The genuine McLane's Liver Pills bear the signatures of C. McLane and Fleming Bros. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Liver Pills, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A DISPATCH from Providence, R. I., reports that the bark Susan, of New Bedford, which left that port Oct. 12, with a crew of twenty-five men, on a whaling voyage, encountered a hurricane, capsized, and all but three of the twenty-five were drowned.

REAR ADMIRAL PAULDING, Senior Flag Officer on the retired list of the navy, has just died at Huntington, L. I. Admiral Paulding was the son of the captor of Maj. Andre, and the last surviving officer of the battle of Lake Champlain....Thomas P. Wallace, a New York brewer, has purchased the trotting horse Hopeful for $25,000.

COL. J. H. WOOD, of Wood's Museum fame, now a resident of New York, has failed for many thousands of dollars.

THERE seems to be little doubt that the little ship Florence, which was sent to the Arctic regions, under Capt. Howgate's directions, has been lost at sea. She returned and touched at Newfoundland some weeks ago, and sailed thence for New London, Ct., since which time nothing has been heard of her. A furious gale prevailed shortly after she left Newfoundland, and the Florence, with her entire crew of thirteen, including Capt. Tyson, undoubtedly perished in it.

A STORM of frightful violence passed over a large part of the Atlantic seaboard on the morning of Oct. 23, doing a vast amount of damage to property, and causing no inconsiderable loss of life. Philadelphia seems to have been the chief sufferer, where property valued at over $1,000,000 was destroyed, several persons killed, and a large number wounded. Something like a thousand dwellings were unroofed, scores of churches damaged more or less, the Pennsylvania railroad left in ruins, and the whole water-front of the city submerged. Great damage was done in other places in Pennsylvania; and in Washington and Albany, in fact all along the track of the gale, the effects were most disastrous. The hurricane originated in the West Indies.

THE storm that passed over Pennsylvania and New York, playing such wild havoc in Philadelphia, was even more destructive on water than on land. Eight vessels were sunk and twenty-two damaged in the harbor of Philadelphia, while all along the Delaware river innumerable wrecks mark the track of the gale. An oyster fleet, bound up the river, was scattered like chaff, nearly every vessel being either sunk or driven ashore, and several lives lost. On Chesapeake bay the storm was the severest experienced for years, and many vessels were driven ashore. The steamer Express foundered at the mouth of the Potomac, and fifteen lives were lost. Along the Atlantic coast the wind attained a velocity of eighty to ninety miles an hour, and for over a hundred miles the coast is dotted with wrecks.

THE WEST.

THE United States Circuit Court at St. Louis has ordered the foreclosure and sale of the great bridge which spans the Mississippi river at that place, under the mortgage held by the foreign bondholders. The first mortgage is for $4,000,000, and the second $2,500,000. The sale takes place on the 20th of December.... Dr. Roswell Waldo, surgeon of the Marine Hospital at Cairo, died of yellow fever last week.... Another new play is on the boards at McVicker's Chicago Theater the present week—a dramatization from one of Bret Harte's sketches—called "M'liss." This play has been the source of contention in the New York courts. In its production at Chicago, Katie Mayhew will sustain the title role, supported by McVicker's admirable company. The scenery, as usual at this house, is excellent.

A BAND of robbers, who were preparing to make an attack on a Kansas Pacific railway train, near Fort Ellsworth, were surprised in camp by officers, who arrested the leader, one Mike Rourke, and wounded another. The rest of the gang escaped.

A DOZEN of the Cheyennes whom Maj. Thornburgh failed to find in the sand-hills north of the Union Pacific railroad put in an appearance at a stage station only thirty miles from Sidney, Neb., last week. They killed a man and a boy, nearly whipped a child to death, and attacked a freight teamster, but he escaped. It is thought the savages have established themselves in the sand-hills, with the intention of raiding the settlements and freight trains during the winter.

CATHOLIC BISHOP ROSECRANS died quite suddenly, of hemorrhage of the lungs, at Columbus, Ohio, a few days ago. He was a brother of Maj. Gen. Rosecrans.

THE largest dry-goods house in St. Louis, that of Dodd, Brown & Co., has failed. Their liabilities are placed at $1,200,000, and their assets at about the same. The failure is attributed to the prevalence of the yellow-fever epidemic in the South.

DISPATCHES from the Upper Missouri report that a body of the Cheyenne fugitives, recently from the Indian Territory, have succeeded in getting across the Yellowstone, and have gone to join Sitting Bull, on the other side of the Canadian line....The section of country in Kansas recently raided by the Cheyenne Indians has been swept over by prairie fires, which consumed nearly everything left by the savages.

NEWS of a terrible tragedy comes from Vincennes, Ind. An old Frenchman, named John D. Vacelet, living two miles from that town, and his entire family, consisting of wife and two sons, were murdered at night by unknown parties. The object of the crime was robbery.

THE SOUTH.

ADVICES from the fever-afflicted cities of the South to Oct. 22 show that, although the advent of frost had not altogether checked the march of the plague, there was a marked abatement in the mortality as well as in the number of new cases. In some of the interior towns, however, the situation is still very discouraging, the fever holding on with disheartening stubbornness. The whole number of deaths from the fever in New Orleans up to the 20th of October was 3,625, while Memphis had lost 2,862 of her citizens from the same cause. These figures show the frightful malignity of the plague in the latter place, for, with but a fifth of the population of New Orleans, Memphis has had nearly as many fatal cases of fever.

THE United States mail coach running between Fort Worth and Weatherford, Tex., was halted by highwaymen the other day, the mail pouches rifled of their contents, and the passengers stripped of their valuables.

TWO FREIGHT trains collided at Guthrie, Ky., resulting in the killing of three tramps who were stealing a ride on the trains. No other lives were lost.

GENERAL.

THE official Gazette, of Montreal, announces the new Canadian Ministry, as follows: Sir John A. Macdonald, Minister of the Interior; S. L. Tilley, Minister of Finance; Chas. Tupper, Minister of Public Works; J. J. Pope, Minister of Agriculture; John O'Connor, President of the Council; James McDonald, member of the Privy Council and Minister of Justice.

THE Orangemen who were arrested while attempting to parade in Montreal on the 12th of last July have brought an action for false arrest against the Mayor of the city.

THE National Narrow-Gauge Convention, adjourned from July 18, met in Cincinnati last week, about sixty persons being present, representing roads in Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Arkansas and Texas. The opening address was made by Col. E. Hulbert, of Bedford, Md. He said that, vast as is our present railway system of 75,000 miles, the next generation will require 75,000 more, and narrow-gauge roads were especially suited to meet this want.

RECENT deaths: Cardinal Cullen, Archbishop of Dublin, and one of the most famous of the Catholic prelates; John S. Carlisle, ex-United States Senator from Virginia; Gen. James S. Whitney, an old-time Democratic politician of Massachusetts; John H. Klippart for the past twenty-five years Secretary of the Ohio State Board of Agriculture.

POLITICAL.

CONGRESSMAN Clarkson N. Potter, of New York, declines a renomination.

ABRAM S. HEWITT has been defeated for a renomination for Congress in New York, Orlando B. Potter capturing the prize. S. S. Cox and Fernando Wood were renominated in their respective districts.

AT a political meeting in Philadelphia, the other night, some one hurled a large stone at Speaker Randall, which barely missed his head....The anti-Tammany Democrats and Republicans of New York city are running Edward Cooper (Democrat), a son of Peter Cooper, for Mayor, in opposition to Augustus Schell, the regular Tammany nominee.

THE total Democratic vote, at the recent election in Indiana, was 194,990; the Republican vote, 179,049; the Greenback vote, 39,-156; Democratic plurality, 15,941.

PRESIDENT HAYES and Secretary Sherman visited Cumberland, Md., last week, as guests of the Cumberland Agricultural Fair Society, and talked to the people on the finances. Secretary Evarts, about the same time, delivered a speech on the finances in New York city.

WASHINGTON.

SECRETARY SHERMAN says 400,000 ounces of silver will be the amount purchased weekly by the Treasury Department. The treasury now holds $348,080,850 in bonds to secure bank circulation; $13,780,400 to secure public deposits, and $4,922,600 to secure subscriptions to the 4 per cent. bonds.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY SHERMAN is preparing his annual report to Congress, touching which a Washington correspondent telegraphs: "In view of the approximation of specie resumption and his firm determination to carry this important financial measure to a full consummation, he will give a retrospect of what has been accomplished, and combat the position taken by the anti-resumptionists and soft-money men that his policy has been and will be ruinous to the economic interests of the country. He does not propose, it is stated, to urge additional legislation to enable him to carry out the Resumption act, as he regards that question settled, and, before such a measure could pass, specie payments will have been reached."....Attorney General Devens has overruled a former decision of his department, relating to the valuation of United States bonds held by national banks. The previous ruling was that only the face value of the bonds could be exempted from capital returned for taxation. Mr. Devens' ruling exempts the sum paid for the bonds, instead of their face. Under this rule, it is understood, the banks will have claims for the refunding of a considerable sum heretofore paid.

FOREIGN.

DESOLATING floods are reported in the valley of the river Bormida, in Italy.... Full amnesty has been granted by the Austrians to the Bosnian insurgents who have taken refuge in Servia....The investigators' report of the condition of the Bank of Glasgow, which recently failed, discloses the appalling fact that the total loss, including the capital stock, will reach $29,964,357.72.

ALL the managers and Directors of the City of Glasgow Bank have been arrested on a criminal charge of fraud. A cable dispatch says the city of Glasgow "is absorbed in melancholy contemplation of the terrible picture of crime and ruin presented in the official report of examiners of the broken Glasgow bank. The figures and facts are so overwhelming that even financial minds, familiar with figures and cash books, seem utterly to fail to grasp the situation. A kind of apathetic paralysis appears to have seized upon the citizens. The business exchanges are absolutely stagnant. Signs of approaching punishment for the Directors are visible, and eagerly hailed by the whole community. The important feature in the report is the deliberate falsification of the returns made to the Government of the gold held by the bank against notes issued. The legal issue was limited to £72,921, but at the suspension of the concern the note circulation was £863,403, and the coin amounted to only £321,753, but the deficiency was made to appear less by illegally including coin lying at the bank's branches. This scandalous proceeding exposes the bank to tremendous penalties under the laws of Great Britain."

PREPARATIONS are making to try 340 Nihilists at Odessa.....The cable reports a disastrous railway collision at Pontypridd, in Wales. Twelve persons were killed and forty wounded, many of them fatally.

THE distribution of Exposition prizes took place at Paris on the 21st of October. Among the Americans who received decorations of the Legion of Honor are mentioned Commissioner General Richard C. McCormick, who is made Commander; Prof. F. A. P. Barnard and Wm. W. Story, who are made officers. Cyrus H. McCormick and Walter A. Wood, who were in 1867 made Chevaliers, have been raised to officers. Thomas A. Edison and Elisha Gray are made Chevaliers....The Ameer of Afghanistan replies in a defiant tone to the English envoy, and dares the English Government to do its worst....Austrian papers complain that the export of Hungarian wheat is almost at a standstill, partly in consequence of the Americans underselling the Hungarian markets.

A FRESH outbreak of the Kaffir war is expected by the English in South Africa. One of the most powerful chiefs of the Zulus threatens open hostilities. But he will doubtless be thrashed into submission long before the British troops reach the capital of Afghanistan.

THE British advance upon Cabul has been postponed until next year.....A cable dispatch says that Count Schouvaloff will succeed Gortschakoff as Russian Prime Minister, on account of the latter's precarious health.

A CABLE dispatch says that "affairs near Constantinople are more and more assuming the same semi-hostile phase as before the meeting of the Berlin congress. Turkish troops have been moved into positions vacated by the Russians, and the earthworks are being repaired and armed before Constantinople and Gallipolis. The Turks are arranging to increase their forces, and are summoning half-pay officers to active duty. A special committee for the defense of the capital has been formed at the Seraskierate."....Advices from Santa Cruz represent that the condition of the island since the insurrection is hopeless. About 100 negroes have been executed, but the insurrectionary spirit remains alive. St. Thomas has lost over $150,000 by the insurrection, while $3,000,000 would not cover the damage done in Santa Cruz....There has been a great inundation on one of the branches of the river Nile. Twenty villages were submerged, and upward of 1,000 lives lost.

How He Did It.

A Fulton (N. Y.) man laid his finger on the table in front of a buzz saw to feel the momentum of air. The saw was going so fast that the teeth were not to be seen. His finger was taken off. While he was looking at it the foreman came up with the question, "How did you do it?" "Why, I put my finger down so," answered he, placing the other forefinger, as he thought, well away from the teeth. To his horror, the saw took that one, too, clean off at the second joint.

The Low Price of Breadstuffs.

The ruling prices in the breadstuffs and provision market are not very promising to producers. The Mark Lane (London) Express of Oct. 15th represents the English market as unusually depressed. The British crop of wheat has been secured, but the prices for all agricultural productions are so low as to exclude any hope of remuneration to farmers. The arrivals in London of foreign grain have been of late very large. The English market is depressed by two reasons: first, the stock on hand and within reach is large; and, second, the financial disturbance, which has advanced the price of money and curtailed the loans. The advances of money to carry merchandise or grain or any large business have been greatly limited. The last element of speculation has been crowded out, and purchases are confined to ordinary wants. Though no actual panic exists, there is uncertainty and apprehension existing to a degree that is almost as fatal for the time to business as would be a panic in fact.

In the Chicago market the prices are remarkably low—lower than they have been for many years at this time of the year. Added to this unusual circumstance is the fact that, of the spring-wheat crop, fully one-half that is received has to be graded as No. 3. So with corn and oats; at least one-fourth of these grains received are graded as "rejected," which is equivalent to "No. 3." We give the average quotations on 'Change yesterday:

	Cash.	Nov.
No. 2 wheat, per bushel	77	78¾
No. 2 corn, per bushel	33¾	34
Oats, per bushel	18	18
No. 3 wheat	63@68	......
Rejected corn	32¾	......
Rejected oats	15	......
Mess pork, per barrel	$7.50	$7.50
Lard, per 100 pounds	6⅛	6⅛
Live hogs, per 100 pounds	$3.30	......

These figures are not encouraging to the producers. These are the prices here, which include the cost of transportation, commission, storage, etc. It is easy to deduct the cost of handling and transportation, and to see how little is left to the farmer.

Of course there is a difference of opinion as to the wisest policy to be adopted. The home market is of necessity in sympathy with the foreign, and prices here are controlled by those in Europe. The English market is depressed for the reasons stated: large stocks on hand and a disturbed money market. All the information received is to the effect that the English deficiency of wheat will be at least 100,000,000 bushels, and must be eventually supplied. The present low prices and stock in excess of the demand are, therefore, presumably more or less temporary. Under these circumstances, therefore, the wisest policy for the farmers may be to hold their grain for the present. It is useless to send grain to market when that market is filled to abundance, and prices hardly cover the cost of transportation. So long as the wheat will be wanted there is no good reason for sacrificing it. It would seem to be the best policy to hold on to the wheat for a while—to let the stock on hand be reduced by consumption, and give time for the market to recover to a point somewhat justified by an enlarged demand.—Chicago Tribune.

Some European Prices.

Col. Forney has been collecting some statistics with reference to the rates of wages paid at Brussels. He reports as follows:

Gentlemen's upper servants, $60 a year and boarding; coachman, $80; lady's maid, $41; house servants, $20—each year and found. The following get the sums opposite their trades daily: Women lace-makers, 50 cents; tailoresses, 35 to 40 cents; washerwomen, 30 cents, and all find themselves. Machinists get $1; bricklayers and masons, 50 cents; shoemakers, 60 cents; cigarmakers, 30 cents; blacksmiths, 75 cents; locksmiths, 50 cents a day, and all find themselves. Provisions are not very much cheaper than they are now in the United States. Coffee, 30 to 80 cents a pound; rice, 10 cents; butter, 36 cents; sugar, 18 cents; eggs, 2 cents apiece; beef, pork, mutton and veal, which the poor rarely get, average about 25 cents a pound; ham, 45 cents a pound; bread, by the pound, from 5 to 6 cents.

Foreign Immigration.

The revival of foreign immigration to this country begins to be very noticeable. During last month the arrivals of immigrants at New York were 8,955, against 6,673 for the same month last year; during the last three months they were 25,263, against 20,109 in the same time last year. Causes are now at work that will still further add to this increase. The Socialists in Germany have avowed their intention of emigrating to the United States by wholesale to avoid persecution at home. There are something like 900,000 Socialist voters in Germany; should they all take it into their heads to come hither with their families they would form a handsome addition to our population. The threatened increase of hard times in Great Britain will also have the effect of accelerating and enlarging the immigration movement. It will not be surprising if, ere long, we shall see the tide of immigration rolling in upon us in as great a volume as ever.

The Deadly Threshing-Machine.

A most horrible threshing-machine accident is recorded by the Welland (Ont.) Tribune. A boy of 16, named Kimar, who was cutting bands on a threshing machine, slipped and fell into the cylinder. The machine was being driven by 10-horse power at the time, and the unfortunate victim was at once drawn in bodily, being disemboweled and mangled out of all human shape, and, horrible to relate, some parts of the body actually passed through the machine.

IN consequence of the Princess Alice disaster the whole question of the navigation of the Thames is to be considered by an official committee.

THE PLAGUE'S HEROES.

A Vicksburg Minister on the Heroes of the Yellow-Fever Epidemic In and Out of the Various Churches.

Rev. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, Miss., lately addressed the following letter to Col. W. H. McCardle, a resident of Vicksburg, sojourning in Washington:

DEAR FRIEND: I have tried to get leisure to write to you for two weeks, but calls for help from the first hour in the morning to the midnight bell forbade. All business has been at a total stand-still. The colored people have no work, and if they want to go to the plantations to pick cotton they are forbidden to come, as they are regarded as fomite porters of the poison that kills. Notwithstanding, as you see by telegrams, fever is being carried all over the country, and we are looking for the most fearful times outside of the city. It is scattering itself over Hinds county, and bids fair, unless very cold weather comes soon, to reap a greater harvest in the country than it has in the city. We have buried over 800, and if we stop at 1,000 we may be thankful. The very pillars of society have gone down to the tomb. You see names here and at Holly Springs whose loss will fill all hearts with sadness and pain. Our people have behaved well. Some were filled with alarm and fled hurriedly away. The ravages of the fever at Grenada caused the worst form of alarm. One evening paper lately said the rich had fled and left the poor to fight alone, but the very opposite is true. Our bankers and capitalists and wealthiest citizens are here and doing brave and noble service. Indeed, it is a great offering of almost inspired philanthrophy to God and to suffering humanity. The church has no advantage in devotion to the sick. God's prayerless saints who sport amidst the thousand follies of healthy days are sleepless and tender, ready, and never ceasing in their aid, and, I may say, are eager to keep the night watch in the pestilential homes of those who are dying. I have seen them holding the head so gently while the black vomit poured from the mouth, and doing little acts of soothing and comfort which poetry assigns only to the soft hands of woman, and my heart has taken them into its undying love. Many such having never had the fever made it doubly noble. You know that in the forty years of our friendship I have cherished no love of sham or gush or over-laudation of priests, nuns, sisters, or clergy of any denomination for attention to sick people or suffering soldiers. I think the Sisters of Charity a most noble class, but I see wives, mothers and beautiful young women of the best walks of society, with more to lose than they ever dreamed, facing this fearful scourge and going down to death with a fidelity to God and humanity that never was or will be excelled, and yet no pretentious claim is ever set up to remarkable piety or unequaled heroism. As for the priests and the rest of us, as Protestant clergymen, we deserve the least praise of the brave men that toil in an epidemic to assuage the sufferings of our fellow-beings; and yet what a martyrdom is claimed when a young, wifeless, childless, homeless clergyman dies in an epidemic! Nonsense! Every man of every creed and church is supposed to be ready in an hour to go at the call of the Great Master. He has heaven for a home and eternal things of infinite value for his reward. Why should such fear? Why not desire to die like the great Paul? Nothing is lost, but when you see hundreds of good, clever, brave, patriotic men of every age and station, with everything to make life desirable and not the least preparation for the eternal years beyond, step to the front and engage in a struggle for the rescue of some poor victim of the fearful monster, and knowing, too, that before morning they may be in the vortex of death, then you see manhood in its greatest attitude, and the pretentions of the church to all honor due for sacrifice and toil and martyrdom mocked and laughed at. I have been in many epidemics, and been ashamed as I have observed that in the South church leaders get eulogium and others laurels, while many of the real heroes and heroines were passed by quite forgotten. Ought not there to be a roll of honor, by which these splendid privates of the rank and file in our days of pestilence and death should be made to feel that their names are not allowed to perish? Many a plain, unpretending person, who has deserved the highest honor and the largest gratitude, has sunk under a sense of the indifference, coldness and neglect of society. They seek no reward, but is it therefore just that their names should perish and undue praise be sounded over smaller deeds of semi-conspicuous persons?—however sweet the consciousness of having done their full duty is, perhaps, their best reward.

The worst is over here, and now the country—all out from one to twenty miles—is suffering. The country will need help of every sort, and the Howards here are toiling to the full capacity of numbers, strength and funds. We owe you a great debt of grateful remembrance for your efforts to raise means for our relief. As I close, a mocking-bird has come to my window and poured forth a cheerful song, but for forty days not a bird has sung a note over the homes of our plague-stricken city. Very truly yours,

C. K. MARSHALL.

Nabbed by a Shark.

An English paper says: The ship Alice Davies has arrived in the Mersey from the coast of Java, and reports the death of one of her crew, a Welshman, named William Jones Owens, under circumstances of the most horrifying character. Owens, with four others of the crew, went to bathe as the ship lay at anchor at Probolingo. They had not been in the water many minutes when Owens, who was the farthest from the vessel, uttered a piercing shriek. It was then seen that he had been attacked by a shark, which with one bite had completely disemboweled him. The mate being on deck and hearing the cry threw a rope to the unfortunate man, who grasped it. He then hauled toward the ship, but becoming exhausted he loosened his hold of the rope and sank immediately. The shark, which was following Owens, disappeared below to complete its work. Owens was only 22 years old, and belonged to Bangor, North Wales. Owing to the river being almost full of sharks, the men had been previously warned against bathing in it. The shark appeared to be about fifteen feet long, though many of them measured over thirty feet. The other four got safely back to the ship. The sharks in the river are ground sharks, and scarcely ever come to the surface of the water, except when disturbed.

Choate Before a Jury.

In jury trials his main object was to influence the wills of the twelve men before him. He addressed their understandings; he fascinated their imaginations; he stirred their feelings; but, after all, he used all his powers in subordination to that one primal power which dwelt in his magnetic individuality, by which he subdued them, bringing on that part of their being which uttered its reluctant "yes" or "no" the pressure of a stronger nature as well as of a larger mind. As an advocate, he thoroughly understood that men in the aggregate are not reasonable beings, but men with the capacity of being occasionally made reasonable, if their prejudices are once blown away by a superior force of blended reason and emotion—in other words by force of being. His triumphs at the bar were due to the fact that he was a powerful man, victorious over other men because he had a stronger manhood, a stronger selfhood, than anybody on the jury he addressed. On one occasion I happened to be a witness in a case where a trader was prosecuted for obtaining goods under false pretenses. Mr. Choate took the ground that the seeming knavery of the accused was due to the circumstance that he had a deficient business intelligence—in short, that he unconsciously rated all his geese as swans. He was right in his view. The foreman of the jury was a hard-headed, practical man, a model of business intellect and integrity, but with an incapacity of understanding any intellect or conscience radically differing from his own. Mr. Choate's argument, as far as the facts and the law were concerned, was through in an hour. Still he went on speaking. Hour after hour passed, and yet he continued to speak with constantly-increasing eloquence, repeating and recapitulating, without any seeming reason, facts which he had already stated and arguments which he had already urged. The truth was, as I gradually learned, that he was engaged in a hand-to-hand—or rather a brain-to-brain and heart-to-heart—contest with the foreman, whose resistance he was determined to break down, but who confronted him for three hours with defiance observable in every rigid line of his honest countenance. "You fool!" was the burden of the advocate's ingenious argument; "you rascal!" was the phrase legibly printed on the foreman's incredulous face. But at last the features of the foreman began to relax, and, at the end, the stern lines melted into acquiescence with the opinion of the advocate, who had been storming at the defenses of his mind, his heart and his conscience for five hours, and had now entered as victor. He compelled the foreman to admit the unpleasant fact that there were existing human beings whose mental and moral constitution differed from his own, and who were yet as honest in intention as he was, but lacked his clear perception and sound judgment. The verdict was, "Not guilty." It was a just verdict, but it was mercilessly assailed by merchants who had lost money by the prisoner, and who were hounding him down as an enemy to the human race, as another instance of Choate's lack of mental and moral honesty in the defense of persons accused of crime. The fact that the foreman of the jury that returned the verdict belonged to the class that most vehemently attacked Choate was sufficient of itself to disprove such allegations. As I listened to Choate's argument in this case, I felt assured that he would go on speaking until he dropped dead on the floor rather than have relinquished his clutch on the soul of the one man on the jury whom he knew would control the opinion of the others. —E. P. Whipple, in Harper's Magazine for November.

Juvenile Literature.

Extract from "Chicago Primer" for the infant class: There was once a good lit-tle St. Lou-is boy who was told by his pa nev-er to go sail-ing on Sun-days or he would be drown-ed. He obey-ed his fa-ther though the bad boys made fun of him. One Sun-day he and his sis-ter were walk-ing by the riv-er when they saw a boat full of bad boys. "Oh, see," said Tom; "by-and-by these bad boys will get up-set." In a few min-utes the boat turn-ed over and the bad boys were drown-ing. "I can save them," said Tom; "quick, Su-san, off with your shoe!" So Tom took one of his sis-ter's shoes and push-ed it off and got in it. He row-ed with a piece of board to where the bad boys were kick-ing in the wat-er, and took them all in and brought them safe to land. Do you not think that Tom was a ver-y brave boy, and that his sis-ter had ver-y big feet?—Boston Traveller.

Talmage and the Newspapers.

Rev. T. Dewitt Talmage, of New York, in one of his recent sermons, paid his respects to the newspapers in this fashion:

"But," you say, "don't you know the papers are criticising you for the position you take?" I reply yes, I know it; and do you want to know how I feel about it? No man is more indebted to the newspapers than I am. I am here to preach the truth, and they help. The press of the world give me each week 300,000 souls for an audience. Am I not indebted to the press? It is a debt I can never pay. So, slash away, gentlemen, the more the merrier. If there is anything I despise it is a dull time. Give my love to the editors of the secular newspapers. Brisk criticism is like a coarse-crash towel with which it is well for every public man to be rubbed down. It prevents him from catching cold.

Terrible Famine in Morocco.

The crops having been a total failure, the farmers and peasants in the interior were ruined, and, failing to pay taxes and imposts, all their cattle and little property were confiscated by the local authorities, so that they had left their ruined homesteads and tramped to the seaports in a starving condition, many dying on the road. At Mogador there were over 2,000 of these poor refugees, besides thousands of poor townsfolk, both Moors and Jews, in a state of utter destitution. Living skeletons of men, women and children might be seen groping on foul refuse heaps for hideous bits of offal. Down at Waterport and in the streets along which grain bags are carried poor starving wretches were constantly scratching and sifting the sand, dust and mud for stray grains of rice or barley. Over the rocky ledges trudged, at low tide, half-naked women, eagerly collecting mussels, limpets and other shell-fish. Beggars were swarming in the streets, corpses were often seen, small-pox was horribly rife among the poor folks, who all huddled together—those afflicted with the disease were neither isolated nor tended. Sick, sound and dead might be seen lying together in foul, fetid dens. Owners of horses and mules could no longer afford to feed them. Outside the town gates and along the sea beach lay scores and scores of carcasses and skeletons of beasts of burden which had been brought out there to die of starvation—rich feasts for jackals, dogs and carrion crows. The wild country Moors were very desperate with hunger and misery. Murders were very frequent, one man being killed for a bunch of grapes, another for a loaf of bread, and so on. Robberies were, of course, also frequent. The English people were pretty safe; we were in high esteem and received greetings and blessings everywhere. The committee had been giving relief for many weeks past to from 1,200 to 2,000 people daily—first in bread and afterward soup. The poor refugees were very grateful. Deaths were from twenty to forty per day among the country folk alone; of course, many other deaths in the Moorish and Jewish quarters. The cattle left to the townsfolk were nearly starving. There is no grass in the land; the cattle and sheep go out miles into the country daily to feed on scrubby brushwood and dry, prickly plants, and come back at evening slowly, thin and hungry-looking still.—Mogador (Morocco) Cor. London Globe.

The Santa Cruz Insurrection.

A Havana telegram says: "A French steamer from St. Thomas has arrived, bringing further particulars of the insurrection in Santa Cruz. The insurrection broke out in the west end of the island, where three-fourths of the towns were burned and pillaged. The insurgents then traversed the island toward Bassin, but, fortunately, the timely arrival of forces from St. Thomas saved that part of the island. Sixty-seven sugar estates were burned. Only nine of value remain. The principal leaders of the insurrection are now undergoing trial. About 800 insurgents are still scattered about the country. The cause of the insurrection was short payment of wages and refusal of the authorities to give passports to the negroes. Santa Cruz was already declining rapidly, and the island is, therefore, totally ruined. The merchants of St. Thomas lost heavily by the insurrection."

How to Preserve Milk.

Pour the milk into a bottle, and place the vessel up to its neck in a saucepanful of water, which is then to be put on the fire, and allowed to boil for a quarter of an hour. The bottle is now to be removed from the water and carefully closed with a good and tight-fitting cork, so as to render it as air-tight as possible. Milk which has been preserved by this process has been kept for more than a year without turning sour. Milk may also be preserved by putting a table-spoonful of horse-radish, scraped in shreds, into a panful of milk. When milk thus treated is kept in a cool place it will be found to keep good for several days, even in hot weather.

THE GREENBACK CAUSE.

Break All You Cannot Bend, and Starve All You Cannot Drive."

In '76 we battled against taxation without representation. To-day we battle a more infamous system—a system which exempts the rich man, who lives on dead capital, from taxation, to impose it on production and labor—the living capital of all progress. Then, we battled a Stamp act, which imposed the burden of a few shillings upon business men, the whole aggregate of which would not amount to $50,000 a year. To-day we battle a bank monopoly, the richest, the most exacting, the most pernicious that the world has ever known—a monopoly which draws $30,000,000 yearly from the people as a positive bounty exacted by capital from productive labor; a monopoly which imposes a bond system upon the nation which draws $100,000,000 in interest annually from the labor of the country to pamper wealth into insolence, and capital into aristocracy.

In 1776 the colonies were governed for the benefit of the people. There was no sucking vampire to drain the life-blood of the people to fatten into power a privileged oligarchy. To-day $2,000,000,000 of bond capital, bank capital, purse-proud capital—owned by non-producing, idle money-sharks—is combined to keep up exemptions of taxation for bondholders—combined to keep up a monopoly of national banks, based on bonds, on interest, on deposits, which gives 300,000 privileged Shylocks the right to control the finances of the nation, and the right to force the people to sweat, and work, and starve, to pay $111,000,000 annually of interest to those drainers of our substance.

Under the bond system the Government is run, sustained, policed and legislated for the sole benefit of the Bank Association. With the bonds paid in greenbacks we should have no interest to pay. That would save $100,000,000 every year directly, which we are now forced to pay to make production a slave to interest and to capital. It would make money plenty. The bond system ties up money and keeps it from circulation, and makes it dear. Put the amount of money essential to pay off the bonds in circulation, and the rate of interest would go down to its legitimate zero. We have to pay off the bonds, or we have to be slaves to a bondholding aristocracy. We have to pay off the bonds in greenbacks, or be the whipped spaniels of the Bank Association. We have to pay off the bonds in greenbacks, or keep an enormous interest eating, ceaselessly preying, on the vitals of national prosperity. We have to pay off the bonds in greenbacks, or submit to low wages, poverty, bankruptcy, and dependence on usurers. We have to pay off the bonds in greenbacks, or submit to the bold infamy of the Bank Association, which boasts that Congress can pass no bill to curb their bounties, their privileges or their exemption from taxes.

All interest is paid by labor, and the simple question to be decided is, whether interest shall make labor its slave, or whether labor will take interest by the throat and stop it, control it, or kill it. In 1876 3,000,000 colonists—many of them Tories at that—united to resist an unjust claim, and, by unity, patriotism, and a common devotion to a common cause, the colonists won.

Now, in 1878, the Bank Association, with $2,000,000,000 of united capital, have combined to keep the people, labor and production subject to their control. They have $160,000,000 of surplus profits set aside to bribe the press, buy Congress, control courts and subsidize politicians into sustaining their present system of public robbery.

They have to aid them all of the Pacific railroad swindlers who have robbed the Government of 100,000,000 acres of the public domain, and by infamous legislation bribed Congress into giving them $65,000,000 of United States bonds for the people to pay—all for the benefit of a ring of speculating thieves who have hung around the treasury—as the Norman Barons hung around the treasury of England to take all they could lay their hands on, and steal the rest. They have to aid them the great coal monopolists—men who have sprung from comparative poverty into monstrous wealth, and who are grinding down labor by starvation, and manhood by the most infamous monopoly that ever disgraced a civilized nation.

They have to aid them the great railroad combinations which control the highways and byways, from the shores of the Atlantic to the shores of the Pacific, monopolizing the means of travel, the means of transportation, the mails, the produce and the life of progress. The New York Central, the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore and Ohio, the Erie, the Pacific roads, the Boston and Great Western, uniting more than $1,500,000,000 of active, aggressive railroad capital, act as a unit to keep alive railroad monopoly, and all of these monopolies are combined to rule the legislation of the land, so as to make money king and labor slave. This, then, is the array:

The Bank Association, controlling....	$2,100,000,000
The Pacific railroads, controlling....	250,000,000
The New York Central, controlling....	250,000,000
The Pennsylvania R. R., controlling..	500,000,000
The coal monopolists, controlling....	200,000,000
	$3,300,000,000

All of this capital, headed by the best organized talent money can command, organized with the skill long experience and consummate ability have educated into masterly power, and united for the purpose of perpetuating and strengthening associated privileges, has for its purpose:

1. To keep alive the national-bank outrage.

2. Railroad corporations to control all the demands of travel, all the necessities of transportation, and the exclusive right to carry the mails.

3. To sustain the whole coal product of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, so as to keep the steam and motor power beyond the reach of government, and in the hands of the few.

4. All of these interests combine with each other in support of individual corporate monopoly as against Government power, that labor may be regulated by corporate greed, and enslaved for corporate profit.

5. The railroads, the coal monopolies, and the Bank association monopolies have also become, and are, the great land-grabbing monopolists, holding either in fee, through swindling legislation, or robbing—usury—mortgage titles to more than 400,000,000 of acres of the public lands.

By this combination the first object is to control Congressional laws and Congressional legislation; second, State legislation and State laws. Controlling these, they imagine their way is easy to control the labor of the land, which they know full well they must control and enslave by pauper wages before the United States can be made an aristocratic Government.

Now let us count up; $3,300,000,000 of combined capital! Well, that is an enormous lever. Admit it. Admit that it is the strongest combination ever organized to control legislation. The fact cannot be disputed. It is as patent as the known existence of the combination. But all of this enormous sum is owned by less than 500,000 inhabitants! Made up of old men, aristocratic men, women a few, with not to exceed 100,000 active working, managing fighters, and the whole army at the polls cannot count upon 200,000 voters.

To resist monopoly, to put down bank privileges, to curb railroad exactions, to put down coal forestalling and to root out the whole system of concentrated capitalistic control of labor and of production, the army of producers, the army of mechanics, the army of farmers, the army of laborers who work for wages will combine. They are numbered by the millions.

The war is as definitely declared as it was when the British soldiery first fired the American heart at Lexington; and the battle will continue.

The question is, Will the corporations force on the issues? Will they cling to the bond and declare that the whole people shall be made the supporters of the law which now forces us to pay $100,000,000 annually for interest that a few bankers may control the currency and deprive the working energies of the country of an adequate circulating medium? Will they keep up the exemption of 300,000 bondholders from taxation? Will they force the people to submit to a system of transportation which deprives the grain-grower of fair prices at the West, and which forces the consumer at the East to pay two prices for his means of subsistence? Will they still aid the Pacific railroad thieves to rob the nation of its public domain, to make land barons of a few with power to enslave the many?

To pay off the bonds in greenbacks is to save $100,000,000 yearly interest, and to place sovereign money in circulation adequate to our necessities and to our prosperity. Adequate circulation is good wages. Bonds are low wages. Adequate circulation is prosperity, enterprise, activity, equality. Bonds tie up circulation, prevent enterprise, make activity impossible, and aristocracy of privilege certain.

The bondocracy now control the nation. They have done so for the past eight years. The result is universal want of confidence, unheard-of failures, millions without employment, low wages, starvation, and almost public despair, trembling on the verge of revolution.

The sovereignty of the greenback is the sovereigny of labor. The sovereignty of the national bank is the sovereignty of capital, which is corporate insolence, low wages, exemption of the rich from taxation, and universal ruin to general prosperity.

The sovereignty of labor is development, production, progress, and universal industry. It is education for all, it is justice for all—no favors for any-one.

The National Greenback Labor party is the first great national combination for political action which has ever been organized to promote the humanities of justice, so as to secure to all classes a perfect equality of rights, of means, and of aid to secure comfort for homes—homes for all, education for all, and special privileges for none.

We have advanced in every science but that of monetary power, but monetary power is to-day where it was in 1776, in 1789, in 1816, in 1837, in 1857, in 1862, The few control the many. The non-producing rich, living in luxurious idleness enslave the producing, working, industrious many by the same laws, by the same tyrannies, and by the same monstrous exactions which have made monarchies, aristocracies, and monopolies since the flood. We have advanced in education, we have advanced in civil liberty, we have advanced in tolerance, and in all the principles of rational civilization; but in the laws of money, property, monopolies of capital, and the tyrannies of usury, we stand anchored to all the feudalism of the past, and the same laws which have made England a lazar-house of pauperized labor, of ignorant want, of debauched misery for three-fourths of her population, making 16,000,000 of her people mere instruments of labor, without intelligence, without comfort, and almost without the decencies of life, and making 10,000,000 more but one step above them on the ladder of existence, all dependents, all subject to masters. Not one of the 26,000,000 owners of a foot of land. Not one of them with homes they can call their own. Not one of them independent in manhood, in national spirit, or in any elevated standard of civilization. All of them tending down to pauperism, down to crime, down to the submissive degradation which bends to power and yields to capital rather than starve. And all of this, that less than 30,000 landowners wealth to keep up caste, privilege and a monopoly of power; all this that corporate wealth and huge manufactures may may live in the lordly splendor of regal screw down labor to the point of starvation, spinning out, forging out, and working out the flesh and blood, the bodies and souls of her millions, to build up colossal fortunes and privileges for her capitalists and for her nobility!

The greenback, which saved the life of the nation when hard money had refused its aid, when capital hid itself, and when the rich stood aloof to speculate on chances, predicting ruin that they might profit by calamities—I say the greenback saved us then. It was the child of necessity; the offspring of the people crying to the people for its support. It saved the Government, it conquered the rebellion, it killed slavery. Then capital commenced cursing it. It said to gold, you deserted; you are a traitor; we will trust you no more. It grew in years, it grew in strength, it grew in public confidence; but as it grew capital slandered it, reviled it, hated it, and finally combined all its power and all the power of all monopolies of wealth to kill it. The people slowly, but clearly and intelligently, began to understand that the greenback was the nation; that it was not alone E Pluribus Unum in numbers, but that it combined all the elements of wealth, and power, and security which the people possessed; that it was the sovereign expression of sovereignty, and as such was beyond all the designs of capital, above all the power of corporation. In one word, it was the sovereign money of the sovereign people. Thus the greenback is the grandest discovery since the art of printing was discovered. It is the light to take the New World out of its Egyptian bondage to the old feudalties of money. It breaks the anchor which has so long made men slaves to the scarcity of gold. It is the new apostle for labor to place on the standard under which it marches its congregated hosts to the future, to independence, to just rewards, to homes, to education, and to that grandest of all equalities which awards no privileges, no monopolies, no exemptions, but which gives equal opportunities, equal protection, and equal means in all the rights, all the laws, all the lands, and all the privileges the Government can bestow.

The greenback is to labor what the steam engine is to locomotion. It leaves the past; it claims the future Labor as the motor and the greenback as the means and as the measure, will secure us a prosperity as brilliant as labor ever hoped, as glorious as industry can win, as evangelic as that fraternity which grows into life where men do unto others as they would that men should do unto them.

And again let it be repeated:

The sovereignty of the greenback is the sovereignty of labor; the sovereignty of banks, bonds and corporations is the sovereignty of capital. The first is liberty, comfort and independence; the second is the bondage of labor, the subjection of the people and the tyranny of an aristocracy of monopolists.

HILL ON HAYES.

A Scathing Review of the Administration—"Civil-Service" Dangers, and Failure to Meet Them—Perjury Elevated into a Virtue and Forgery into an Art.

Some months ago, Senator Hill, of Georgia, who was, upon Mr. Hayes' accession to office, so kindly disposed toward the President as to almost excite the suspicion of his Democratic constituents, published some rather caustic allusions to the President's civil-service policy. These remarks have been sharply commented upon by Northern journals. Mr. Hill, replying to a Georgia acquaintance, defends his accusation in the following letter:

ATLANTA, GA., Oct. 2, 1878.

MY DEAR SIR: In this day of much printing it is almost impossible to have one's opinions or motives correctly represented. I suppose it is because misrepresentation is so easy. I have never cast any "slurs upon the President." I have never expressed any "bitterness toward Mr. Hayes," because I have never felt any. I have never complained or indulged in any pique because Mr. Hayes did not appoint persons to office who were recommended by me. I have never recommended any. I have indorsed some applicants as qualified, and have greatly desired to see the civil service improved—especially in the South. I trust no man who knows me needs to be assured that in the discharge of my public duties I am incapable of being influenced by personal piques and disappointments. With me all personal feelings and relations, whether of friendship or otherwise, are subordinated to the public good. But I should be uncandid if I did not confess that I have been most grievously disappointed in both Mr. Hayes and his administration. If my grievance was only personal the world would never suspect it in my official conduct and opinions. It is because my grievance relates only to our national character and the public weal that I make known its existence, and will proceed to set forth briefly my reasons for it.

I believe that what is known as our "civil service" as it now exists, and has long existed, is a crime against popular government and civilization. I believe it has been the chief cause of many troubles and corruptions in the past, and if not thoroughly reformed will surely undermine and destroy our free institutions. I will not stop here to discuss the grounds of this belief. They have been long and well considered, and have produced absolute conviction. I always did abhor that old party slogan, "To the victors belong the spoils." It was never suited to any but bandits and plunderers, and was always disgraceful to men claiming to be patriots and statesmen. It reduces the science of government to the tricks of gamblers, the hypocrisy of demagogues and the blows of ruffians. I heard Mr. Hayes when, in his inaugural address, he announced his policy, or rather his purpose of civil-service reform. To say I was pleased would feebly express the truth. In spite of my conviction that he was not elected by the people, but owed his office to unmitigated frauds for which I believed he was not responsible, I felt willing to bury this last and greatest wrong with the many that had preceded it, and for which all sides were more or less responsible, and unite my humble efforts in support of a policy which, in my judgment, promised escape to our whole country from all such wrongs in the future.

What is spoken of as Mr. Hayes' Southern policy was of far less significance. The Southern policy was a necessity of the situation. Mr. Hayes had no power to avoid it. The end of carpet-bag plundering in the South and disgrace to the nation had come by events. Even Gen. Grant saw that the army could no longer be used to settle contested elections in the States and maintain robbers in power. But with our corrupt and ever-corrupting civil service the situation was different. This evil had its origin before the war. It had grown up under the nurture of the leaders of parties. It had pushed its brazen supporters and beneficiaries to the front seats of authority. It had grown and strengthened with every year, and seemed to have intrenched itself impregnably during Gen. Grant's administration. When, therefore, in the very day of its insolent power, in the very midst of its pampered courtiers, and on the very field of its greatest sway, Mr. Hayes announced in clear and unfaltering voice his purpose to strangle this hydra of many heads, he seemed to exhibit the courage, manliness and patriotism of one worthy to be President. This exhibition gave me high hopes of the man, and several early free and frank interviews which I felt encouraged to seek with him greatly strengthened and encouraged these hopes.

Now, my friend, it is the utter and sickening disappointment which these hopes have experienced, and nothing else, which has forced from me the few words to which you allude, and which have been falsely construed by Republican papers to express personal bitterness and hostility on my part toward President Hayes. In my opinion Mr. Hayes has utterly failed to improve—indeed, has strangely thrown away—an opportunity to make for himself a name worthy to be enrolled with that of Washington, because that opportunity improved would have conferred on his country a benefit equal to any conferred by Washington himself. He has failed because he has shown himself utterly unequal to his opportunity. He has shown himself unequal in that he has utterly failed to realize that the Chief Magistrate of a great country has no personal friends, no personal enemies, and owes no personal obligations, but is under obligations only to his country, and to that country's honor, glory, prosperity, constitution and laws. He has thrown away an opportunity to honor himself, and even his country, by recognizing an obligation to reward those who, by frauds most disgraceful to their country, gave him this opportunity. He has thrown away the grandest opportunity ever given to man, only that he might give offices to as worthless a set of rapscallions as ever disgraced humanity.

A man may become President by reason of a crime and yet himself not be tainted or even culpable. Twice, in our history, have men become Presidents by reason of crime. Andrew Johnson became President by reason of a wicked and foul assassination. Mr. Hayes became President by reason of a wicked and foul conspiracy to change, and which did change, the ballots of the people after those ballots had been cast. Yet each became President through the forms of the constitution and laws. How did Mr. Johnson deal with those who committed and who were charged with aiding to commit the crime by which he became President? He pursued them for punishment with such vigor that, as all the world now believes, an innocent woman was hanged! How has Mr. Hayes dealt with those who committed and those who were charged with aiding to commit the crime by which he became President? If you will examine the list from the humblest manager of the election precincts in Florida and Louisiana, through the visiting statesmen (as they are now in mockery called), and up to and through the Electoral Commission, and show me one, black or white, high or low, who is known to be guilty, or who is suspected of the guilt of this crime, who has not received or been offered an office, you will relieve to that extent the pain and mortification I feel in looking over these sickening developments.

There was a woman charged to be among the conspirators in both crimes. In Mr. Johnson's case Mrs. Surratt, protesting her innocence with an honest woman's tears and a devoted mother's entreaties, was chained and mocked and hung!

In Mr. Hayes case, Agnes Jenks, confessing her guilt in brazen gibberish never before equaled receives an office of good pay and little work in the treasury, and that, too, at a time when ladies of unquestioned worth, with hungry children, and husbands slain in battle, were rudely turned away with the gruff answer "no vacancies." If, instead of fleeing as a criminal, Wilkes Booth had sought the presence of Andrew Johnson as one who had rendered the latter good service, and Mr. Johnson had entertained him at the Executive Mansion and given him an office, what would the world have said? What would you say? Letters have been produced before the Potter committee, written by Republican members of Congress, which were written to Republican friends and not intended for publication, which strikingly exhibit the superior influence of Kellogg, Packard, Wells, and Anderson at the Executive Mansion. In other ways we know now that almost every person connected with the fraud has claimed or exercised special influence or favor at the White House. But the contrast may be stated in one short sentence:

In Mr. Johnson's case all the criminals, real or suspected, were specially marked for punishment. In Mr. Hayes' case all the criminals, real or suspected, were specially marked for reward.

I would be really glad if I could find some excuse, some apology or some palliation for the course Mr. Hayes has pursued in this matter. But, after full consideration, I can find none. It is no palliation to say that assassination was a greater crime than fraud. Both were crimes. If it is right to reward crime at all, then the greatest crimes should receive the highest rewards. You cannot produce innocence, much less merit, by grading crimes. All deserve punishment and none are entitled to reward. To reward fraud is a greater crime than to commit it, for the reward invites many commissions. If Andrew Johnson had rewarded Booth the whole world would have pronounced him a greater criminal than Booth. It is difficult to conceive of a greater crime than the defeat by fraud of the popular will in a government which rests on the popular will. If there be a greater crime it is committed by those who reward the authors of such fraud, for such reward invites the perpetual defeat of the popular will, and, therefore, a direct subversion of the Government, and assumes the most insidious form of treason. It is worse than no excuse—it is itself a crime to say that Mr. Hayes was under obligations to these authors of fraud. If there had been no assassin Booth there would have been no President Johnson. But was the President, therefore, under obligation to the assassin? If there had been no frauds in Florida and Louisiana there would have been no President Hayes. Is the President, therefore, under obligation to all who helped to commit the fraud? It seems that all have claimed reward.

It is no apology to say that Mr. Hayes did not believe these people were guilty of any fraud. It was his duty to protect the character of the nation and the integrity of the administration. He can do neither by placing great numbers of men in office who are charged with crimes and whom largely more than half of the people believe are guilty. In truth, I do not believe any intelligent man doubts their guilt. But I trust we have in this country a sufficient number of men of unsuspected honesty to fill the offices, and both the public character and the public interests require that only such men should be appointed. Besides, if these men were in truth innocent they would not have asked or accepted office from Mr. Hayes, for they would not have been willing to bring weakness upon the administration or disrepute upon the civil service. Their universal and brazen demands for office is the highest proof of their guilt, for it shows they care nothing for Mr. Hayes—nothing for the honor of the country—nothing for the good repute of the civil service. Their every act in pressing for office shows that reward was their object, and reward they must have. Every man of the guilty gang who has not been satisfied with the office offered him has confessed the frauds. Every man who has not confessed the frauds has been kept satisfied with office. Why should he confess whose confession would defeat his reward? How does it happen that those only are not entitled to belief who confess the frauds? And how does it happen that the credit of none was denied until after confession was made?

It is no palliation now to say that the larger number of these appointments were made by certain members, or by a member of the Cabinet. If Mr. Johnson had made Wilkes Booth a member of his Cabinet he could not have complained if Booth had provided places for his tools and subordinates. Nevertheless, if, when the revelations on this subject were made before the Potter committee, Mr. Hayes had promptly ordered a sweeping purgation for the civil service of those obnoxious characters, as I greatly hoped he would do, he would have been largely vindicated. Instead, however, of dismissing any he appointed more, and some of the appointments seemed to have the special purpose of suppressing or affecting testimony before the committee. If anything were wanting to increase the wicked heinousness of the frauds upon the ballots in Florida and Louisiana it will be found in the only excuse which the authors and abettors of these frauds have offered for their perpetration. It must never be forgotten that the great facts are not denied, but admitted—to wit, that the ballots were changed after they were cast, and the verdict of the people reversed after it had been rendered and was known. The excuse for this, as alleged, is that there were intimidations at the precincts which prevented a free expression by the people. If this excuse is false in fact, then the crime stands confessed without excuse. Those of us who have been familiar with carpet-bag villainies knew from the first that the excuse was false; but the proof now revealed abundantly shows that the excuse is not only false, but was actually manufactured for the express purpose of a cover for the fraud. Thus the excuse itself becomes part of the fraud, and the most infamous part of it. Not only was the excuse itself manufactured, but the evidence to make the excuse deceive the Northern people was also manufactured in the Custom House in New Orleans and elsewhere. Forgeries are shown to have been numerous, and perjuries were secured under promises of reward. In this vile work men holding high positions took active part, and every one who took such part has received high office from Mr. Hayes, and has thus been enabled to become himself a dispenser of rewards to his subordinates.

Take it all in all—its origin, its extent, its wicked adroitness, its deliberation, the variety of characters engaged, its numberless perjuries and reckless forgeries, its marvelous success and its absolute control of a great government of unequaled patronage for its reward—and it must be confessed that the Presidential fraud of 1876 is without a parallel in any history. It dwarfs all other frauds, conspiracies and robberies into comparative insignificance. If allowed to go unpunished it will elevate perjury into a virtue, forgery into an art, and will reduce usurpation to a science!

It has given me no pleasure to write this letter. I have been slow and reluctant to give up the hopes I had formed of this administration. I am not willing even now to discredit my own judgment of men so far as to admit that my first impressions of Mr. Hayes were altogether incorrect. I prefer to believe, and do believe, that he has fallen under the control of men who were deeply involved in the guilt of this fraud, and whose power over him he has not been able to resist. Even now, if he would purge his administration of every person connected with the frauds he might yet rally good men to his support and close his term of service with something of benefit to this country and respect for himself. But I fear the serpents of fraud have their coils so wrapped around him that he is unable and may have become unwilling to release himself. There is but one more step between our free institutions and destruction. The Government has become indentified with fraud, and is administered by the authors of fraud. If the people shall fail to repudiate the fraud and its authors, abettors and rewarders, then we shall have entered upon that phase of our career when the offices and immense patronage of this richest of countries will take the form of glittering prizes offered to induce the commission of crimes against the popular will. Assassins will be made heroes, and the greatest criminals will become most entitled to enjoy the honors and live on the benefactions of government. Beyond that, the man who talks of the safety and purity of popular governments will be a lunatic. Your friend,

BENJAMIN H. HILL.

The Biter Bitten.

In trying to be a biter, Mr. Moens, of Boston, was bitten. He met Andrew Bressant, who carried a bag and seemed to be crazy. Bressant talked senselessly, and showed that the bag contained gold coin—$5,000, he said. This money he wanted to leave with Moens for safe keeping, but demanded $900 in paper money as security. Moens, ready to take advantage of the supposed maniac, gave the $900 and took the bag, which he afterward found to contain very little coin and a great deal of lead.

GOV. TILDEN'S DISCLAIMER.

Denial that He Either Sent, Received, or Authorized Those Cipher Telegrams—His Election Confessed by Self-Con[illegible] Participants in the Fraud—A Fixed [illegible] of His Part Never to Descend to an Ignominious Competition for Carpet-Bag Favors—His Nomination and His Triumph Unbought and Himself Untrammeled.

I have read the publications in the New York Tribune of the 8th inst., purporting to be translations of cipher telegrams relating to the canvass of the votes in Florida, at the Presidential election of 1876, and have looked over those printed in the Tribune of this morning relating to the canvass in South Carolina. I have no knowledge of the existence of these telegrams, nor any information about them, except what has been derived from or since the publications of the Tribune. So much for these telegrams generally. I shall speak yet more specifically as to some of them.

1. As to those which relate to the offer purporting to have been made in behalf of some member of the State Board of Canvassers of Florida, to give, for pecuniary compensation, certificates to the Democratic electors who had been actually chosen, none of these telegrams, nor any telegram communicating such offer, or relating to such offer, was seen by me, translated to me, or the contents of it in any manner made known to me. I had no knowledge of the existence or purport of any telegram relating to that subject. Nor did I learn the fact that such offer of the Florida certificates had been made until long after the 6th of December, at which time the certificates were delivered and the electoral votes cast, and when the information casually reached me, as of a past event, it was accompanied by the statement that the offer had been rejected.

2. As to the publications in the Tribune of this morning purporting to be translations of cipher telegrams, relating to the canvass of the votes in South Carolina in 1876, which I have seen since I wrote the foregoing, I can speak of them no less definitely and positively. Not one such telegram, either in cipher or translated, was ever shown to or its contents made known to me. No offer or negotiation in behalf of the State Canvassers of South Carolina, or any of them, or any dealing with any of them in respect to certificates or to electors, was ever authorized or sanctioned in any manner by me directly or through any other person. I will add that no offer to give the certificates of any Returning Board or State Canvassers of any State to the Democratic electors, in consideration of promises of office or money or property; no negotiation of that nature in behalf of any member of such board or with any such member; no attempt to influence the action of any such member, or to influence the action of any elector of President and Vice President by such motives, was ever entertained, considered, or tolerated by me, or by anybody within my influence, by my consent or with my knowledge or acquiescence. No such contemplated transaction could at any time have come within the range of my power without that power being instantly used to crush it out. A belief was doubtless current that the certificates from the State of Florida conforming to the actual vote of the people were in the market.

"I have not the slightest doubt in the world," said Mr. Saltonstall, who was in Florida at the time, in a recent interview with the Herald "that that (Florida) vote could have been bought, if Mr. Tilden had been dishonorable enough to desire it done, for a great deal less than $50,000 or $20,000." It was known that either one of the two members who composed the majority of the Florida State Canvassers could control its action and give certificates to the Democrats. Either one of them could settle the Presidential controversy in favor of the Democratic candidates, who lacked but one vote. How accessible to venal inducements they were is shown by the testimony of McLin, Chairman of the Board of State Canvassers, in his examination before the Potter committee in June last. He admitted that the true vote of the people of Florida was in favor of the Democratic electors, and that fact even appeared on the face of the county returns, including among them the true return from Baker county, notwithstanding the great frauds against the Democrats in some county returns. He also confessed that in voting to give the certificates to the Republican electors he acted under the influence of promises that he should be rewarded in case "Mr. Hayes became President," adding that "certainly these promises must have had a strong control over my judgment and action." After the certificates of the Louisiana Returning Board had been repeatedly offered to Mr. Hewitt and others for money, they were given in favor of the Republican electors who had been rejected by a large majority of voters, and the members of this Returning Board now possess the most important Federal offices in that State.

The pregnant fact always remains that none of these corrupt boards gave their certificates to the Democratic electors, but they all did give them to the Republican electors. I had a perfectly-fixed purpose, from which I never deviated in word or act—a purpose which was known to, or assumed by, all with whom I was in habitual communication. If the Presidency of the United States was to be disposed of by certificates to be won from corrupt Returning Boards by any form of venal inducements, whether of offices or money, I was resolved to take no part in the shameful competition, and I took none. The main interest of the victory which resulted in my election was the expectation that through the Chief Magistracy a system of reforms similar to that which had been accomplished in our metropolis and in our State administration would be achieved in the Federal Government. For this object it was necessary that I should be untrammeled by any commitment in the choice of men to execute the official trusts of the Government, and untrammeled by any obligation to special interests. I had been nominated and I was elected without one limitation upon my perfect independence. To have surrendered or compromised the advantages of this position by a degrading competition for Returning-Board certificates would have been to abandon all that made victory desirable—everything which could have sustained me in the larger struggle which that victory would have imposed upon me. I was resolved to go into the Presidential chair in full command of all my resources for usefulness or not at all. While thus abstaining from the ignominious competition for such certificates I saw those certificates obtained for the Republican electors who had not been chosen by the people, and denied to the Democratic electors who had been chosen by the people. These false and fraudulent certificates, now confessed and proved to have been obtained by corrupt inducements, were made the pretext for taking from the people their rightful choice for the Presidency and Vice Presidency. Those certificates were declared by the tribunal to which Congress had abdicated the function of deciding the count of disputed electoral votes to be the absolute and indisputable conveyance of the title to the Chief Magistracy of the nation. The State of Florida, which had united all her executive, legislative and judicial powers to testify to Congress long before the count who were her genuine agents; which had by statute caused a recanvass, the issue of new certificates, and the formal sovereign authentication of the right of the true electors to deposit their votes to be counted, was held to be incapable of communicating to Congress a fact which everybody then knew and which cannot now be disputed.

Congress, though vested by the constitution with authority to count the electoral votes; though unrestricted either as to the time when it should receive the evidence, or as to the nature of that evidence, and though subject to no appeal from its decision, was declared to have no power to guide its own count by any information it could obtain, or by any authority which it might accept from a wronged and betrayed State whose vote was about to be falsified.

The monstrous conclusion was thus reached that the act of one man holding the deciding vote in the Board of State Canvassers (for without his concurrence the frauds of the other Returning Boards would have failed), in giving certificates known at the time, and now by himself confessed to be false and fraudulent, and confessed to have been obtained by promises of office—certificates whose character was known months before Congress could begin the count—must prevail over all the remedial powers of the State of Florida and the Congress of the United States combined, and must dispose of the Chief Magistracy of this republic. Ten Rules for Poultry Novices.

[Burlington Hawkeye.]

1. Wait until the moon goes down before purchasing your chickens. Pullets are always cheaper in the dusky hours that precede the dawn

2. If you buy fancy eggs for hatching, do not buy any that were picked last fall "Hope springs eternal in the human breast," but an egg stays right by the date of its birth, and is twenty-four hours older and poorer at each succeeding sunset.

3. Always consult the hen's convenience in the matter of setting. Do not insist on her breaking any other engagements, or putting off baking or ironing day, for the purpose of taking charge of thirteen eggs, of unknown sex or quality. Better, far better, that you should give up society and set on those eggs yourself, rather than intrust them to a reluctant and dissembling hen. You might break the eggs, but the fickle hen would break for the verbena bed the first thing in the morning.

4. Build your nests wide enough for a cow to turn around in. If the nest has an all out door, illimitable-waste kind of a look to it, where one hen will feel so lonesome and lost that she will wail and squawk with terror every time she looks around and feels the burden of her loneliness upon her, all the wealth of the Incas wouldn't induce another hen to go in and keep her company or gossip with her until bed-time. But if you make a nest just big enough for one lean hen to squeeze into without breathing, the nine biggest hens in your flock will fight for that nest, and all crowd into it at the same time, flatten out all the eggs, and then with gloomy but patient countenances, and their several heads turned in nine different directions, they will sit on the cold ashes of shattered ambition and wrecked dreams for the next four months.

5. Sprinkle sulphur in the nests before the hen is allowed to enter upon the performance of her incubation contract. The smell of the sulphur will prevent the hen from imbibing the pernicious doctrines of Ingersoll, and will prevent her from assuming too much, under the impression that a hen that can produce a diurnal egg, and from that evolve a living, breathing, scratching chicken, could, if she would put her mind to it, create a universe, and people its planets with races of lying, thieving, swearing men.

6. Boost the hen off the nest once a day for exercise. Too much sentiment and reflection, and excess of self-communion, is apt too make the hen moody and low-spirited. Point her to the dreadful effects of too long continued and unbroken exertion of the brain, as shown in the sad fate of Sergeant Bates and Dennis Kearney.

7. About the time the young chicks are coming out borrow a shot-gun and tell your neighbor some scoundrel is shooting cats, and last night he killed a cat that belonged to your wife that you wouldnt have taken $50 for. This will pave the way for future developments. A successful hennery is fatal to cats. A brood of thrifty, contented young chicks is an infallible evidence that you can't shut your eyes and stick a spade into the ground any-where in that precinct without disturbing the eternal rest of some cat that has taken parlors on the ground floor of the windowless palace of rest.

8. If you have no grass plots or kitchen garden or pansy beds for your chickens to range in, cut a hole low down in the fence so as to let your chicks in on your neighbor. It will be perfectly safe since the loss of his cat. If he says anything about chickens, tell him that you told Forsman (the other neighbor) that if he wanted to raise chickens he must do as you do, and keep them shut up. Do not give your chicks unbridled liberty, for sometimes a brood of healthy chicks go out in the morning when the dew on the onion tops glitters in the sunshine, and like the baseless fabric of a vision, they pass away, and like the stuff that dreams are made of, leave not a track behind, and all the tears that your burning eyes can shed over the legs, and claws and heads you find in the alley will not call them back.

9. In raising fowls for the market, remember there is the greatest danger of sending them out in immature state. Chickens are not healthful food; nor do they contain any of the perfect elements of nutrition, until they are fully and completely developed physically. Keep them about you, then, while panting time toils after them in vain. Life is at best but a walking shadow, and your chicks should have at least eleven years of home care and training before they rest their heads for one brief second on the chopping block, and go to grace the table of the happy boarding-house. For any further and more specific information on this subject send three-cent stamp and your address.

A Leetle too Modest.

A lady on the north-side wishing to test the merits of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup thought it would never do to ask the druggist in the name of "Bull." Why, dear me, she couldn't say Bull to save her life, and called at last on a neighbor woman for suggestions on the matter. Dr. Cow's, Dr. Calf's, Dr. Buffalo's and Dr. Oxen's Syrup were mentioned. The latter suited. Yes, that will do—Dr. Oxen—the very thing, the druggist will understand that." A walk of two squares found her at the counter of Dr. H——'s store, when the following dialogue occurred:

"Dr. Oxen, Oxen, why, mam, I don't believe I keep that. You mean Cox's Hive Syrup, don't you?"

"Oh, no, I mean, mean Dr. Oxen, and" then she seemed wrapped in solemn thought for a moment, when a bright idea seemed to set forth. "Has'nt Dr. Oxen got a relation or——"

"Oh, yes, you mean Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, yes, yes." The lady sat down a moment and all was over. (Indianapolis Exch.)

At a recent discussion meeting held by negroes, the question of the evening was: "Which am de mudder ob de chicken—de hen wot lay de egg, or de hen wot hatches de chickens?" The question was warmly debated and many reasons pro and con were urged and combated, when a shrewed fellow put the case thus: "S'pose dat you set one dozen duck's eggs under a hen, and dey hatch, which am de mudder—de duck or de hen?" This was a poser; but the chairman extricated them from the difficulty. Rising from his chair in all the pride of conscious superiority, he announced: "Ducks am not before the house; chickens am the question, therefore I rule de ducks out." And so he did, to the complete overthrow of those who held a different opinion.

THE TINIEST OF BABES.

Heads of Tea-Cup Size and Limbs Like Pipe-Stems—Sisters of Eight and Six Years Weighing Eleven and Ten Pounds Apiece—Curious Dwarfs in Berks County.

[Philadelphia Record.]

Peter B. Shearer has two of the most remarkable children in the country. He dwells at Stonersville, a little, straggling village, ten miles nearer Philadelphia than Reading. His house is a plain, two-story frame, and Mr. Shearer turns an honest penny in the blacksmith profession. The agents of show people have become so annoying to the Shearers that the father of the wonderful offspring keeps a gun on hand loaded with salt, to give a warm reception to those who call to secure the children for exhibition purposes.

The blacksmith is a stalwart man of about thirty-eight, with black hair and beard and dark eyes. His wife, and the mother, is a well developed, healthy woman. The Record reporter found two little cradles in Shearer's neatly furnished house. They were half as long as ordinary cradles, and looked as if one of full growth had been cut in half and remounted on seperate rockers. They were little, old fashioned affairs, brown in color, with the varnish well worn off. Each contained a "babe." The father raised one of the children to his lap and the mother the other. Strange-looking little people, dwarfs, thin and pale and mere shadows of children. The father held the eldest, and called her "Dilly," for short. She is eight years old and weighs about eleven pounds. Blind and dumb, and just able to stand alone, she is indeed an object of pity. The little dwarf is about thirty inches tall, yet her lower limbs are as thin as an ordinary cane and her head about the size of a tea-cup.

"Can she hear?" was asked the father.

"Oh, yes; just listen." He gave "Dilly" to the mother's care, and stepped into an adjoining room. An organ stood there. The father played a lively air; and the first few bars set the little ones to jumping and smiling.

When Dilly was born she weighed about a pound. When she was a year old she could cover her head entirely with an ordinary tea-cup. She was blind all the time. This little dwarf has a luxuriant growth of silken blonde hair that decends to her shoulders. A pretty set of teeth is in her mouth. The eight-year-old child does not look to be over eight months.

Just here a very healthy young boy entered the room. He is about sixteen years old, full-breasted, square shouldered, erect, full of life, with great dark eyes and ruddy cheeks. "This is one of our children," said the father, "and here is another, younger than the dwarfs." A little boy came tripping into the room, full of mischief, stout, hearty, robust and of full growth for his years

"You see," continued Mr. Shearer, "we have children older and younger than these two, who are in every way healthy and of natural development. The younger of the dwarfs is six years old and her weight is a pound lighter than her sister's. We tie them to small scales and weigh them once a year, on their birthday. They appear to grow in length, but not much in weight They did not increase three pounds in three years. Why just look at their arms and fingers; just like shadows, and fingers less in thickness than pipe-stems. Occasionally they are quite cross, but their time is principally passed in sleeping. They are as healthy now as most children, yet they do not grow. They can not walk, nor see, nor talk, and in nearly all respects are helpless."

Mrs. Shearer was in perfect health prior to the birth of the first child, but there had been scarlet fever in the family and several of their children died. Prior to the birth of the second dwarf, the mother had her diminutive child with her all the time, The next child born was as healthy as any child possibly could be

The children have the appearance of idiots. Their foreheads are very much depressed, the top of their heads being very small. The eldest child has the look of a person fifty years of age, while Virginia, the younger dwarf, has a pleasant countenance, like that of an infant. She, too, has a full set of teeth.

NOTICE

TO CONSUMERS

—OF—

LORILLARD Tobacco

The great celebrity of our tin tag tobacco has caused many immitations thereof to be placed on the market, we therefore caution all chewers against purchasing such immitations.

All dealers buying or selling other plug tobacco bearing a hard or metalic label, render themselves liable to the penalty of the law, and all persons violating our trade marks are punishable by fine and imprisonment. See act of congress, Aug. 14, 1876.

Taxes paid Gov't in 1877 about 3,400,000, and during past 12 years, over 20,000,000.

Abolish the Army.

Thirdly—For its Menace to Liberty.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: The present regular army of the United States is dangerous to the stability of the American Government, and should be abolished as soon as possible. If it be not abolished at the next session of Congress, we may see Grant in the White House for life in 1880. If it be abolished, the United States will return to its normal condition, as in the long period of peace and prosperity in 1861. There is no time so appropriate as the next session to do this work, and if it be not done then, we may never again have the chance to do it.

As long as we had no permanent army, that is, up to the period of the Mexican war, the American Government was free and liberal, the people happy and contented. What followed the increase of the American regulars after the Mexican war? For the first time in American history the Cabinet in power attempted to oppress the people by means of the regular army, and slavery was forced for a while on Kansas by the bayonets of United States troops dispersing the State Legislature July 4, 1856. This attempt at tyranny inaugurated the troubles that ended in the civil war, and it was the party that had used the army to oppress the people of Kansas that was destroyed in that civil war. Remember that the cases were very simillar in 1856 and 1876. In Kansas it became necessary for the party in power to force a hated Constitution on an unwilling people, and the regulars were the only troops that could be trusted to execute such a policy. In 1876 it became necessary for the party in power to force a cheating usurper on an unwilling House of Representatives. Once more the regulars were brought forward, and they subdued the representatives of the people by exciting groundless fears. There is no instance in American history where the regulars have been used in civil affairs, except on the side of fraud and injustice, and wherever they have appeared it has been with effects baneful to liberty.

It is only since the traditions now obtaining in the army were started that the regulars have been used to control politics. Before the Kansas imbroglio United States troops were never seen near towns at elections, and their presence was jealously resented if too frequent at other times. Since the civil war, however this has been all changed. Regular officers, sentries, and patrols have been common sights south of Mason and Dixon's line. The men have been always employed for the same purposes, entirely foreign to the character of a soldier. They have acted as spies, detectives, thief catchers, revenue agents, anything and everything except soldiers. But the object of the Military Ring at Washington has been attained all the same. The uniform of the regulars has become a familiar sight in the South.

The next point to be gained is to make the North equally famillar with the regulars, who, before 1861, were seldom or never seen in uniform east of the Missouri, except in the seacoast forts. This has been accomplished during Grant's last term and since the opening of Hayes' era of fraud and force. It began with the assembling at Washington at the close of 1876 of troops to overawe the House of Representatives. These troops had many dandy officers who had a strong influence on the female element in Washington society, and whose duty it was to make the army pleasant to the world at large. While the officers cajoled the women, the women imposed on the men who sat in Congress; and the result was, as in all cases where an imposing sham is required, the regular army did most successful duty. The scene at Washington was only a repetition of what had already been enacted at Columbia and New Orleans, but it was carrying the principle further North.

The next instance of encroachment is found a few months after the triumph of fraud. United States regulars had overawed the South and Washington; it was necessary to carry them a litte further North. The pretext was found in the railway riots of 1877. Be it remembered that it was the Republican Hartranft and Republican Pennsylvania who had allowed their militia to fall into a state of such miserable inefficiency that a whole division was beaten by a mob, and it was to Pennsylvania that we are indebted for the presence of the regulars in the Northern States at their old work overawing discontented people.

A great deal of sarcasm has been wasted on the conduct of the Philadelphia militia at Pittsburgh, but be it remembered that at last they fought and lost men, green and unpracticed troops as they were, while the regulars never made their appearance till the trouble was over and did not engage in any conflict. It is only fair to expect, judging from the history of the regulars in 1861, that had the rioters been really in earnest and bent on fighting as they were in the South, the regulars would have surrendered as tamely as they did then. For this is the distinguishing characteristic of our present force of regulars, so called. As long as the matter is confined to threats and show of force they are in their element, but when actual conflict arrives they have always been wanting as a class. This was shown at Pittsburgh by the Federal Major Buffington, who actually refused to receive the wounded men of Brinton's militia to save them from pursuit of the rioters, for fear it might bring him into conflict with what he saw was a real danger. Yet Administration papers call Brinton incapable, and fail to censure the prudent Buffington.

But this is all of a piece with the rest. Hartranft is a Grant man, who allows the Pennsylvania militia to fall into an unserviceable condition, so as to get an excuse to call in the regulars. The only States in the Union to-day that have a serviceable militia are New York New Jersey and Connecticut, all Democratic for some years, and it is under the rule of Democratic Governors that each has formed its local forces. If every State had followed their example, we need not fear the regulars; but, alas, since the close of the civil war the militia of every Republican State has been allowed to go to rack and ruin, so as to give Governors an excuse to call in regulars to suppress riots.

The danger is not fancitul, is not far off. It is on us and threatening us more and more daily. The House of Representatives submitted to be overawed in 1877 by the army, and failed to stick to its colors about refusing the army its pay. During that summer the railroad hands were systematically goaded and irritated by the authorities of the Republican belt of States into riots, which were made an excuse to call in regulars "to quell the mob." The Democratic State of New York saw no serious riots, and put down what troubles existed by its own local militia—the proper weapon when police fails. But the beginning has been made, and United States troops have been employed to regulate affairs in several Northern States, while not one of the States alarmed last year has taken measures to improve its militia. All the officers of the good old militia regiment in Philadelphia recently resigned in disgust because they found that there was no hope of reform in their division. The inference of this fact is plain, Gov. Hartranft has been a soldier and knows his business; he knows the defects of his militia and the way to remedy them; but he is a Republican and a Grant man; he longs for the man on horseback and a big army of "professional soldiers." Therefore he deliberately allows his State militia to decay, so that he may call in the regulars again if need be.

Militia and volunteers cannot be used against the liberties of the people. Regulars are good for nothing else but to oppress citizens. Abolish the army!

Death of English Kings.

[Irish World.]

William Rufus died the death of the poor stags which he hunted.

Henry I. died of gluttony.

Richard Cour de Leon, like the animal from which his heart was named, died by an arrow from an archer.

John died, nobody knows how; but it is said from chagrin, which we suppose is another term for a dose of hellebore.

Henry III. is said to have died a "natural death."

Edward I. is also said to have died of a "natural sickness"—a sickness which would puzzle all the college of physicians to denominate.

Edward II. was most barbarously and indecently murdered by ruffians employed by his own wife and her paramour.

Edward III. died of dotage, and Richard II. of starvation—the very reverse of George IV.

Henry IV. is said to have died of "fits caused by uneasiness;" and uneasiness in palaces in those times was a very common complaint.

Henry V. is said to have died of "a painful affliction, permaturely." This is a courtly term for getting rid of a king.

Henry VI. died in prison, by means known then only to his jailor, and now known only to heaven.

Richard III. was killed in battle.

Henry VII. wasted away, as a miser ought to.

Henry VIII. died of carbuncles, fat and fury.

Edward VI. died of a decline.

Queen Mary is said to have died of a broken heart.

Old Queen Bess is said to have died of melancholy, from having sacrificed Essex to his enemies.

James I. died of drinking and the effects of vice.

Charles I. died on the scaffold.

Charles II. died suddenly—it is said of apoplexy.

William III. died of consumptive habits of body, and from the stumbling of his horse.

Queen Anne died of dropsy.

George II. died of a rupture of the heart, which the periodicals of that day termed a visitation of God.

George III. died as he had lived—a madman. Throughout life he was at least a consistent monarch.

George IV died of gluttony and drunkenness.

What a Gentleman May Do, and What He May Not Do.

He may carry a brace of patridges but not a leg of mutton.

He may dust another person's jacket, but musn't brush his own.

He may kill a man in a duel, but he musn't eat pears with a knife.

He may thrash a coalheaver, but he musn't ask twice for soup.

He must pay his debts of honor, but he needn't trouble himself about his tradesmen's bills.

He may ride a horse as a jockey, but he musn't exert himself in the least to get his living.

He must never forget what he owes to himself as a gentleman, but he need not mind what he owes as a gentleman to his tailor.

He may do anything, or anybody, in fact, within the range of a gentleman—go through the insolvent debtor's court, or turn billiard-marker; but he must never on any account carry a brown paper parcel, or appear in the streets without a pair of gloves.

NOTICE.

The undersigned has sold out his harness shop to A. C Smith; would request all persons knowing themselves endebted to me either by note or account to call at my office and settle. Office in shop—business days Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays of each week.

THE SUN FOR 1879.

THE SUN will be printed every day during the year to come. Its purpose and method will be the same as in the past: To present all the news in a readable shape, and to tell the truth though the heavens fall.

THE SUN has been, is, and will continue to be independent of everybody and everything save the truth and its own convictions of duty. That is the only policy which an honest newspaper need have. That is the policy which has won for this newspaper the confidence and friendship of a wider constituency than was ever enjoyed by any other American Journal.

THE SUN is the newspaper for the people. It is not for the rich man against the poor man, but it seeks to do equal justice to all interests in the community. It is not the organ of any person, class, sect or party. There need be no mystery about its loves and hates. It is for the honest man against the rogue every time. It is for the honest democrat as against the dishonest republican, and for the honest republican as against the dishonest democrat. It does not take its cue from the utterance of any politician or political organization. It gives its support unreservedly when men or measures are in agreement with the Constitution and with the principles upon which this Republic was founded for the people. Whenever the Constitution and constitutional principles are violated—as in the outrageous conspiracy of 1876, by which a man not elected was placed in the President's office, where he still remains—it speaks out for right. That is THE SUN's idea of independence. In this respect there will be no change in its programme for 1879.

THE SUN has fairly earned the hearty hatred of rascals, frauds and humbugs of all sorts and sizes. It hopes to deserve that hatred not less in the year 1879, than in 1878, 1877 or any other year gone by. THE SUN will continue to shine on the wicked with unmitigated brightness.

While lessons of the past should be constantly kept before the people, THE SUN does not propose to make itself in 1879 a magazine of ancient history. It is printed for the men and women of to-day, whose concern is chiefly of to-day. It has both the disposition and the ability to afford its readers the promptest, fullest and most accurate intelligence of whatever in the wide world is worth attention. To this end the resources belonging to well-established prosperity will be liberally employed.

The present disjointed condition of parties in this country, and the uncertainty of the future, lend an extraordinary significance to the events of the coming year. The discussions of press, the debates and acts of Congress, and the movements of the leaders in every section of the Republic will have a direct bearing on the Presidential election of 1880—an event which must be regarded with the most anxious interest by every patriotic American whatever his political ideas or allegiance. To these elements may be added the probability that the democrats will control both houses of Congress, the increasing feebleness of the fraudulent administration, and the spread and strengthing everywhere of a healthy abhorance of fraud in any form. To present with accuracy and clearness the exact situation in each of its varying phases and to expound according to its well known methods, the principles that should guide us through the labyrinth, will be an important part of THE SUN's work for 1879.

We have the means of making THE SUN, as a political, a literary and a general newspaper, more interesting and more useful than ever before; and we mean to apply them freely.

Our rates of subscription remain unchanged. For the DAILY SUN, a four page sheet of twenty eight columns, the price by mail post paid, is 55c a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight page sheet of fifty-six columns, is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year postpaid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages fifty-six columns, is $1.00 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10.00 we will send an extra copy free. Address,

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE most stupendous bank robbery that has startled the country for many a day occurred in New York city on the morning of Sunday, Oct. 27. Between 6 and 9 o'clock of that morning masked burglars entered the Manhattan Savings Bank building, at the corner of Broadway and Bleecker street, and, after handcuffing the janitor, made him, under threats of instant death, reveal the combination of the safe to them, and deliver up the keys of the bank. They then proceeded to rifle the vault of nearly everything it contained, consisting of about $3,000,000 in cash, securities and jewelry. The property lost, nearly all of which stands in the bank's name, and is therefore not negotiable, consists almost entirely of United States bonds and local securities, only $11,000 in cash being secured by the robbers.

THE gigantic Manhattan Bank robbery is the sensation in New York banking circles. It is considered as remarkable that this particular bank could been so successfully robbed. The institution is situated in the most thronged part of the city, two blocks from police headquarters. The locality is generally frequented at all hours of the night, but the burglary did not occur till daylight. Two watchmen and a janitor are employed at the bank. The watchmen left at 6, and the janitor was then to come down from overhead and look after things. The latter was handcuffed before leaving his dressing-room. The janitor, a simple old German, held the combination key to the safe. The reason the burglars could not be seen was because they worked inside the vault with the outside door closed. There are large glass doors and windows to the bank, and passers could see the whole interior from two streets—Broadway and Bleecker.

L. D. SMALL & Co., provision and cheese merchants, New York, have failed. Liabilities between $150,000 and $200,000, of which $85,000 is secured.

ISAAC GEHRIS, Keeley Hagy, Casper Claby and John Quick were precipitated down the shaft of a coal mine at Boyestown, Pa. The last three were killed, and Gehris received injuries from which he will probably die.

THE WEST.

INTELLIGENCE has reached Omaha that the entire band of renegade Cheyennes has been captured, together with a considerable amount of live stock. Capt. Johnson, of the Third Cavalry Battalion, is entitled to the credit of the capture....The creditors of the large dry-goods firm of Dodd, Brown & Co., who recently failed, have granted concessions which will enable the house to resume business.

PROVOST, the fiend who was arrested for the murder of the Vacelet family, near Vincennes, Ind., committed suicide in his cell, in the Vincennes jail, by hanging himself with a towel.

THE Cincinnati Enquirer publishes statistics and approximate estimates of the corn crop for 1878 as follows: In 51 counties in Ohio the number of acres planted is 1,985,000. The yield in bushels is 63,895,000, being an increase over last year of about 1,500,000 bushels. In 48 counties of Indiana the number of acres planted is 2,028,000. The yield in bushels is 48,920,000, being about 2,000,000 decrease. In 10 counties in Kentucky the number of acres planted is 129,000. The yield in bushels is 3,000,000, being 300,000 decrease.

THE twelfth annual reunion of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee was held at Indianapolis last week. There was an attendance of over 100 members, but, aside from Gen. Sherman, few notables were present.

AN international commercial convention will meet in Chicago on Tuesday, the 12th of November. The object of the convention is to consider means to extend the growing trade of the Northwest with foreign countries in North and South America. The President of the United States and Governors of all the States have been invited to attend. Many distinguished people will doubtless be present.

THE SOUTH.

SOME 400 small illicit distillers in the mountains of North Carolina have promised, if the Government will relieve them from prosecution, to refrain from all violations of the revenue laws in future.

THE yellow fever is dying out in the South, and refugees are returning home by the thousands. The Memphis local physicians are now attending to the few remaining cases in that city, and the relief committee has closed out its charitable work. The Peabody Subsistence Association of New Orleans has taken similar action. In the interior towns of the Lower Mississippi valley a similar encouraging state of affairs is reported, the cold weather seeming to have checked the march of the pestilence everywhere.

A MEMPHIS telegram says: "The Citizens' Relief Committee are busily engaged in settling up the affairs of the organization. The receipts of money from the North during the summer the Treasurer estimates at $60,000, of which $40,000 has been expended, leaving a blance of $20,000 to be distributed among the impoverished orphan asylums."

A MEMPHIS telegram says a revised list of those who died and are convalescent in each of the newspaper offices has been prepared, and shows the following sad record: In the Appeal office nineteen died, twenty-one are convalescent, and two escaped. In the Avalanche there have been thirteen deaths, ten are convalescent, and five were not attacked. In the Ledger office but one escaped, four deaths occurred, and nine employes survived the attack, and are again at the cases.

GENERAL.

THE Fenian Brotherhood have abolished the office of Head Center, whose duties will devolve upon a General Secretary, under the supervision of a Central Council. This action is said to have been the recommendation of James Stevens, ex-Chief of the Brotherhood, and soon again to assume the direction.

THE steamship City of Houston, from New York to Galveston, Texas, foundered off Frying Pan shoals, during the recent terrific gale. The passengers and crew were rescued, and landed at Fernandina, Fla. The steamer Gen. Barnes, from Savannah for New York, was lost in the same storm. Fortunately, as in the case of the City of Houston, her passengers and crew were all saved.

THE little Arctic schooner Florence, commanded by Capt. Tyson, which was supposed to have been lost, has arrived safely at Provincetown, Mass., though in a badly leaking condition.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says the opinion is entertained at the legations in that city that war between England and Russia cannot now be avoided, nor very long delayed. As to the complications likely to arise, the opinion was further expressed that indications under the surface of affairs all point strongly toward a general European war.

THE letter of Secretary Evarts to Minister Welsh on the Newfoundland fishery squabble has been given to the public, and from its tone it looks as if the administration had about decided not to pay the money appropriated at the last session of Congress to pay the Halifax award when it falls due, namely, the 23d of November. The letter is dated Sept. 28, and is in reply to a dispatch from Lord Salisbury, inclosing a report of one Capt. Sullivan on the Fortune bay outrage. It will be remembered that in January last the inhabitants of a Newfoundland village seized and destroyed the nets of some American fishermen, putting an end to their business for the season and doing them great pecuniary damage. Secretary Evarts remonstrated, and Capt. Sullivan, sent by the British Government to investigate the matter, reported that the Americans were fishing on Sunday, in violation of a local statute, and that consequently they have no ground for complaint in the destruction of their property. Mr. Evarts now replies that the views of Lord Salisbury, who indorses Sullivan's report, are wholly inadmissible. Setting aside the question whether a statute could give justification to an act of mob violence, the Secretary declares that local legislation of this sort might annul the provisions of the treaty, which could not be permitted. He claims that the fishery rights are wholly free from the restraints of local statutes. He sees a frank avowal or disavowal by the British Government of the paramount authority of provincial legislation, professing that no arrangement involving such authority has ever been consented to by this Government, nor ever would have been. Mr. Evarts plainly hints that nothing will be done by our Government toward paying the Halifax fishery award until this question of the Newfoundland outrage is settled, and there is a chance for a first-class diplomatic row, with its attendant excitements, unless the British Government is willing to recede at once from its position.

FAILURES: The German-American National Bank and the German-American Savings Bank, of Washington, D. C.; the banking house of Joseph A. Hemann & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio; the Merchants' and Mechanics' State Bank, of Troy, N. Y.; Detwiler & Welsh, heavy flour millers, Philadelphia.

PRESIDENT HAYES has set apart Thursday, Nov. 28, as a day of thanksgiving. Following is his proclamation:

By the President of the United States—A proclamation:

The recurrence of that season at which it is the habit of our people to make devout and public confession of their constant dependence upon divine favor for all the good gifts of life and happiness, and of public peace and prosperity, exhibits in the record of the year abundant reasons for our gratitude and thanksgiving. Exuberant harvests, productive mines, ample crops of the staples of trade and manufactures, have enriched the country, the resources thus furnished to our reviving industry and expanding commerce hastening the day when discords and distresses, through the length and breadth of the land, will, under the continued favor of Providence, have given way to confidence, and energy, and assured prosperity.

Peace with all nations has remained unbroken; domestic tranquillity has prevailed, and the institutions of liberty and justice which the wisdom and justice of our forefathers established remain the glory and defense of their children.

The general prevalence of the blessings of health throughout our wide land has made more conspicuous the sufferings and sorrows which the dark shadow of the pestilence has cast upon a portion of our people. This heavy affliction, even, the Divine Ruler has tempered to the suffering communities with an universal sympathy and succor which have flowed to their relief, and the whole nation may rejoice in the unity of spirit in our people by which they cheerfully share another's burdens.

Now, therefore, I, Rutherford B. Hayes, President of the United States, do appoint Thursday, the 28th day of November next, as a day of national thanksgiving and prayer, and I earnestly recommend that, withdrawing themselves from secular cares and labors, the people meet together on that day in their respective places of worship, there to give thanks and praise to Almighty God for His mercies, and to devoutly beseech their continuance.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 30th day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and third.

[Seal.] R. B. HAYES.

By the President:
WILLIAM M. EVARTS, Secretary of State.

POLITICAL.

Grant for President in 1880, and that "if nominated he will certainly be elected."....Official vote of Iowa for Secretary of State, at the October election: Hull, Republican, 134,504; Farnsworth, Democrat and Greenbacker, 125,114. WASHINGTON.

INFORMATION has been received at the War Department to the effect that the Mexican General, Trevino, commander of the troops on the Rio Grande, has arrived at Piedras Negras, where Gen. Ord, who commands the United States troops on the Rio Grande frontier, has gone to meet him for the purpose of consultation as to the plans to be pursued to maintain order and prevent cattle-stealing raids into Texas from the Mexican side.

THE Appropriation Committee of the House will meet in a few days and begin work upon the appropriation bills. It is the expectation of the Chairman to have the Legislative bill ready to report at the opening of the session. If anything is done with the bill before the holidays are over, it will be out of the usual order....The project of building a national musical conservatory in Washington is now certain of being accomplished. Mr. Corcoran, the banker, who has done so much for the private and public institutions of Washington, has accepted the Chairmanship of the Advisory Committee. His connection with the affair assures its certain success....A big batch of moonshiners in North Carolina have been made happy by a sort of general amnesty granted by the Attorney General on condition that they will be honest and law-abiding citizens hereafter. This decision is made in accordance with the recommendation of the acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and applies to some 400 persons. They will all plead guilty to the charges against them, and sentence upon them will be suspended during good behavior. They promise not only to not violate the law themselves, but to use their influence to prevent others from transgressing.

THE President has officially promulgated through the State Department the convention which has been ratified between the United States and all nations of Europe except Great Britain, together with most of the South American republics, providing for the establishment and maintenance at Paris of an international bureau of weights and measures.

SECRETARY SHERMAN has written the following letter, in regard to the condition of the treasury for specie resumption, etc.:

J. LeRoy H. Dodd, Buchanan, Mich.:

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 29th inst., making certain inquiries as to the condition of the Treasury for resumption and the amount of paper circulated per capita in this country and the principal countries of Europe. In reply, I have to inform you that on the 1st inst. the coin balance of the treasury was $282,659,646. This entire amount, however, was not available for resumption purposes, but subject to liabilities, as follows:

Interest due and unpaid	$9,345,289
Debt on which interest has ceased	12,584,000
Interest thereon	273,595
Coin certificates (gold)	32,826,000
Coin certificates (silver)	1,948,070
Unclaimed interest	9,457
Unmatured bonds called for resumption	41,390,000
Total	$98,427,781

Leaving for resumption purposes, $184,231,865.

The coin receipts into the treasury will probably exceed by a considerable amount the coin payments between now and January, 1879, so that at least the above balance will then be available for resumption purposes.

It should also be borne in mind that meanwhile there is no probability of the entire coin liabilities being presented for payment.

As to the paper circulation of European countries this department has no information, except what can be obtained from publications open to all. The London Economist, of Sept. 14, 1878, the latest at hand, states the amount of paper circulation of the banks in the United Kingdom, less the amount retained in the banking department of the Bank of England, to be £43,900,971. The circulation of the Bank of France, which alone in France has authority to issue notes, was said to be, Sept. 5, $494,710,000; and that of the Imperial Bank of Germany Sept. 7, $130,450,000. It is understood that some of the country banks of Germany have authority, under certain restrictions, to issue notes, but as the amount issued is not stated in the financial publications it is believed to be inconsiderable. Reducing these amounts to the currency of this country, the per capita of circulation appears to be as follows:

Country.	Circulation.	Population (Latest est.)	Per Capita.
United Kingdom	215,965,000	33,474,000	6.39
Germany	146,018,000	42,727,360	2.46
United States	686,597,375	47,000,000	14.65

It will be seen that the aggregate, as well as the per capita, amount of paper circulation is larger in this country than in any of the other countries named, and largely in excess of any except that of France. In that country, however, the circulation has been reduced to the amount above stated since November, 1873, from $902,000,000, a reduction of $441,093,000, while in the same period the metallic reserve of the banks has increased from $148,000,000 to $435,000,000. Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

FOREIGN.

THE young King Alfonso, of Spain, has just made a narrow escape from an assassin's ballot. While driving in the streets of Madrid, a man in a blouse fired a pistol at him. The King was not touched, and continued on his way to the palace amid the acclamations of the crowd. The man was, immediately seized by the soldiers and taken to prison. The would-be assassin is named Juan Morcasi, a member of the International Society....Germany has succeeded in negotiating another loan of 60,000,000 marks....Several German Socialist newspapers, anticipating suppression, announce their discontinuance, and at the same time advertise the appearance of new journals by the same publishers.

MONCASI, the would-be assassin of the King of Spain, confesses that he journeyed to Madrid solely for the purpose of killing that monarch....The British Minister energetically insists upon the execution of the convention between the Porte and England abolishing the sale and importation of slaves....The news from Bulgaria is alarming. The notables are organizing a movement for the extermination of the Mohammedans, and the Russians encourage a secret committee in procuring arms. The great struggle is likely to take place during the winter....The bankruptcy is announced of John Innes Wright & Co., of Glasgow and London. Wright is one of the imprisoned Directors of the Glasgow Bank.

STOCKHOLDERS in the broken Glasgow Bank will have to pay a ruinous price for the easy-going carelessness which allowed their managers to waste the means of the concern and overwhelm it with debt. There is no limit to the liability of shareholders except their ability to pay; and it is supposed that the assessment of $2,500 per share, or 500 per cent. of the par value, will exhaust the fortunes of many of the victims, leaving a large balance to be ultimately made good by those of larger wealth....In the circular to the signatory powers in regard to the new rebellion south of the Balkans, the Porte describes the condition of the Mussulmans in Bulgaria and Roumelia as intolerable, and declares that a foreign power is co-operating with the Salvonic committees at Sofia, and aiming at the establishment of a new and independent state.

THE Mark Lane Express, in its last review of the British grain trade, expresses the belief that prices have reached the lowest point. ....Weston, the American pedestrian, has gone into bankruptcy in London.

INTELLIGENCE has reached London from Whydah, on the west coast of Africa, that the Portuguese commandant and seven soldiers are held captive by the King of Dahomey, who makes them parade before him daily. The King has recommenced the grand custom of human sacrifices. Five hundred persons have been slaughtered in one month.... An indication of Russia's intentions concerning Roumelia, it is reported that Gen. Todleben is constructing barracks for the winter quarters of a considerable force at Burgas, an important seaport on the Black sea, south of the mountains, and a convenient supply point for the Russians in all the country between the sea and Adrianople and Sofia. It is evidently not the purpose of the Czar to withdraw his troops into Bulgaria this winter.... The relatives of John Stewart, one of the imprisoned City of Glasgow Bank Directors, offer $500,000 bail, but the acceptance of bail is not obligatory in cases of theft. Several persons prominently connected with the bank have disappeared.

THE United States Consul at Tangier has transmitted a dispatch to the State Department giving an account of the fearful ravages of cholera in the interior of Morocco. The misery among the people is great. Business is almost completely paralyzed. The cholera is sweeping over the middle and southern provinces. Hundreds are dying of starvation. To all these miseries small-pox and malignant fevers add their horrors. Never before has Morocco passed through such a fearful ordeal.

Paris Awards and Decorations.

The awarding of medals to the happy premium-takers took place at the Paris Exposition as the closing official act in connection with that great show. The time was one of general interest, and the preparations made for celebrating the coronation of the victors in the contest of mechanical superiority were imposing and extensive. On a central platform in the Place de la Concorde were the President of the republic, foreign Princes, diplomats, Presidents and Bureaux of the two Chambers of the Legislature, special Ambassadors, Ministers and Prefects of the Seine, Chief of Police, and subordinate Cabinet officers, and surrounding this central attraction were, first, the 3,000 persons who were to receive prizes and the 1,000 jurors, and outside of these the multitude of lookers-on. After a parade by soldiers and an address by the Chief Executive, the awards were announced and the lucky exhibitors decorated. The greatest feature of all the day followed in admitting to the order of the Legion of Honor certain leading Americans connected with the Exhibition. These were Commissioner General Richard C. McCormick, who is made Commander; Prof. F. A. P. Barnard and William W. Story, who are made officers; Auguste K. Girard, Secretary to the Commissioner General; Henry Pettit, engineer and architect, Commissioner General's staff; Thomas R. Pickering, Superintendent of the Machinery Section; Lieut. Benjamin H. Buckingham, United States navy, naval attache; John D. Philbrick, Superintendent of the Educational Section; D. Maitland Armstrong, Superintendent of the Fine Arts Section; Prof. Andrew D. White, LL. D., juror; Prof. William P. Blake, juror, and Prof. Edward H. Knight, LL. D., jurors, made Chevaliers. Cyrus H. McCormick, of Chicago, and Walter A. Wood, of New York, who were in 1867 made Chevaliers, were raised to officers, and Thomas A. Edison and Elisha Gray, the inventors, were made Chevaliers.—Chicago Journal.

A Mechanical Dog.

The latest plaything for French children is a mechanical Newfoundland dog, destined for the saving of dolls that fall into the water. He takes them in his mouth and paddles across a tank or very considerable pond, keeping his head and his precious freight above water until he has reached shore, his ample tail being used as a rudder.

THE NEW ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Edison at Last Describes It—And Says It will Answer Every Requirement, and Be Cheaper than Gas.

[From the New York Herald.]

Edison's electric light was made the butt of ridicule by the American Gas-Light Association members who met here this week, and the great inventor was sought out to-day to see what he had to say for himself. "Are you positive," I inquired, "that you have found a light that will take the place of gas, and be much cheaper to consumers?"

"There can be no doubt about it," he replied.

"Is it an electric light?" I asked.

He said that an electric light was no new discovery, and he only claimed that he had found out how to utilize it. His first experiments were made long ago. He spent a month trying to discover a light that would take the place of gas, but met with little success, and finally gave it up. After his removal to Menlo Park he made his own gas, and the trouble with the electric light was, it could not be subdivided. "I worked hard on it, however," he said, "and then I discovered the necessary secret, so simple that a bootblack could understand it. It suddenly came to me, the same as the secret of the speaking phonograph. It was real, and no phantom. I was as sure it would work as I was that the phonograph would work. I made my first machine. It was a success. Since then I have made nearly a dozen machines, each different, and the last ones improvements upon those first made. The subdivision of light is all right. The only thing to be actually determined is its economy. I am already positive that it will be cheaper than gas, but I have not determined how much cheaper. To determine its economy, I am now putting up a brick building back of my laboratory here. I have already ordered two 80-horse power engines for this building, with which to make the electricity. We use no batteries. We simply turn the power of steam into electricity, and the greater steam power we obtain the more electricity we get. I have already told you that electric lights have had marked intensity and a low quantity. I am turning it the other way—reducing the intensity and increasing the quantity of the light as far as possible. It requires a good deal of experimenting to ascertain how far this can be done. You alter the nature of the electric light when this is done. I have already done it to a certain extent, and don't think it was ever before attempted on the line on which I am at work."

On being questioned concerning the articles of incorporation of the Edison Electric Light Company, Mr. Edison said that they proposed to light the city, public buildings and private residences with electric lights. The electricity would be made by twenty or more engines, stationed in different parts of the city. "We could lay the wires right through the gas-pipes, and bring them into houses. All that will be necessary will be to remove the gas-burners and substitute electric burners. The light can be regulated by a screw, the same as gas. You may have a bright light or not, as you wish, and you can turn it down or up just as you please, and can shut it off at any time. No match is needed to light it. You turn the cock, the electric connection is made, the platinum burner catches a proper degree of heat, and there is your light. There is neither blaze nor flame, and there is no singing nor flickering. I don't pretend that it will give a much better light than gas, but it will be whiter and steadier than any known light. I do know now that it will be cheaper than gas. It will give no fumes nor smokes. No carbonic acid gas will be thrown off by combustion. It will be a great thing for compositors, engravers, and all forced to work during hot summer nights, for it will throw out scarcely any heat. Shades may be used, the same as shades upon gas lights, but there will be no necessity for them. The wind can't blow it out. There can be no gas explosions, and no one will be suffocated, because the electricity is turned on, for it cannot be turned on without lighting the burner. A person may have lamps made with flexible cords, and carry them from one point to another."

Mr. Edison says that electric generating machines could be placed upon steamboats and locomotives, and the boats and cars lighted by the action of the engines, but the instant that the machinery stopped the lights would go out, and he thinks that it may be necessary to have an extra engine in each station in cities to be prepared for accidents. If the first engine should break down, the second one could be used to feed the lights. Country towns, with the use of the electric generating machines, could be lighted by water-power. Any power could be used, provided it was strong enough to turn the shaft of the machine with the necessary rapidity.

The professor then exhibited an electric generating machine. It was what is known as the Wallace machine. A knot of magnets ran around the cylinder, facing each other, and wires were attached to it. Mr. Edison slipped a belt over the machine, and the engine used in his manufactory began to turn the cylinder. He touched the point of the wire on a small piece of metal near the window-casing, and there was a flash of blinding white light. It was repeated at each touch. "There is your steam power turned into an electric light," he said. There was the light, clear, cold and beautiful. The intense brightness was gone, and there was nothing irritating to the eye. The mechanism was so simple and perfect that it explained itself. The strip of platinum that acted as a burner did not burn. It was incandescent. It threw off a light pure and white, and it was set in a gallows-like frame; but it glowed with the phosphorescent effulgence of the star Altair. You could trace the veins in your hands and the spots and lines upon your finger-nails by its brightness. All the surplus electricity had been turned off, and the platinum shone with a mellow radiance through the small glass globe that surrounded it. A turn of the screw and its brightness became dazzling, and reduced itself to the faintest glimmer of a glow-worm. It seemed perfect.

"I would gladly give up the secret to the public," he said, "but the patents are not perfected. You know my trouble with the telephone in England. A burnt child dreads the fire. The public may not know, but I do know, that if a description of this invention reached Germany, Austria, and other countries in Europe before a patent is obtained, none can be secured. I lost the telephone patent in Germany through the newspapers."

A Plucky Woman.

Mrs. Annie Rowe, the wife of a farmer living near Roselle, a suburb of Elizabeth, N. J., heard the dog which slept in her barn-yard barking furiously at 2 o'clock yesterday morning. Her husband being away, she ran to the yard. As she passed into the barn-yard she saw a man coming out of the barn, carrying two chickens, and she ordered him to stop. He dropped the chickens and began to run. Mrs. Rowe pursued him, and, as one of his legs was partially paralyzed, she overtook him and caught him by the collar. When, in the chase, he saw that Mrs. Rowe was gaining upon him, he armed himself with a heavy stick, and, when she caught him, he endeavored to free himself from her vise-like grip by beating her on the arm. She seized the stick, and after a tussle succeeded in wresting it from him. As he continued to be refractory, Mrs. Rowe brought him to terms by laying the stick over his back. Having secured her prisoner, Mrs. Rowe was puzzled to know what to do with him. The nearest police station was at Elizabeth, ten miles away, and she did not know how to get him there. Her husband had taken the horse and wagon belonging on their farm away, and had not returned with it. Mrs. Rowe determined to borrow a team from a neighbor. She informed her prisoner of this, and, still armed with her stick, compelled him to walk with her to the nearest farm-house, where she could borrow a team. They were obliged to walk a mile before they could find a farmer who would answer Mrs. Rowe's calls. She finally secured a wagon and a horse, and compelled her prisoner to climb into the wagon. The neighbor accompanied her, and, with the prisoner, they drove to Elizabeth. Arriving at the police station at 4 o'clock in the morning, she delivered the man over to Inspector Pfander. The prisoner was recognized as Charles Derr, an old offender, whose picture has been for a long time in the rogues' gallery. Yesterday morning later Mrs. Rowe returned to the police headquarters and made a formal charge against the prisoner. The Police Justice committed him to await action of the Grand Jury.—New York World.

Medium-sized bonnets are not fashionable.

Gold brocaded cap ribbons are much worn.

All dresses of woolen materials are cut short.

All the new bonnets are very small or very large.

Slashes at the elbow and at the top are seen on many Parisian dress sleeves.

All winter wraps and cloaks are very long, but very short jackets are also worn.

The clan tartan and Scotch plaid short costumes are the fancy of the passing moment.

Dresses, to be fashionable, must be very short in front, even when trained in the back.

The talma is a new mantle which is simply a revival of an old style, with the difference of a tight back.

The newest buttons are bullet-shaped. They are of colored pearl, jet, brass, steel, crochet, and fine porcelain.

The beef-eater hat may be worn with the brim turned either up or down, and when down it is an excellent shade for the eyes.

Silk or spun silk stockings to match costumes are to be worn with black kid low shoes, with a strap across the instep and a steel buckle, but no bows.—New York Sun.

Pianos.

The making of a pianoforte in a first-class factory, as traced in the Scientific American, begins with the careful selection and seasoning of many kinds of wood. After the completion of the case comes the important work of placing the sounding-board in position. On the proper disposition and grading of the bars depends the equality of vibration so much desired. Next, the case is varnished and polished by hand, being afterward taken to the stringing room, where only highly-skilled workmen are employed. Finally, all the parts are adjusted, and the tuner takes the instrument in hand. The iron frames require careful casting, and the wood used in the "actions" is usually seasoned ten years. Exact uniformity is aimed at throughout, for on that largely depends the quality of the piano. Some of the machinery is as delicate as that for watchmaking.

Extraordinary Longevity.

The list of deaths published in a late number of the Hartford (Ct.) Weekly Courant, shows an average longevity greater, we presume, than that of any other ordinary death record ever printed. The aggregate amount of the ages of forty persons, whose deaths are there recorded, is 2,701 years—the average being over 67 years. The youngest was 21, and the oldest "more than 100." Classified, we find those whose ages were between 20 and 30, 4; 30 and 40, 7; 40 and 50, 2; 50 and 60, 3; 60 and 70, 1; 70 and 80, 6; 80 and 90, 10; 90 and 100, 7; "more than 100," 1. This last was an old negro man, supposed to be 105 or 106 years old.

Reconciliation.

In the next contest between the two great parties they will divide upon Governmental policy, and without sectional animosity. Sectional hatred will be eliminated from the contest. So far as the South is concerned, I am certain that such will be the case. I cannot, fellow-citizens, find it in my heart to indulge in feelings of malice toward the people of the North. When I witness their magnanimous and general conduct toward the Southern people I feel like pulling off my hat and standing uncovered in their presence. Grander than the victory of the Appomattox is the victory won by the people of the North in their noble and generous contributions to the stricken and suffering South. Upon that fated field, the South surrendered her sword. Within the shadow of the dark wing of the pestilence; beside the new-made graves of her heroic sons and daughters; with bowed head and tearful eyes, she extends her hand and surrenders her heart to the generous and magnanimous North. God's own hand has bridged the bloody chasm. Let not the ambition of man seek to reopen the wounds and to rekindle the embers of sectional strife. Let us go into this great contest of 1880 without any of these elements of sectional bitterness. Of course, we will be divided as to questions of Government policy; but, with that element eliminated from the contest, the representative from the South can stand upon the floor of Congress as the peer of any from the Northern States, and can look to the material development of his own section, to the enlargement of commercial relations, and make the Southern people more prosperous. With fraternity and harmony restored, this great country can march on to a more glorious and illustrious future than has been seen in the past.—Congressman John F. House, of Tennessee.

Mrs. Hittle's Muscle.

Racine can, now come out and claim one of the pluckiest, if not the pluckiest, little women in the State. Her name is Barbara Hittle, and she lives on the west side of the city. Barbara has always been noted among the neighbors as being a woman of wonderful courage and pluck, but she never brought it into play and made a heroine of herself until Friday night, when she won a victory over two strong tramps. It seems tramps, beggars, etc., have been very annoying of late in the neighborhood where the lady referred to resides, but never tried to force things until on the evening above mentioned, when two burly ruffians made their appearance at Barbara's house, and asked for something to eat. They were invited in and a nice supper set before them, of which they partook freely. When they had finished they did not thank the kind-hearted lady for her favor, but proceeded to take improper liberties with her. Did she call for help when the villains did so? Oh, no. She merely grasped a large oak club that was lying near by, and with the first blow she knocked one of the fellows senseless on the floor, and mauled the other fellow unmercifully, until he begged piteously for mercy, and the brave little woman ceased to beat him. Then she took the one she had knocked senseless and dragged him out of doors, where she soused him with a pail of slops that was standing near by, which soon brought him around, and he left in a hurry, as his companion had done previously. If there is another woman who could have done better than this in the State, Racine people would like to hear from her.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

IMMENSE quantities of apples are being taken to Europe by the steamers. The surplus crop is very large, and some Eastern farmers are feeding their cows with them, rather than ship them to market at ruling prices, which are $1 to $1.25 per barrel. Export shipments are not always profitable, depending largely on the condition of the fruit on arrival; but, when in good condition, a fair profit is realized.

FARM NOTES.

[From the American Agriculturist for November.]

Be prompt, now, when the days are shortening and the season for field work is rapidly nearing its end. Utilize every hour for securing the crops yet ungathered. Neglect no chance for putting the ground in order for spring work, but turn every fair day to account, that nothing may be neglected.

There are a score of things to be done on every farm that may be considered of little account singly, but, which, in the aggregate, make up a serious total. Every one should look about, note down what needs to be done, and frequently examine the record.

Every day the corn remains uncut, after maturity, there is loss. Corn gains nothing by standing after the kernels are glazed, but fodder loses rapidly in quality. Much of its digestible matter is changed into woody fiber, becoming hard and indigestible. The sooner it is cut and shocked, the sooner it can be housed in safety.

Corn stalks are no longer to be considered as a waste product, good for nothing but to be trodden under foot. They are worth fully the cost of putting in the crop, if well saved and cured. When cut at the right time, and well cured, $6 a ton is, by many, considered a reasonable estimate of their value for feed when hay is worth $10 per ton. Careful experiments place well-cured corn stalks as worth about three-fifths as much as hay.

Much has been previously said as to the methods of curing corn-fodder. A caution may yet be given. Let the stalks be thoroughly cured before being stacked. Small stacks will not readily heat and mold; large ones will. Put a ventilator, if only three or four rails set on end, spread below and tied at top, in the middle of the stack. Carefully build or protect them on top, so as to shed water. Better finish the husking, if possible, while it is still pleasant weather. It is disagreeable work on a raw November day, when fingers get numb and the body chills quickly. Last year we saw farmers with wives and children thus employed when snow was on the ground and all through the stacks. And so it will be again with others who are behind-hand.

Husking machines have been much improved since first brought out. For 1,000 bushels of corn it will pay to use a power-husker. By and by the thresher-men will have machines to do his work, and shell the corn at the same time.

Some of the steel and chilled iron corn-cob mills will grind corn in the husk. For cows, cattle, hogs and mules (and perhaps horses, when it is carefully used), it may be thus ground, conveniently and economically. The corn may be cribbed in the husk, and used as required. If not perfectly dry, grind small quantities at a time, as it will heat if kept in large bulk.

Harrowing wheat in the fall should only be done when the surface of the land is dry. No kind of cultivation should take place when the ground is wet. Experimental cultivation should be done as early as possible. Deep plowing is not needed. To kill weeds and mellow the surface are what is wanted. Harrowing may be done safely two weeks after sowing, and repeated twice or thrice. Then grass seed may be sown, but not before. It will take at once on the mellow soil, and soon get ahead of that treated in the usual let-alone manner.

Wheat needs nitrogen at this season, and so does the grass. One hundred pounds per acre of nitrate of soda would be a help to both.

Mangels and beets are injured by frost. Those should be gathered and secured in pits this month where frost is prevalent. The fresh leaves have an injurious effect upon cattle if fed in excess. A day or two after cutting they may be fed safely—a pressed bushel-basketful at a time, sprinkled over with a handful of salt.

Horses that have been on pasture should now be taken up at night, and have some dry feed.

The change of feed from green to dry should be gradual with all stock; otherwise, the appetite may fail, and the animals lose thereby.

Milking cows cannot be kept in full flow without ample rations of fresh fodder. As the pastures become bare, newly-cured corn-stalks, cut and mixed with chopped roots and sprinkled with middlings, and ground corn and oats, may be given. Liberal feed always pays with the right kind of cows.

The aim in feeding now should be to get the stock into good condition before cold weather, remembering that an animal beginning the winter well is as good as half through it already.

Sheep, if fed liberally and managed carefully, are most profitable stock. The better we do for them the better they will do for us; badly managed, they are likely to prove a failure.

Feeding sheep for market is a profitable business for those who have judgment to buy well, to feed well, and to sell well. Two profits can easily be made; a big manure heap and good pay for feed and care will be returned to the skillful feeder. For more detailed information "Stewart's Shepherd's Manual" may be consulted.

Feeding for pork may best be begun at once, using up the soft and poor corn first. Some feed green stalks, cut fine, and mixed with meal; this will bring the pigs into a thrifty condition, to be finished very rapidly in November.

It is a great mistake to stint animals in water; 75 per cent. of their weight is water. Digestion cannot go on without it. Water is, therefore, food in one sense, and an ample supply should be provided for every animal to drink when inclined.

If eggs are expected during the winter, they must be provided for now. Dispose of the old hens; select as many of the best young pullets and feed them well. Give wheat, soaked in hot water, once a day. Barley, buckwheat and corn, in equal proportions, may make the rest of the food; chopped cabbages will help. Provide clean quarters, plenty of water, gravel, old mortar and charcoal. Make the house warm; do not crowd too many into it, and a good supply of eggs will result.

Vinegar-making is a sort of fermentation greatly facilitated by a kind of low microscopic plant, popularly known as the "mother" of vinegar. Placing cider in old casks containing this, and mixing cider with old vinegar, hastens the process.

Top-dress the orchard with fine manure this month, or later. Leave no dead weeds, grass or other rubbish near young trees to harbor mice. Recently-planted trees should have a conical mound of earth, about a foot high, around them.

Strawberries are sometimes injured by too much covering; the straw, marsh hay or other material should be placed freely upon the soil, but only an inch or two thick over the plants themselves.

Raspberries of tender sorts are laid down and covered with a few inches of earth. This is quickly done by two men—one to bend over the plants and the other to put on the soil.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

GROUND TEA.—A French chemist asserts that if tea be ground like coffee, immediately before hot water is poured upon it, it will yield nearly double the amount of its exhilarating qualities.

CLEANING SILVER DOOR-PLATES.—To clean silver door-plates, use a weak solution of ammonia in water, applied with a wet rag. This wash is equally wonderful for silver plate and jewelry.

ANTS.—It is alleged that alum water is good, or, rather, bad for ants. Brush all the crevices which they inhabit with hot alum water, and sprinkle pulverized borax freely wherever they are most numerous.

FIREPROOF GARMENTS.—A 5 per cent. solution of phosphate of ammonia will render goods into which it is rubbed perfectly fire-proof. Even if gunpowder is exploded on goods thus treated, they will only char, not blaze.

A COFFEE POT.—A carelessly-kept coffee-pot will impart a rank flavor to the strongest infusion of the best Java. Wash the coffee-pot thoroughly every day, and twice a week boil borax and water in it for fifteen minutes.

RAT POISON.—The Germans extirpate rats by furnishing them with cakes made of two parts squills and three parts chopped bacon, and meal enough to make a stiff mass. The rats go away, as any animal of taste naturally would if provided with such a meal.

A VERY good fumigating powder for the sick-room may be prepared by mixing equal parts of cascarilla powder, camomile flowers and anise seed. Sprinkle a very little on a shovel of hot coals and carry the shovel into every part of the room to be fumigated.

TO REMOVE putty from glass, dip a small brush in nitric or muriatic acid, and with it paint over the dry putty that adheres to the broken glasses and frames of the windows. After an hour's interval the putty will have become so soft as to be easily removable.

FURNITURE POLISH.—One pint of linseed oil, one wineglass of alcohol; mix well together; apply to the cloth with a linen rag; rub dry with a soft cotton cloth, and polish with a silk cloth. Furniture is improved by washing it occasionally with soapsuds. Wipe dry, and rub over with a very little linseed oil upon a clean sponge or flannel.

FINE COLOGNE WATER.—Take alcohol at eighty-five deg., ten quarts, dissolve in it essence of neroli petit grain, half an ounce; essence of rosemary, two and a half drachms; essence of lavender, one drachm and a quarter; essence of clove, half a drachm; essence of peppermint, half a drachm; essence of bergamot, twelve and a half drachms; lemon, twelve and a half drachms; essence of Portugal, seven and a half drachms; tincture of benzoin, one drachm and a half.

APPLE PIE.—Pare and quarter enough tart apples to lay loosely in the prepared paste; the quarters should not touch one another. Fill the paste two-thirds full of thin, sweet cream, then sprinkle over one spoonful of flour; butter as large as a walnut, cut in bits. Sugar (if a common pie tin is used), two-thirds teacupful. Grate nutmeg over the whole, as no other flavoring gives the peculiar excellent taste. Bake slow; if a brown crust forms over the top before the apples cook, stir it under with a knife. If it is not pronounced splendid, the fault will be with the apples or not following the direction.

TO COLOR SCARLET WITH COCHINEAL.—For one pound of yarn or cloth take pure, soft, hot water, sufficient to cover the goods, and add one ounce of cream of tartar; when dissolved, add one ounce of cochineal well pulverized, and two ounces of muriate of tin; bring the dye to a boiling heat, put in the goods, and boil for thirty minutes, stirring the goods while boiling. A good color from cochineal depends much upon everything being clean. The goods, if dirty, should be washed with soap and water, and always well rinsed in pure soft water before putting into the dye, and when taken out of the dye the goods should be well washed in pure soft water, and dried in the shade. The dish containing the dye should be copper or brass, and very clean.

Walking Death.

In yellow-fever districts the technical term "walking case" is well understood, and indicates a singular, and at the same time a fearful, form of this dreadful disease. A "walking case" is a patient who refuses to yield to the sickness, will not go to bed, but keeps on his feet until he drops dead. Sometimes he refuses to believe he has the yellow fever; sometimes he realizes that he has it, but displays the most abject fear; or, it may be, the utmost courage and indifference in regard to his own fate. He will sometimes, in spite of all that friends can do, roam the streets with the seal of death on his face, until at last he falls a victim to the destroyer.

GOV. HENDRICKS ON THE SITUATION.

[Extract from a Recent Speech at Indianapolis.]

Wherever I spoke during this campaign I asked one question, and that question was not answered anywhere. That question was this: What single act (I asked but for one act) of the Republican party, since the close of the war, has resulted to the benefit of the laboring and commercial classes of this country? No Republican leader in Indiana can point his finger to a single act of the Republican party since they elected Grant, ten years ago, which has added to the prosperity of the farmer, the mechanic, the laboring man, or the man of business, for the simple reason that the legislation which has characterized the judgment of that party has been for classes, for rings, for parts of the people, and against the great body of people. And, my fellow-citizens, I asked one other question, and I think that question going unanswered has contributed to this result. I said that the contract between the public creditors and the people was plain and simple; that the bonds should be paid in gold, or silver, or paper money, according to the judgment and pleasure of the Government. That was the contract; Gov. Morton said that it was the contract; the Judiciary Committee of the Senate said it was the contract. Before I left the Senate I was asked to vote to change the contract—to change it not for the popular benefit, but for the benefit of the men who held the bonds. I said, no change, and nearly the last speech that I made in the Senate, nearly the last vote I gave in the Senate, was against any change of the contract. But the first act after Grant came in as President; almost the first act that my Republican successor supported and voted for, was to change the contract, and to provide that the bonds should no longer be payable in the paper money of the country, but only in coin, and Grant signed that law.

Now, I asked the question, "Why do you Republicans do that?" It was worth hundreds of millions of dollars to the public creditors. What was it worth to you? How much was it worth to the farmers of Indiana? How much to the laboring men of Indiana? How much to the mechanics that work in our shops and to the manufacturing establishments? Not one dollar, but hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars to the bondholders. And now I ask the question again at the close of this contest. Why was that change made in the contract between the creditors and the people? It was not sought by you. No neighborhood in all the United States, from Maine to California; no man asked Congress to do it. It was against the popular judgment; it was against the popular interest. And that was not the only breach of contract, but when four years more rolled by they said that silver could not be money any longer, and then the purpose was that gold alone should be the lawful payment of our public securities. And I asked them why they did that. Who asked them to do it? Not you; not the people; no portion of the people. It did not inure to your benefit. It was against your interest. It was hard upon business. It was crushing upon enterprise, and yet it was done. Now, when any Republican shall dare to ask you to go with his party in the future, let him answer this question: "What did your party do for ten years that benefited the people? Why did you change the contract twice, in 1869 and again in 1873?" and, if they cannot answer the question, no man ought to think of going with their party any longer. My fellow-citizens, when the sun shall stand high in mid-heaven on the 4th day of March next, the Democratic party will step into control of the United States Senate. We will have the House of Representatives, and in two years more a man will be elected President who knows that there is a common people and a common country. And then, after ten years more shall roll around, if any Republican should ask of you or me, after our party has been responsible for ten years, what it has done that has brought blessings to the people, if I have to stand dumb and cannot answer my question, then I shall pray God that the party shall be turned out. But I am not afraid of it. I know that the Democratic party sympathizes with the common interests of the country. I know that they desire that property shall be secure, and that labor shall have remunerative employment, and the party that is animated by that sentiment cannot fail to serve the country well.

My fellow-citizens, I am glad to meet you to-night. I am glad to take you by the hand and feel that between us there is a common sentiment in favor of such legislation and policy of government as shall bring blessings to us all—not to the few but to the whole country. Did you know that already the Democratic party in Congress had caused a reduction of the public expenditures of $30,000,000 a year? And when the Senate shall be under the control of Mr. McDonald and Mr. Voorhees, and men of that class; when the Senate shall be in sympathy with the House of Representatives, and the President and the departments at Washington are in sympathy with the two houses of Congress, then I believe the reduction may be made of more than $50,000,000 below what the Republicans expended. Now, my fellow-citizens, we do not stop here. The contest of 1876 has never stopped for a moment. The people of the United States, by the largest vote that was ever given on earth, declared Mr. Tilden to be the President of the United States, and by fraud, by corruption, by perjury, another man, not elected, was placed in the Presidential chair. That great crime against free government must be rebuked so emphatically that no audacious villainy shall ever dare to repeat it. So, my fellow-citizens, we have not stopped, and we are not going to stop. We will stand in solid line until the great victory is achieved in 1880. The 4,000,000 men who two years ago voted for Tilden and Hendricks stand in line to-day, and that great line of battle is not to be broken until the constitution is restored, until the people shall feel once more that the sympathies of the Government are with them, and not with the few.

The Public Money in Politics.

In whatever branch of the public service investigation is made, the most flagrant abuses are discovered, showing that the treasury has been habitually plundered under Republican rule to subserve partisan interests, and that the expenditures were contracted or expanded as they would operate on national or local politics. In other words, the whole machinery of Government and the revenues were constantly used to preserve a partisan ascendency in the administration and in Congress.

The reports to Congress are made up in a way to mislead the country, by concealing information to which the people are entitled. The whole truth can never be known until a change of administration takes place and the books and papers pass into honest hands. But, with all the artifices employed to hide the truth, a careful analysis of even the official and perverted figures brings to light the practices that were pursued to retain possession of power.

Take as an illustration the great variety of expenditures for the civil list, all lumped together in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, under the head of miscellaneous, the elements of which can only be known to the initiated, and even to well-informed public men but imperfectly, under the system which prevails at Washington of making up the public accounts and substituting general statements for specific details, by means of which every charge might be followed.

Following the miscellaneous expenditures from 1863-'64 down to 1875-'76, it will be found that in the years of three Presidential elections, and in nearly all the years of Congress elections, the outlay was entirely disproportioned to what may be called, for discrimination the non-political years. Here is a table made up from the last treasury report, which shows at a glance the marked difference between the two classes of years:

	Amount.	Increase.	Decrease.
1865-66......	40,613,114	......	$2,376,269
1866-67*......	51,110,323	10,497,209	......
1868-69*......	56,474,061	3,464,194	......
1871-72......	60,984,757	502,841	......
1873-74......	69,641,593	......	3,686,517

The year marked with an "*" were those in which Presidential and Congressional elections were held—three of the former in 1864, 1868, and 1872, and six of the latter.

Of these thirteen years, the miscellaneous expenditures were increased for the three Presidential elections $31,224,714 over the preceding years, and $10,000,000 more, including the Congress elections, in the intervening years. In the years succeeding the Presidential elections, the miscellaneous expenses fell off more than $9,250,000. The regularity of this increase and diminution tells the whole story with as much precision as if it were written in the plainest terms, and not in mixed figures intended to deceive the unwary and to put opponents off their guard. Although the appropriations made by Congress ought to be the limitation of expenditures, the executive departments, under various pretexts, have assumed to disregard them, and thus created deficiencies at their own discretion. It is the duty of Congress at the first opportunity to abolish this practice summarily, by making it a penal offense for any public officer to expend more money or to contract more debt than is legally and explicitly authorized.—New York Sun.

An Extraordinary Case.

One of the most remarkable suits on record, probably, has been commenced in the Superior Court, of Cabarrus county, N. C. It seems that a few months ago Mr. John Ingraham, a prominent and wealthy citizen of Concord, in that county, was applied to for work by John Forst. He told the applicant that he had nothing for him to do, but that he would give him $12,000 for the hides of 6,000 lizards, making a written agreement to that effect. Forst, with his wife and five children, at once left for the mountains. There they established themselves in camp, and commenced war upon the reptiles. The result of the first day's effort was so encouraging that the Forst family worked with renewed energy, and within twenty days had secured the 6,000 lizard hides. The family marched into town, a few days ago, and offered the reptile skins to Ingraham, who informed him that his offer was a jest. The lizard-hunter, however, does not so understand it, and has instituted suit upon Ingraham's contract, securing the best counsel in the State.

His Strength Saved His Life.

On Thursday afternoon a workman in Messrs. Laird, Norton & Co.'s saw mill, named Joseph Mitchell, saved himself from a frightful accident. He was at work on one of the edgers when his sleeve caught in a "live roller," and at once, the garment was rapidly drawn into the machinery. Mitchell saw at a glance the impending danger. He braced himself, and, by main force, stood there while his clothes were absolutely torn from him, even to his boots and stockings, leaving only a strip of his pantaloons, about six inches wide, at his ankle. It all occurred in less time than it takes to tell it, and the men in the mill stood horrified at the sight. When Mitchell got through the fearful ordeal he was as pale as a ghost, and great beads of perspiration stood out upon his face. He had escaped with only a slight bruise, but the case would undoubtedly have been much worse had he not been a man of great physical strength.—Winona (Minn.) Republican.

MR. CAIRD, about the highest agricultural authority in England, states in his new work, "The Landed Interest and the Supply of Food," that the return per acre of English wheat crops is not as large as formerly. He attributes this to the farmers feeling a lack of security for their capital.

Finance Catechism.

Republican—Why do the Greenbackers oppose the national-banking system so bitterly?

National—Because the national-banking system is the most stupendous swindle; the most outrageous scheme of robbery, ever legalized by a free people.

Republican—It is often so asserted, but will you make it plain so all can see it as you do?

National—We will try; let us go into the bank across the street, and prove it by the banker himself.

National—What security did you take for the loan?

Banker—I took the Government's bond, payable in twenty years, drawing 6 per cent., gold, interest.

National—Do you still hold that bond?

Banker—No; I pawned it to the Government, and received on it $900,000 of national currency.

National—What did you do with the $900,000 of currency.

Banker—I paid it out to the people for property.

National—What security have the people that the currency you paid them is good?

Banker—My bond is on deposit as collateral for its final redemption by the Government.

National—Then you have parted with nine-tenths of your claim against the Government by passing it over to the people in exchange for their property? Or, in other words, the people have refunded to you 90 per cent. of your loan to the Government, and taken a lein on your bond?

Banker—Yes.

National—Do the people draw from the Government nine-tenths, or their proportion, of the interest on the bond?

Banker—Oh, no, I still continue to draw the entire interest, without being taxed; while the people who own nine-tenths of the claim draw no interest, and are taxed to pay mine.

National—Then really the Government owes you but $100,000 of the million, you having transferred $900,000 of the claim to the people, and at the same time the latter are taxed to pay you interest on the whole?

Banker—Those are about the facts under the law.

National—To what extent does the law allow you bankers to carry this system of speculation?

Banker—We are not limited by law. We can carry it to the extent of the bonded debt of the nation; and, as John Sherman is obliged to increase the bonded debt from year to year to obtain gold to pay interest, we can carry it to the extent of our opportunities for speculation. It is one of the nicest schemes ever invented. It is like a ratchet wheel—it takes all and gives nothing The whole people are taxed to pay as interest on what they do not owe, while we are exempt, even from our own burdens.

National—Do you expect to hypothecate more of your bonds for currency, and transfer them to the people for property?

Banker—Yes, as soon as we can get the infernal greenbacks out of competition, and property values are depreciated enough to enable us to rope in $3 worth for $1 of currency.

This we intended to do when we got a clause inserted in the Redemption act to allow us to inflate our bank currency without limit.

National—What amount of bonds do you now hold, which you are at liberty to "put up" for bank currency?

Banker—Near $10,000,000,000, with what we already have up.

National—By handling the $2,000,000,000 of bonds and the nine-tenths or $1,800,000,000 of currency, as you did your $1,000,000 and $900,000 of currency, what would be the result, financially, of your investment?

Banker—The result will be, we shall carry but one-tenth, or $200,000,000 of the public debt, while drawing interest on the whole. The people will carry nine-tenths of the burden, draw no interest, but have the privilege of paying ours.

National—How much will your annual interest amount to?

Banker—About $100,000,000.

Banker—Nothing.

National—Then you contracted to extend a certain favor to the Government, for which you were to receive $100,000,000 in gold, per year, from the people. But, through the agency of your national-banking machinery, you are enabled to make the people perform nine-tenths of your contract, while you receive the entire reward. Is not this most outrageous robbery—a swindle upon the people?

Banker—(John G. Deshler, President Franklin National Bank, Columbus, Ohio)—If the people are such —— fools as to vote for men to put saddles on their backs, spurs on my boots, and then invite me to ride, I am not going on foot. If it is robbery, the people who sustain the party that authorized robbery are to blame, and not the robbers.—The Advocate.

The Duty of Congress.

The constitution of the United States enjoins upon Congress to insure domestic tranquillity by providing for the general welfare.

Nothing is so essential to promote the general welfare as a generous and ample supply of money, for the employment of labor and to effect and facilitate the exchanges of commerce.

Congress has made ample provision to furnish idle capital with money, but none to supply enterprise and labor.

Capitalists can order and have executed for themselves any amount of currency, by depositing United States bonds as collateral security.

This may promote individual, but not the general welfare.

This may make joy and gladness in the mansions of luxury, but it does not clothe the naked, feed the hungry, employ the idle, or produce tranquillity among the millions who are muttering subdued murmurs of discontent, and threatening the peace and safety of society.

To promote the general welfare and to insure domestic tranquillity, enterprise and productive industry must be supplied with money on equal terms with idle capital, in exchange for such ample security as they may possess.

How to Organize a National Bank.

A Western man has written to the Treasury Department, inquiring whether the Greenbackers are correct in their charges made against the national-banking system. An official of the department undertakes a reply, the leading points of which appear in the Tribune of Sept. 28, but he only exposes more fully the rank and grinding wrongs of that system. We shall reply here to only one point which this official undertakes to make. He says:

"When the Greenbackers claim that a national bank of $100,000 currency capital could have been organized with $35,000,000 of gold coin in 1863-64, they claim what, as a matter of fact, was impossible.

"Greenbackers may be safely challenged to point out instances of banks organized on the basis on which they claim it could have been done."

We have a decisive answer to this "treasury official's challenge," found in "Our Money Muss," by John G. Drew, which says: "Since writing the above [referring to article on national banks. ED.] we have received a copy of testimony taken before the Committee of Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, Jan. 16, 1874.

"S. B. Chittenden, of New York, said: 'I believe that of 1,900 national banks, there are not two-thirds of them sound to-day—I mean not two-thirds in number. In the vast proportion of them the capital is very small. I know, for instance, how one national bank was established, and I presume there were hundreds established in the same way. I say I know a national bank of $100,000 capital, whose broker in New York purchased $100,000 in Government bonds and paid for them. The owners of the bank furnished the margin between the 90 per cent. in currency which they were allowed to draw on the deposit of bonds and the cost of the bonds, and that margin was all the capital that was ever put into the bank. The broker sent the bonds to Washington, got his $90,000, or 90 per cent. on the dollar in currency, and got the margin from the gentlemen—from the men who established the bank. That bank in the late crisis (1873) was one of the first to suspend, but resumed again shortly, and is going on as before. It has a banking-house which cost over $30,000."

(Italics ours.) The reader will notice that there was not a single dollar in the bank, the $10,000 margin and the $90,000 drawn from the treasury going to the broker who furnished the $100,000 in bonds. Five hundred thousand dollars of bonds and $450,000 in national-bank notes could have been purchased and drawn on the same principle. And Mr. Chittenden, who is now a member of Congress, and all the time the bitterest of hard-money men, says: "In the vast proportion of them (th banks) the capital is very small."

Now the next.—Exchange.

Choose Ye.

On the 25th day of March, 1863, the National Bank bill was approved, authorizing the issue of $300,000,000, and restricting the bank issue to this amount.

By the second section of the act of June 30, 1864, it was provided that the total amount of United States notes issued or to be issued shall not exceed $400,000,000.

By these two acts the future paper currency of the country was limited to $700,000,000

At this time there was a much larger amount of treasury notes in circulation, which, by subsequent acts, was more than doubled.

After the war—to-wit, on the 12th day of March, 1866—the Contraction act was passed, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to fund, cancel and retire all the United States treasury notes in excess of $400,000,000.

In 1875 the Resumption act was passed. This act provided for the redemption of all the fractional currency in fractional silver, and the final redemption and retirement of all the greenbacks on January 1, 1879.

This act also removes the $300,000,000 limitation to the bank currency, and opened the doors wide for bank-note inflation by allowing the bank currency to be expanded without limit.

Mark the inevitable result if this bank policy is allowed to be carried out.

After resumption, the financial distress of the country would call loudly for an increase of money.

Property would be worthless, and all that had been under mortgage would be roped into the hands of mortgage holders under the Sheriff's hammer.

The banks having the property would inflate the currency (which would cost them nothing) so as to enhance the value of such as they had on their hands; set all the factories in motion; light up the furnace fires; fill the country again with wealth and prosperity, and, when there was enough of new wealth on hand to make it an object, they would again contract the currency, depress values, inaugurate another period of bankruptcy, haul in their net and bag the game.

Under a well-regulated, uniform volume of Government non-convertible money, beyond the control or monopoly of sharks, panics would never take place.

Expansions and contractions could not occur, but uniform and uninterrupted growth and prosperity would result.—Advocate.

THE Boston Advertiser has a column of reports from the manufactories of New England, which show that mills that have been shut down are everywhere starting up, while other mills are doubling their time and employing new hands. The Advertiser's reports indicate a great revival of manufacturing industry.

Auburn Courier.
AUBURN, INDIANA, NOV. 7th, 1878.
THEODORE REED, - - Editor.

Up to the time of going to press we had but little news from the elections held on Tuesday, enough however, to indicate the defeat of Butler in Massachusetts. The Republicans gain several congressmen in the northern states, while the Democrats gain several in the south. Both branches of Congress will be Democratic.

The Evansville "Courier" is inclined to "sit down" on Samuel J. Tilden. Let her sit.

If we had a few more Marion, Allen and Knox counties in this state, the Democracy would find no trouble in securing candidates for the State ticket nor applicants for positions controlled by the state legislature. We suggest that the "regulars" be induced to take back seats in the next entertainment, and give those a chance who can appreciate the performance.

It has been suggested that the counties of Allen, Whitley, Noble, DeKalb, Steuben and Lagrange be constituted a congressional district in the next apportionment of this state. This certainly would be contiguous territory—being almost in a square form, and the voting population, according to the last census, (which must govern) is 34,954, within 261 of the number to which each district is entitled. It will probably be impossible to form another district in the state with as near the proper number of voters as the one above suggested would have.

We most respectfully refer our Republican contemporaries to the following opinion of Mr. J. A. Wildman, ex-Auditor of State, who has just returned from Washington; he says "the use of money in elections has become such a settled practice that I am of the opinion that it absolutely bars a poor man from running for office. A current report in the east says not less than a quarter of a million of dollars have been put into the canvass in Pennsylvania this year by the Republicans alone." Mr. Wildmans Republicanism cannot be doubted. Is he good authority on the use of money by Republicans?

Thanksgiving, Nov. 28th, 1878. The same old stereotyped document—an annual fashion plate, has again been brought forth from the rubbish of the executive's office. Yes, we are to give thanks; this happy (?) and prosperous (?) American Nation is to bow down in thankful acknowledgment to the Supreme Ruler for the few remaining relics of a once proud and glorious Republic. Humble petitions for our deliverance from the evils of a corrupt administration would be more appropriate just now, than thanks for the bankruptcies, destitution and miseries of the last five years.

While the Republicans are doing so much blowing about Jim Anderson's recent statement, that the Sherman letter was a forgery, why don't they tell what he says about Senator Kellogg's manner of keeping up the intimidation business in Louisiana. Here is what he said in a recent interview.

R.—Was intimidation practiced in Lousiana to the extent claimed?

A.—Suppose the democrats of this county should elect a rough, ignorant negro, who could neither read nor write and other county officers of the same ilk. The people would undoubtedly drive them out of the country. That is just what has happened in East Feliciana, and the fact was telegraphed over the country as an outrage committed by the bulldozers. The fact is, Kellogg and his crowd were kept foisted on the people of Louisiana by the general government, backed by the popular feeling in the north. When that feeling would weaken a dozen or two of the darkies would be killed over the state in order to stiffen it up.

R.—You're joking.

A.—Not much. It is no exaggeration to say that there are a thousand graves in Louisiana to-day that contain the bodies of men who were killed in cold blood in order to further the political ends and personal interest of the Janus-faced scoundrel who misrepresents that state on the floor of the United States Senate.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court in a cause wherein Geo. Emerson, Pliny Watson and Zebulon C. Pheatt are plaintiffs, and James W. Sherod, Christopher and Mary A. Keller Daniel P. Hale, Jacob Kalop, James Draggoo, and Clement Russell, Joseph K. Russell, Nathan Russell, Thomas Russell, George Russell, Allen Russell and Walter M. McClymonds are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of thirteen hundred dollars [$1300], with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose to public sale, to the highest bidder, on SATURDAY, NOV. 16th, A. D. 1878.

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M., of said day, at the door of the Court House in Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the following real estate, to-wit:

The south east quarter of north west quarter of section twenty one [21], township thirty four [34] north of range fourteen [14], east. Also a part of the north east quarter of said quarter section described as follows: Commencing at the south west corner of the north east quarter of the north west quarter of section twenty one [21], aforesaid and running thence north along the west line of said north east quarter of the north west quarter of said section twenty one [21], to the middle of the Auburn and Butler highway, thence in a north easterly direction along the centre of said highway, to a point far enough east to enclose two [2] acres of land, and make the east line thereof parallel with the said west line, thence south to the south line of said north east quarter of said north west quarter, thence west to the place of beginning, all in DeKalb county, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court in a cause wherein Louis Fitzgerald, Trustee, is plaintiff, and C. L. Thomas, Adm'r., and Henrietta F. Andrews, Adm'x., et al. are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of twenty-seven hundred and eighty dollars and seventy-five cents [$2780.75], with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on SATURDAY, NOV. 23d A. D. 1878.

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M. of said day, at the door of the Court House in DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the undivided two-thirds of the following real estate to wit:

The west half of the north east quarter and the north west quarter of the south east quarter of section seven, 7, township thirty-three, 33, north of range fifteen, 15, east, in DeKalb county Indiana.

And if such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the whole of the real estate above described, and if the rents and profits of the whole of said real estate will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the undivided two thirds of the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs, and in the event that the undivided two-thirds of the fee simple of said real estate will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of the whole of said real estate as above described, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

Unpleasant Smell.

There is nothing more offensive than an unpleasant smell. To avoid this, use Dr. Price's Unique Perfumes, which are more delicate and durable than any other odors. MT. HOPE, IND., Nov 2, '78.

MR. EDITOR:—We wish to say through the columns of your paper, that Miss Mary Jane Lawhead, also her mother, were surprised a few evenings ago, and made the recipients of a beautiful quilt Mrs Lawhead receiving ten blocks, her daughter two. We wish to return our sincere thanks for the repast prepared for the guests. HAL.

We have before us the "annual report of the Auditor of Kosciusko county," published in pamphlet form by Gen Reub Williams of the "Indianian" office, Warsaw, Ind. The job is a model of neatness, and exhibits taste and workmanship equal to that done in any of our city offices. "Reub" does a good deal of blowing about his "job office," but he never fails to "show up" accordingly.

We are informed that Mr. W. H. McQuistion, a former resident of Auburn, will return in a short time, and open an extensive dry goods establishment in connection with the grocery house of G. C. Ralston. A large arch will be made between the room now occupied by Mr. Ralston and the room adjoining on the east, and the business of the two houses will be conducted jointly under the firm name of McQuiston & Ralston.

And now comes the "Head Light," a monthly publication in pamphlet form, published at the job office of Mr J. C. Loveland, Garrett, Ind. "Joe" says the object of the work is "to introduce the trade and commerce of Garrett and vicinity," which is certainly a mark of enterprise for which the citizens of that place should be thankful. The pamphlet not only contains well made up advertisements, but is full of interesting reading matter. We wish the publisher abundant success.

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, the greatest orator America has ever produced, will deliver his new and popular lecture "Some Mistakes of Moses," at the Rink, in Fort Wayne, on Wednesday evening, November, 13. Col. Ingersoll has been secured at an enormous expense, and as this is his last season in the lecture field, no one should miss the opportunity of hearing him. The admission fee is only 50 cents. Reserved seats can be secured of George S. Fowler, by mail or telegraph, at 75 cents each. The sale will begin on Saturday morning, November 8.

We did not think it necessary to notice the acknowledgment of political principles recently made by the Albion New Era, but we regard the following from the Decatur "Union" too appropriate to let pass. "The Albion New Era, a paper published in Noble county, which has for a few years, claimed to be independent, has asked the press of the same character, in Northern Indiana, to announce its entire surrender to the Republican cause. The only difference now noticeable, is that it is Republican, and don't lie about it. It was formerly merely independent in its abuse to Democracy."

As Mr. McCord was going east yesterday morning, he noticed a rail across the track of the Eel River railroad near the crossing, and a little farther on was quite a large poll, so placed as to be almost certain to wreck the passenger train which was due in a short time. The attention of the section hands was called to it, and they at once suspicioned a boy about 12 years of age as being the guilty party. The boy had passed enquiring for work a short time before, and was the only person who had been on the track after the workmen had passed over the road. An effort will be made to have the guilty party arrested and punished.

The Indiana Farmer.

This is one of the very best Agricultural weeklies in the country. Now in its thirteen year, it has contributed largely to a higher order of agriculture in the West, being eminently practical in all of its departments. One of its very best features is the large amount of contributions to its columns by intelligent farmers, on Farming, Horticulture, Stock Growing, the Dairy interest, Bee-keeping, Poultry, etc. The ladies' department, made up by intelligent women, on household and domestic duties, is worth the price of the Farmer alone. Its family and literary features also make it a valuable family Journal. We do not see how any intelligent farmer can afford to do without some such weekly visitor, to aid him in his various duties. Address the Indiana Farmer Co., Indianapolis, Ind., for a sample copy. It is furnished at $2 a year. We will send the Indiana farmer and COURIER, both, from now until Jan. 1st, 1880, for $3 25. Payable invariably in advance.

Another Muddle.

The Hazzard affair is still the topic of interest in this community. Since our last issue, George Hazzard was arrested in Logansport at the instance of Messrs. Moody & Hoffman of this place, for highway robbery, and sent to jail, an attempt was made to have him released and brought to Auburn, but George was to sharp for that, and soon his friends rallied to his assistance and after several days skirmishing succeeded in giving bail and making another successful escape. In the meantime his brother Jas. V. was arrested and brought to this place and lodged in jail, where he yet remains. A sister (Mrs Gere) put in an appearance last Thursday, and it was supposed would endeavor to have Jim released on bail, but she left without making any demonstration in that direction. The difficulties with the First National Bank having been partially adjusted by the payment of $17,000, and the bank officers having (as they supposed) succeeded in placing the institution upon a sounder basis than ever, John J. Howes, Assignee of Geo. Hazzard, bankrupt, put in an appearance and commenced proceedings against the Bank to recover the $17,000 which had been paid by Hazzard. Thus the matter stands at the present writing. The power and influence which money will secure has been fully exemplified through the whole of Hazzard's villainous transactions, he finds men of influence everywhere who are willing to lend him a helping hand.

In reference to the oyster shuckers' strike in Baltimore, a packer makes the following statement, which may be of interest to our readers, as it gives an idea of the immense oyster trade of America. "It is estimated that $20,000 a day is paid for shucking oysters in Baltimore during winter, from October to March, fully five months. A hundred cargoes arrive daily, with an average of 1,500 bushels, which will shuck 1,000 gallons, the cost of which will be $200 a cargo for shucking at the prices that have been paid, or $20,000 a day. In summer, it is stated, the wives and children of the shuckers work in fruit packing houses and picking berries in the country. There are usually, during the brisk part of the season, 100 or 150 oyster vessels at least daily in the harbor of Baltimore. The packers represent that shuckers make as high as $3 a day often, and they usually make $1.50 a day without very great skill or very hard work."

The Butler Record of last week grossly misrepresents us in an article concerning the publication of administrator's business in this county, in which it says "Judge Tousley ordered" that all such business should be published in the COURIER. We deny having any knowledge of any such order being in existence until several days after the adjournment of the last term, and then only learned of it upon inquiry as to the right of the Clerk to refuse to publish an administrator's notice in the COURIER when requested so to do, saying in reply to such request when made by a certain administrator "we can't do it," and having previously marked "Republican" on the back of the copy. We were of the same opinion as the Record in reference to the right of administrators and executor's to have their notices published in such paper as best suited them, without any dictations or peremptory refusal by the Clerk or any person else. It is not to be supposed that because administrators or executors as a rule are not posted in law as to these privileges, that the Clerk is to take advantage of the situation and retain all "copy" to be disposed of as he thinks proper. As to the charge of collusion between the Honorable Judge and ourself, we regard it as an insult unbecoming a gentleman, and made without the least foundation, as we only spoke to the Judge twice during the whole term of court, and then only a few words on the street in presence of other gentlemen; we are much obliged to "His Honor" however, for his interest in our behalf, especially as it was without our solicitation or knowledge. We advise the Record not to worry about that "feeble little feeder," as the COURIER does not envy it the small amount of party patronage that in all probability will be considered its share in the next two years; if we are not mistaken the amount of county printing done by the COURIER in the time mentioned will compare favorably with that done by the Record.

Spencerville Items.

—The amount of damage done to Nancy by Jerry's marrying some one else, is to be settled by the courts.

—The "local" from this point for the Republican gets some of his items a little crooked, but then its natural.

—President Helwig, of Springfield, O., college, will preach at the Lutheran church next Sunday, and Rev. J. Devilbis in two weeks from last Sunday, instead of two week, as reported by us last week.

—For lofty step there is none to beat J. W. Dills—it's a boy.

—Prof. Kinsey failed to appear on Sunday.

—A couple of our boys mysteriously disappeared Sunday evening. They were a pair of Franks. The last seen of them they were going west, and up to this writing we have not learned whether there was any one ahead of them this time or not.

The subjects and speakers for the Richland township S. S. Workers' Institute which convenes at Zion Lutheran church, Nov. 14, 1878, are as follows:

1. What I know about boys and how to deal with them in order to retain them in the Sunday school, by F. W. Willis, of Waterloo.
2. The lesson-leaf, its use and abuse, by Rev. N. T. Peddycord, of Corunna.
3. Sunday school music, by Chas. Reed, of Waterloo.
4. Winning and feeding; whom to win, from and to what; whom to feed, on what and how; by Rev. Isaac Lowman.
5. Questions and answers.

THE SPELLING BEE AT ANGEL'S.

REPORTED BY TRUTHFUL JAMES.

And drop them books and first pot-hooks, and hear a yarn from me.
I kin not sling a fairy tale of Jinny's fierce and wild,
For I hold it is unchristian to deceive a simple child;
But, as from school yer driftin' by, I thowt you'd like to hear
Of a "Spellin' Bee" at Angel's that we organized last year.

It warn't made up of gentle kids—of pretty kids—like you.
But gents ez hed their reg'lar growth, and some enough for two.
There woz Lanky Jim of Sutter's Fork, and Bilson of Lagrange,
And "Pistol Joe," who wore, that day, a knife by way of change.
You start, you little kids; you think these are not pretty names,
But each had a man behind it, and—my name is Truthful James.

There was Poker Dick from Whisky Flat, and Smith of Shooter's Bend,
And Brown of Calaveras—which I want no better friend;
Three-fingered Jack—yes, pretty dears—three fingers—you have five.
Clapp cut off two—it's sing'lar, too, that Clapp ain't now alive.
'Twas very wrong, indeed, my dears, and Clapp was much to blame;
Likewise was Jack, in after years, for shootin' of that same.

The nights was kinder lengthenin' out, the rains had jest begun,
When all the camp came up to Pete's to have their usual fun;
But we all sot kinder sad like around the bar-room stove
Till Smith got up, permiskiss-like, and this remark he hove:
"Thar's a new game down in Frisco, that, ez far ez I kin see, Beats euchre, poker and van-toon, they calls the 'Spellin' Bee.'"

Then Brown of Calaveras simply hitched his chair and spake:
"Poker is good enough for me," and Lanky Jim sez, "Shake!"
And Bob allowed he warn't proud, but he "must say right thar
That the man who tackled euchre hed his education squar."
This brought up Lenny Fairchild, the school-master, who said
He knew the game, and he would give instructions on that head.

"For instance, take some simple word," sez he, "like 'separate.'
Now who can spell it?" Dog my skin ef thar was one in eight.
This set the boys all wild at once. The chairs was put in row,
And high upon the bar itself the school-master was raised,
And the bar-keep put his glasses down, and sat and silent gazed.

The first word out was "parallel," and seven let it be,
For, since he drilled them Mexicans in San Jacinto's fight,
Thar warn't no prouder man got up than Pistol Joe that night—
Till "rhythm" came. He tried to smile, then said, "they had him there,"
And Lanky Jim, with one long stride, got up and took his chair.

They'd laugh with glee, and shout to see each other lead the van,
Till the Chair gave out "incinerate," and Brown said he'd be durned
If any such blamed word as that in school was ever learned.

When "phthisis" came they all sprung up, and vowed the man who rung
As they sat down again I saw in Bilson's eye a flash,
And Brown of Calaveras was a-twistin' his mustache,
And when at last Brown slipped on "gneiss" and Bilson took his chair,
He dropped some casual words about some folks who dyed their hair.

And then the Chair grew very white, and the Chair said he'd adjourn,
But Poker Dick remarked that he would wait and get his turn;
Then with a tremblin' voice and hand, and with a wanderin' eye,
The Chair next offered "eider-duck," and Dick began with "I,"
And Bilson smiled—then Bilson shrieked. Just how the fight begun
I never knowed, for Bilson dropped and Dick he moved up one.

Then certain gents arose and said "they'd business down in camp,"
And "ez the road was rather dark, and ez the night was damp, They'd"—here got up Three-Fingered Jack, and locked the door and yelled:
"No, not one mother's son goes out till that thar word is spelled!"
But, while the words were on his lips, he groaned and sank in pain,
And sank with Webster on his chest and Worcester on his brain.

Was huntin' up authorities thet no one else could see;
And Brown got down behind the stove, allowin' he "was cold,"
Till it upsot, and down his legs the cinders freely rolled;
And several gents called "Order!" till, in his simple way,
Poor Smith began with "O"—"R"—"or"—and he was dragged away.

O, little kids, my pretty kids, down on your knees and pray!
You've got your eddication in a peaceful sort of way;
And bear in mind thar may be sharps ez slings their spellin' square,
But likewise slings their bowie-knives without a thought or care—
You wants to know the rest, my dears? That's all! In me you see
The only gent that lived to tell about thet Spellin' Bee!

He ceased and passed, that truthful man; the children went their way
With downcast heads and downcast hearts—but not to sport or play.
For when at eve the lamps were lit, and supperless to bed
Each child was sent, with tasks undone and lessons all unsaid,
No man might know the awful woe that thrilled their youthful frames,
As they dreamed of Angel's Spelling Bee and thought of Truthful James.

AT THE GATE.

It was a bright day in early November, with clear skies and a very keen breeze rustling the few many-colored leaves clinging to the trees along the streets of the fine old country town. A very quiet, genteel-looking street, lined with handsome residences, it was; and from the handsomest of them all a lady came forth with a slow step, as if her only object was to enjoy as much as possible of the bright sunshine and the clear and healthy air.

She was young and quite pretty, with attractive, resolute features, with blue eyes dazzlingly beautiful. Her fair complexion was in perfect harmony with the rosette of blue velvet on the front of her round hat; and her walking-dress of gray silk was neatly fitted and stylish. This lady was Agnes Carroll, the niece and heiress of the wealthy solicitor, Mr. John Carroll, who lived in the stately mansion she had just left.

She came down the long garden walk slowly and thoughtfully, and paused at the gate, looking over it with an exclamation of surprise. On the foot-path a man was lying; his face was turned away, and he was so motionless that Agnes fancied he was dead; and, hurriedly unclosing the gate, she hastened to him.

Evidently he had fallen headlong, for his clothes were in great disorder, and his hat crushed under the side of his head, which lay against the garden fence. His face was pale and thin; his hair and long unkempt beard were a bright brown, and his garments, though much the worse for wear and very ill-fitting, had once been of the finest material. His shoes were old and much worn, and Agnes could see that he had no socks. As she gazed at the wretched outcast, a tear trembled in her eye and fell upon the haggard face over which she was bending; and then Agnes walked back to the house and sent some of the servants out to bring him under shelter.

The stable-boy said he was drunk, but Agnes felt quite sure he was mistaken; the stranger could not be inebriated, she said, and ordered them to carry him in and give him a comfortable bed.

When the doctor for whom she had sent had arrived, he said Miss Carroll was right. The man was not intoxicated, but in the last stages of starvation, and had fallen in the road out of pure inability to take another step.

When Mr. Carroll came Agnes told him of the occurrence, and made him promise that the poor man need not leave the house until fully recovered, and that, if he could, he would assist him to some other way of life than that which had brought him to their gate.

Having gained her uncle's promise, which she knew would be kept, Agnes again dressed and set out for her long-delayed walk. Before she had gone far she was met by a young gentleman, who stopped her when he saw her, and remarked:

"I was on my way to call on you, Miss Carroll," turning and walking along by her side.

"How is your mother to-day, Mr. Bell?" asked Agnes as they walked along.

"Quite well, thank you. We are expecting my sister home from school, and she is all excitement."

"Fanny will be quite an addition to our circle this winter."

"Yes. By the way, Miss Carroll, will you lend your assistance in getting up those tableaux for our fancy fair?"

"I am sorry, Mr. Bell, but my time is so fully occupied that I cannot undertake to be anything more than a spectator."

Mr. Bell was evidently disappointed, and left Agnes at her gate with a parting request that she would call when she heard of Fanny Bell's arrival.

Agnes, when she entered the house, inquired after the strange man. He was still in a stupor, she was told, and they were afraid that he would die. Agnes stole up to the room where he lay, above the servants' hall, and her heart gave a great throb of pain and pity as she gazed on the white face and shrunken fingers of the poor fellow.

His old garments had been replaced by a clean and comfortable dressing-gown, and the room was warm and sunshiny, but, it mattered little to the unconscious waif over whom she bent. Agnes had not always been the rich and petted heiress; time was when she, too, had known want, and care, and toil, and had been friendless and forsaken of all but God. This was all ended years ago; but the sight of the stranger carried her back to her girlhood, and the friends of whom she had lost sight when her uncle found her and bore her away to his stately home.

There was one she remembered most of all, a poor, struggling, law-student, half-starved and half-clothed, who supported an invalid mother from the miserable pittance earned as a copyist; but not all the penury and want which was his daily portion could disguise the fact that he had talent, and would rise in the world if the laborious life he was leading did not kill him; and in Agnes Carroll's eyes he was a hero to be worshiped at a distance.

They had been friends—nothing more. The blue eyes and prematurely old face of the young girl had found no entrance to the frozen heart of Harly Morton. He was kind, as he was to all created beings, nothing more. From the misery of hopeless poverty and hopeless love combined he, at least, was spared.

And Agnes Carroll went away to her good fortune with the good wishes and a warm pressure of the student's hand, that was all; she and all women but his mother were as mere shadows on the wall.

She went away and forgot him, for she was young, and life offered her many delights, but she measured all men by the idol of her girlhood, and though she knew that he had never cared for her, and that at last his memory was indifferent to her, yet, strangely, all men fell short of her standard, and eight years after she was 25 and still Agnes Carroll.

Two days after, when Mr. Percy Bell came to tell Agnes that his sister Fanny had come, she told him the story of the stranger she had found at the gate, and added that he was now dangerously ill of a fever; told him also to beg Fanny to waive formality and come and see her. There was nothing on the stranger's person to give the slightest clew to his identity, indeed. Would Percy Bell like to see him?

No, Percy did not care to see him. Very likely he was some wandering scamp, much beneath the notice of respectable people. Percy Bell said this in a polite tone, emphasized by the pleasant smile in his light gray eyes, and he wondered very much why Miss Carroll was so haughty immediately after and never offered him her hand at parting. He did not know that Agnes Carroll had been on the watch to measure the soul of her admirer, and that again her ideal lifted itself to an unapproachable height above him. He did not know, he never knew, that after that speech his star set from the heaven of Agnes Carroll's vision. Unfortunate Percy! He was handsome, well connected and well-to-do in the world; but he had never known what it was to go supperless to bed—he had never grown thin and hollow-eyed with hard study and unremitting toil—and so, as Agnes bitterly repeated to herself, she could not love him.

Perhaps it would be well for her to hunt up some beggar, and bestow her hand and fortune on him. Anything to get rid of her senseless folly about Harly Morton, who had probably never thought of her once since their paths had so widely diverged; and Agnes strove to put her troublesome thoughts to flight by taking her work to the sick man's room and, sitting down by the window, sewed and read by turns, or talked to the nurse who was there, until the shades of night came on and the dinner-bell summoned her down stairs. That night the doctor pronounced his patient out of danger, and Agnes went no more to the sick-room, but resumed her old round of duties, and in her busy life nearly forgot him, until her uncle introduced the subject.

"My dear," he said, "I have been talking to the stranger invalid, and find that he is quite a gentleman. He has studied law, and I don't know but that I shall take him into the office. Besides, he is from Ashville."

"Ashville?" repeated Agnes, with sudden interest. "I should like to know about some of my old friends in Ashville; I wish you would ask him to dinner, uncle, if he has anything to wear. Such a wretched-looking object as he was! I am anxious to see how much a good bed and care and food have done for him. It was certainly a strange plight for a gentleman. Has he told you his story?"

"No, he only said he came from Ashville, and was in search of employment. He was robbed on his way here, and says that he should, doubtless, have died had we not found him as we did. I believe I will invite him to dinner."

Accordingly, when Agnes came to the parlor before dinner she found the stranger there; her uncle was with him, and, as Agnes entered, he said:

"My dear, permit me to present Mr. ——. Upon my word," he exclaimed, "I never asked your name!"

"It is Harly Morton. It may be that your niece remembers me."

Agnes looked into his face, and laid her cold hand in his. She did remember him, for the long beard and unkempt locks were gone, but oh! how changed! Thin and pale he had always been, but he was ghostly now—a mere shadow of the olden man.

Agnes had never, in her wildest imaginations, dreamed that her first love would be cast helpless and broken down at her feet; she always had pictured him as a rising power in the world, as esteemed and honored for his goodness and talent; and now he stood before her a failure, his life-work yet untouched. She drew her hand away, and coldly-kind she sat down to entertain him.

She went to dinner in a sort of dream, and listened to the story he told in a dazed way. It was certainly a pitiful tale; and Mr. Carroll promised to help him, which he did by taking him into his office as managing clerk, and letting him sit at his table and converse in his parlor.

And Mr. Morton was gentlemanly, and kept his place, never presuming on his old acquaintance with Agnes—never seeking to build the old friendship between them.

Percy Bell and Fanny came to see Agnes often, and Agnes returned their visits. She was quite as friendly to Percy Bell now as before the entrance of Harly Morton upon the scene; and that gentleman's hopes were again in the ascendant, and he certainly made an agreeable contrast to the ghostly, hollow-eyed clerk, whom Agnes rarely recognized. So affairs went on until Harly Morton had regained all his original good looks, and had made himself indispensable to his employer.

One night Agnes gave a large party. It was her 26th birthday, and she laughingly told her friends that it was the inaugural ball of her old maidenhood, and she meant it to be a success. And a success it was. Fanny and Percy Bell were there, and so was Harly Morton.

Agnes unbent on the occasion and danced with him once; then refused to dance any more that evening, and devoted herself to her guests.

Just before supper she came across a gentleman in the shadows of the deserted drawing-room, and, tapping him on the shoulder, she playfully said: "And whom do I find playing the wall-flower?"

She started back ere the words were finished, for the gentleman turned a face of unutterable agony toward her, and she saw that it was Harly Morton.

"Miss Carroll," he cried, "I love a lady who is as far above me as yon cold moon is above me now, and my heart is breaking."

"Why do you tell me this?" she said, retreating haughtily, as he sought to take her hand.

"Aggie, Aggie," cried Fanny Bell at the door. "Will you show Percy those engravings you told me about?"

"To-morrow," he said, "I leave this house forever."

It was 3 o'clock before the last guest had departed and the house was still. Mr. Carroll had gone to his room long ago, but Harly Morton still stood at the window and watched the stars.

By and by the drawing-room door unclosed and he saw Agnes come and throw herself upon the sofa, and, putting the cushion under her head, begin to weep violently. There was no light in the room save that which came from an open grate, but he could see that Agnes had not removed her evening dress, and wondered what could be the matter. He was about to make his presence known, when he was conscious of a stealthy step in the hall. In a moment the door unclosed and a man entered. Morton could see that he was muffled to his eyes, and carried a dark lantern, and then, as Agnes became aware of the intruder's presence, she started up with a terrific shriek and rushed into the music room and cowered in the shadows. The man with the lantern stood in thought a moment and immediately followed her.

"Come, girl," he said, grasping her shoulder, "hand over them rings and bracelets, and you're all right. I locked the old gentleman's door and the door from the servants' hall, and how in the name of wonder you found out what was under your bed I don't know. You might screech all night and gain nothing but a sore throat."

Agnes by this time was senseless, and the robber proceeded to remove the jewels from his unresisting victim, when he found himself caught in a powerful grasp, overpowered and bound before he could recover his wits. Harly Morton did his work quickly and well, and pinioned the burglar with the heavy cord of the lace curtains, which he was carelessly drawing between his fingers when Agnes entered the drawing-room.

By this time Mr. Carroll had forced open his door, and hurried to the scene of action. The burglar had left a coarse sack in the hall, containing the most valuable of the silver plate he had found in the dining-room, and, had he been satisfied with that, he might have got off safely. But he was tempted to enter Agnes' room, and had just time to secrete himself when Agnes, who had remained in the parlor a long time after her other guests, came into her room and sat down before her dressing glass, and, leaning her head upon her hands, was buried deep in thought, when, at the foot of her bed, which was just alongside of her glass, she saw a strange-looking sack, and beside it a man's boot protruding from beneath the bed. It was in the glass she saw them, and, with a thrill of terror, she rose up and stole down to the parlor; and, remembering the presence of Harly in the music room, was about to seek him when she was overcome by her excitement and terror, and threw herself upon the sofa, hoping he would come out and speak to her. All this she told afterward, but, when the police arrived with the messenger whom Mr. Carroll had sent for, then the robber knew that all was over, and his night's work undone by Agnes' opportune discovery.

At his trial he confessed that he had stolen into the house during the bustle of the entertainment, and, after the supper-table was deserted, he helped himself to every article he fancied. His sack was well laden, and doubtless he would have escaped had he been satisfied with its contents.

Harly Morton left the house as he had resolved. To all Mr. Carroll's entreaties and Agnes' proffered thanks he said:

"I only did my duty as you did yours when you found me at the gate, homeless and starving. It's only Heaven's mercy that I was saved from the burning. Beholding heaven, yet feeling hell, I have been during my stay in this house, and I feel that duty and self-respect alike command my departure."

He went, but not to stay long, for one day there came to him a note which read as follows:

MR. MORTON: Will you come to me and finish the story you were telling me when Fanny Bell interrupted us the night of the party?

AGNES CARROLL.

Harly Morton went, and the story, no doubt, was long and interesting, for Mr. Carroll had to take his tea alone, and Agnes astonished him by walking into the library where he was dozing over his papers and saying:

"Uncle, permit me to inform you that this gentleman, who styles himselve 'a brand from the burning,' is, from henceforth, my exclusive property."

Mr. Carroll was quite satisfied, and made Harly Morton his partner; and he and Agnes were married quietly, and the first intimation their dear 500 friends received of the turn affairs had taken was the marriage notice—no cards—in the local paper.

And Percy Bell said to Fanny: "I suppose she would have married me if I had been found tipsy at her gate and captured a burglar."

"To be sure, Percy. If you ever take a fancy to a woman like Agnes again, you must starve yourself till you are pale, and then break your neck, if you can do so without killing yourself."

"I'll remember your advice," said Percy, dryly; and the subject was dropped, and neither of them ever knew that Agnes had married the man whom she had loved for ten years—her first, last and only ideal.

A Sad Romance.

The inquest held to-day on Miss Ella Hanbury, who died from exhaustion consequent on long immersion in the Thames and shock from the Princess Alice collision, is the closing chapter of a touching romance. Miss Hanbury was an American girl of 19, only child of a wealthy New York merchant. She was on a visit here, and went for a run on the river, in company with her engaged husband, Mr. Harrison, a member of the American bar. When the crash came, Harrison embraced her and bade her good-by, saying they would meet in heaven. She saw no more of him. They were parted on the instant, and she found herself in the water. Partly swimming, partly supported by a plank, she floated for two hours and a half, and was then picked up apparently none the worse, for she was about the next week. She then learned, however, the loss of her lover, and, since then, has altered and pined till she took, two days ago, to the bed from which her body was this day borne to the grave. Miss Hanbury was a very rich heiress, and what makes the fatality still sadder is that, while the inquest was in progress, a telegram announcing the death of her father was handed to the Coroner.—London letter.

A Friendly Father.

A stern parent, so much dreaded by young and spoony serenaders, is not always such a ferocious monster as he is generally represented. Three young gentlemen, accompanied by a guitar, began singing sweetly under the window of a favored one, the other evening, when a dark object was seen to issue from the corner of the house. It moved slowly and cautiously, and seemed to be armed. They were too much devoted to the art to break off in the middle of the strain which they were in at the time, so they held the fort tremblingly until it was finished, and then prepared to decamp hastily. This was interrupted, however, by the motions of the aforesaid object, who, now being near enough to be seen more clearly, beckoned to them frantically, and whispered: "Hold on, boys—don't be 'frade; it's me." And, sure enough, it was him, the father of the angel they had called to serenade. He beckoned to the party to follow him around to the side of the house, where he explained matters as well as he could under the circumstances. "I've been out a little to-night," said he, "and I'm tryin' to get in the house without bein' heard."—Exchange.

A Place Where Everything is Finished.

Many things strike me as being peculiar to New England. The roads are as good as our pikes in the West, being naturally hard and smooth. Toll-gates are unknown. Men do not ride on horseback. Everybody goes in buggies or carriages, drawn by one horse. There are no farm wagons, hay carts with two wheels, drawn by oxen, serving all farming purposes. Everything looks smooth and neat. There are no rough edges, no fence-corners full of weeds, no unsightly plowed ground, no rotten rails, but hay fields clipped clean, and stone walls half overgrown with ferns and golden rod. Even the bowlders which crop out here and there in pastures and orchards cover themselves decorously with lichens. Nothing is bare, new, crude or raw. Everything seems to have been finished, and the order of life settled for several generations. There are no new buildings, no improvements or innovations, but the same buildings grow gray with age and gather lichens on them, and the people walk in the ruts that their fathers walked in, and never do anything striking or original. Farming is done in a careful, frugal manner, and nothing is allowed to go to waste. There is no speculation. A real-estate agent would starve here; so would a surveyor. Every one invests in slow-going concerns that pay moderate interest, and, when one of them fails, 'tis as if the granite of their hills had been riven, and the old-established order of things dissolved into chaos. If any one is enterprising or original he goes out West, or to the cities, and the country is left with a conservative, orthodox population, who have respect for ancient traditions. To upset established customs, and disregard the traditions of their forefathers, would seem to them like pulling down the pillars of the universe upon themselves, and toppling all together in a crash of dust and confusion. It is interesting to be a spectator and look on, but I should kick against the pricks if I had to live in this orthodox dullness. I should want to do some unprecedented thing to startle the inhabitants of this mill-pond existence, just as I used to have a desire to talk out loud in a Quaker meeting, or throw a book across the house and startle the elders on the topmost seats.—*New England Cor. What the Ancients Ate.

The diversity of substances which we find in the catalogue of articles of food is as great as the variety with which the art or the science of cookery prepares them. The notions of the ancients on this most important subject are worthy of remark. Their taste regarding meat was various. Beef they considered the most substantial food; hence it constituted the chief nourishment of their athletæ. Camels' and dromedaries' flesh was much esteemed, their heels most especially. Donkey flesh was in high repute; Mæcenas, according to Pliny, delighted in it; and the wild ass, brought from Africa, was compared to venison. The hog and the wild boar appear to have been held in great estimation; and a hog was called "animal propter convivia natum;" but the classical portion of the sow was somewhat singular—"vulva nil dulcius ampia." Their mode of killing swine was as refined in barbarity as in epicurism. Plutarch tells us that the gravid sow was actually tramped to death, to form a delicious mass fit for the gods. At other times, pigs were slaughtered with red-hot spits, that the blood might not be lost. Stuffing a pig with assafœtida and very small animals was a luxury called "porcus Trojanus;" alluding, no doubt, to the warriors who were concealed in the Trojan horse. Young bears, dogs and foxes (the latter more esteemed when fed upon grapes) were also much admired by the Romans, who were also so fond of various birds that some consular families assumed the names of those they most esteemed. Cattius tells us how to drown fowls in Falernian wine, to render them more luscious and tender. Pheasants were brought over from Colchis, and deemed at one time such a rarity that one of the Ptolemies bitterly lamented his never having tasted any. Peacocks were also very highly esteemed.

An Eggcellent Joke.

A man with a face tanned like a side of leather came into the office yesterday, and, leaning over the railing that divides our sacred precincts from the sordid world, said: "I laid an egg——" "Eh!" we exclaimed, in great surprise. "I laid an egg——" "Hold on—hold on!" we shouted, interrupting him again, and grabbing up our pencil. "Now proceed." "I laid an egg four inches long——" "Impossible!" we ejaculated, looking at him in amazement. "I laid an egg four inches long and two wide——" "But, dear sir," we said, "it is not possible; it would be a miracle." "I laid an egg four inches long and two wide on your table, you numb-headed fool," roared the man, dancing up and down in a passion, "but if you notice it now I'll take and ram it down your idiotic throat," and he rushed out of the office, taking steps seven feet long, and went swearing and raving up the street, while we softly felt of the brain bumps on our head, and winked gently at an image of the "Greek Slave" on the desk.—Rockland Courier.

Very Funny.

They were having so much merriment at a Rochester wedding that a young man of the name of Link drew a revolver and began, in fun, to terrify the young women guests with threats to shoot them. Pretty soon the weapon did go off and the bullet went through Miss Libby Grush's cheek, knocked out three of her teeth, and lodged in the root of her tongue. That stopped the fun.

A SIMILAR CASE.

Jack, I hear you've gone and done it
Yes, I know; most fellows will;
Went and tried it once myself, sir,
Though, you see, I'm single still.
And you met her—did you tell me?
Down at Newport last July,
And resolved to ask the question
At a soirée? So did I.

I suppose you left the ball-room,
With its music and its light;
For they say love's flame is brightest
In the darkness of the night.
Well, you walked along together,
Overhead the starlit sky,
And I'll bet—old man, confess it
You were frightened. So was I.

So you strolled along the terrace,
Saw the summer moonlight pour
All its radiance on the waters,
As they rippled on the shore;
Till at length you gathered courage,
When you saw that none were nigh
Did you draw her close and tell her
That you loved her? So did I.

Well, I needn't ask you farther,
And I'm sure I wish you joy,
Think I'll wander down and see you
When you're married—eh, my boy!
When the honeymoon is over
And you're settled down, we'll try
What? The deuce you say! Rejected,
You rejected? So was I!

A YANKEE auctioneer lately indulged in the following little bit of the pathetic: "Gentlemen, if my father and mother stood where you do, and didn't buy these boots—these elegant boots—when they were going for $1, I should feel it my duty as a son to tell both of 'em that they were false to themselves and false to their country."

HOW BUSY is death in our midst! Every time we catch sight of the head line, "Death of a Millionare" we catch our breath with a convulsive gasp and press our nervous hand on our anxious heart to still its tremulous fluttering, until our apprehensive eyes can look further on, and see that it is not some near and dearly loved relative that has passed away. It is cruel to head a death notice in such an ambiguous manner.

"DO YOU know, dearest," he said, reflectively, as they watched Brindle quietly chewing her cud, "that a cow's mouth reminds me of a flower?" "What sort of a flower, love?" said she. "Cowslip," and his eyes softened as he gazed down upon her, and, looking up reverently at so much original genius, she fixed her mouth like the top of a rubber tobacco pouch, and he smoothed it out with his tongue.—Breakfast Table.

YESTERDAY two grammarians were wrangling on Jefferson street, one contending that it was only proper to say "my wages is high," while the other noisily insisted that the correct thing was "my wages are high." Finally they stopped a day laborer, and submitted the question to him, Which do you say, "your wages is high," or your wages are high?" "Oh, to the devil wid yer nonsense," he said, resuming his pick, "yer nayther ov ye right; me wages is low, thunderin' low."—Hawk Eye.

Japan is now carrying forward many practical works. Railways are being constructed, telegraph lines put up, mineral resources developed, and its merchant marine placed in active communication with surrounding countries. Never before has there been greater activity in agricultural pursuits.

BILL LONGLEY, OF TEXAS.

A Career of Crime Unparalleled in American Criminal Records.

William P. Longley, better known as Bill Longley, who recently expiated on the gallows at Giddings, Texas, one of over a score of murders, was unquestionably the most atrocious criminal in the country. Longley had certainly killed eight men, six whites and two negroes, besides shooting several others who survived; but it is confidently believed that at least thirty men died by his hand.

He began his extraordinary career at the age of 15, when he and a companion amused themselves by mounting on horseback and firing at every negro whom they encountered. Those were stormy times even for Texas, when it was emerging from the civil war, and civil law was virtually dead in the greater portion of the State. The immunity which Longley enjoyed emboldened him to more daring crimes, until, before reaching his majority, he was one of the most dreaded men north of the Rio Grande. While yet quite young he started through the Indian Nation with a companion, but was attacked by outlaws, his partner killed, and himself put to flight. When his horse gave out he shot an Indian and took his from him. This he repeated several times, until the Creeks and Choctaws gathered and pursued him. Longley's horse was killed, himself wounded, and he took to the bush. Here he was found by a squaw, who brought him food and helped conceal him until the hue and cry was over, when he got away.

Longley subsequently joined a party which started for the Black Hills, but were turned back by the Government troops, and he enlisted in the service. He made an arrangement with the Quartermaster to swindle the Government, but the two attempted to cheat each other, quarreled, and Longley shot the Quartermaster dead, and then took to the mountains. He was followed, captured, and sentenced to a long confinement in prison, but escaped, as he declared, through bribing the guard.

While tramping through the woods in Arkansas one day he stopped at a cabin, where he was welcomed by its only occupant, a powerful-limbed, heavily-bearded man. While the two were in conversation the cabin was surrounded by a vigilance committee, that had come for the express purpose of lynching the host, who was a noted horse-thief named West. Finding a handsome, graceful guest, they concluded he belonged to the gang. Longley protested, and appealed to the horse-thief, who grimly shook his head. As there was no help for himself, he thought his visitor might as well bear him company on the road to the sudden gallows.

Both men were carried out and hanged to the limb of a tree, and then the seven vigilantes galloped away. A brother of West was hiding in the woods, watching the proceedings. As the horsemen disappeared, he ran up and cut down the horse-thief. He was already dead, but when Longley was lowered he was found to be alive. The knot of the rope had caught in his ear, and in the course of an hour he was as well as ever.

Longley straightway devoted himself to "getting even" with the vigilance committee. He caught and hanged the man who put the rope around his neck, and claimed to have shot all the others, though it is scarcely credible that such was the case.

Some of Longley's murders were particularly atrocious. He deliberately killed the Rev. Mr. Ray, of Arkansas, because that gentleman attempted to persuade a young girl not to marry the desperado. One night a soldier expressed an unfavorable opinion of Texans, and Longley sent a bullet through his brain. His last crime, so far as known, was that of walking into a field where a man was plowing and firing one barrel at him. The poor fellow fell badly wounded, and asked Longley why he had shot him. "For fun," was the answer, as the young scoundrel emptied the other barrel into his victim's body, instantly killing him. It should be stated that Longley suspected this person of being concerned in the slaying of a distant relative of his.

Finally this desperado seemed to weary of his massacres, and went into Nacogdoches county, where he engaged himself to a farmer. He wrought quietly for several months, and formed a strong friendship for a young man in the neighborhood, to whom, finally, under a solemn pledge of secrecy, he gave his correct name. His confidant communicated with the authorities, who, knowing the desperate character of their man, succeeded in surrounding him while he was unarmed and working in a field. His trial and conviction followed, and, after several appeals, he suffered the penalty of his numerous crimes.

A New Intoxicant.

The English journal Iron says: We are indebted to the race perhaps lowest in the scale of intelligence for the discovery of a new stimulant, which appears to combine the properties of all which the perverted ingenuity of mankind had previously invented. It is smoked and chewed, or applied in a plaster behind the ears. According to the quantity used, it produces either pleasant exhilaration or intense and continuous excitement; like the cocoa leaves of the South American Indian, it invigorates and keeps up the strength through periods of protracted exertion; and in battle it supplies, when requisite, the Dutch courage infused by brandy and bhang. Its name is "pitcherine," so that the jovial Australian may, with but a slight alteration in one of our own good-fellowship phrases, talk of "his friend and pitcherine." It is, however, possible that the stronger European brain may not be so easily influenced by the new intoxicant; for a shovelful of coarse sugar in a bucket of water is sufficient to fuddle a whole tribe of Australian aborigines.

A Healthy Village.

The village of Kollmar, in Holstein, is noted for the longevity of its inhabitants. It is not uncommon for persons to live there to be 95, 98 and even 100 years old, and a man of 70 is considered middle-aged. In the last fourteen years twelve diamond weddings—the seventy-fifth anniversary—have been celebrated there, and three more are impending. No village of its size—it has 1,500 population—in all Europe has, it is said, so many people who ascribe their longevity to simple habits, out-door exercise and steady occupation.

PERIHELION AND PESTILENCE.

What May Ensue During the Next Seven Years—A Period of Suffering and Death.

[From the Science of Health.]

If there is anything in "astrological eriology," we are approaching one of the most pestilential periods of earth's history. Since the commencement of the Christian era, the perihelia of the four great planets of the solar system—Jupiter, Uranus, Saturn and Neptune—have not been coincident. But this is about to occur, and, in the language of Dr. Knapp, who has traced the history of the greatest epidemics that ever afflicted the human race to the perihelia of these planets, there will soon be "lively times for the doctors." The theory is that when one or more of the large planets is nearest to the sun, the temperature and condition of our atmosphere are so disturbed as to cause injurious vicissitudes, terrible rains, prolonged droughts, etc., resulting in the destruction of crops and pestilences among human beings and domestic animals.

Dr. Knapp has collected a mass of statistical data, all going to show that perihelion data have always been marked by unusual mortality, and that sickness and death have invariably corresponded with the planets in perihelion at the same time. The revolution of Jupiter round the sun is accomplished in a little less than twelve years, of Saturn in a little less than thirty years, and of Neptune in about 164 years. If it be true, therefore, that the perihelia of these planets occasion atmospheric conditions unfavorable to life, pestilential periods should occur once in a dozen years, and aggravated and wide-spread epidemics at longer intervals. In tracing the history of epidemics for more than 2,000 years, Dr. Knapp finds the facts in all cases to validate the theory. Thus, in the sixth, and again in the sixteenth centuries, three of these planets were coincident in perihelion, and those were the most pestilential times of the Christian era.

But soon we are to have, for the first time in 2,000 years, all four of these planets against us. They will be at their nearest approach to the sun in, or soon after, 1880, so that for a few years, say from 1880 to 1885, the vitality of every living thing will be put to a severe and trying ordeal. Some persons think they see, in the signs of the times, evidences of the great disasters in the immediate future. The excessive heat, the unexampled cold, the prevalence of flood and disasters at sea, the general failure of the potato crop, the widespread chill fever among human beings, and the equal prevalence of the epizootic among animals, are mentioned as among the premonitions of the rapidly-approaching perihelion.

Well, "to be forewarned is to be forearmed." Accidents excepted, we know very well that the persons of more vigorous constitutions and more hygienic habits will have the best chance to survive whatever adverse influences the extraordinary perihelia will occasion. It is well known to physicians that, in all pestilences, plague, typhus, small-pox, cholera, murrain, etc., the intemperate, the dissipated, and those whose sanitary conditions were bad, furnished the victims.

We do not write to alarm anyone, nor to make a sensation. Readers can judge for themselves what importance to attach to the subject. That the conjoint perihelion of all the large planets of the solar system, one of which, Jupiter, is 1,000 times as large as the earth, must disturb our atmosphere and temperature very considerably, is probable; that this disturbance must be injurious to health and life is certain; and that these periods have hitherto been pestilential is a matter of record. How much we shall suffer during the next dozen or fifteen years, depends very much upon how nearly we live a life in accordance with the laws of life.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

Cure for Hay Fever.—The Rev. H. H. Wood, curate of Hemingford, Abbots, Huntingdonshire, England, writes that hay fever may be instantly relieved by bathing the nostrils and the closed eyelids with spirits of camphor and warm water.

Meals and Health.—Take meals at regular hours; breakfast should be enjoyed soon after rising, and before any laborious exercise. Eat no late suppers. Severe physical or mental labor during the last hour, either before or after meals, should be avoided when possible.

Remedy for Poison.—Dr. S. A. Brown, of the navy, who is stationed at Mare island, Cal., announces that he has discovered a certain remedy for poisoning from sumac, ivy, etc. It is bromine dissolved in olive oil, cosmoline or glycerine. He used twenty drops of bromine to an ounce of oil, rubbing it on the affected part three or four times a day, and washing it off occasionally with castile soap.

Treatment of Diphtheria.—I wish to suggest to physicians, in treating diphtheria, to use internally a very weak solution of carbolic acid, and for the throat or fauces a solution of hydrochloric acid, about the strength of strong cider vinegar. I have treated every case successfully so far with the above-named remedies. Croup is relieved instantly with the acid solution. As far as my experience goes, the last-named remedy stops all morbid development in the throat as surely as the hoe will stop pig-weeds on a hot, sunny day. Apply it to the throat with a brush or sponge, or use as a gargle.—Dr. Bachelder, in Journal of Chemistry.

Onions for Coughs.—An anonymous writer says: "We are often troubled with severe coughs, the result of colds of long standing, which may turn to consumption or premature death. Hard coughs cause sleepless nights by constant irritation in the throat, and a strong effort to throw off offensive matter from the lungs. The remedy I propose has often been tried by me with good results, which is simply to take into the stomach before retiring for the night a piece of raw onion, after chewing. This esculent in an uncooked state is very heating, and tends to collect the waters from the lungs and throat, causing immediate relief to the patient.

Excessive Use of Medicine.—It would be utterly impossible to tell how many constitutions have been impaired, how many digestions ruined, how many complexions spoiled, and how many purses emptied, through medicine. What is that you say—that a stitch in time saves nine, and that the right medicine, quickly taken, averts danger? Very likely. I quite believe that. But, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, where is the danger, and what is the emergency of the case? Medicine is often the precursor of after misery, and the poor constitution has to pay dearly for its medical fillip. The wiser philosophy of the present day is gradually delivering us from these potent perils. Nature has a self-righting power within her; there is a kind of vis-medicatrix in the physical frame. Treat the body kindly; let as much pure air as possible get to the lungs, and as much fresh water as possible be applied to the flesh, and as much healthy exercise as duty permits be given to the muscles, and early rising, as circumstances allow, be afforded for the recruitment of the brain, and then medicine will be a very avoidable affair.

Flesh Wounds.—Every person should know how to treat a flesh-wound, because one is liable to be placed in circumstances away from surgical and veterinary aid, where he may save his own life, the life of a friend or of a beast, simply by the aid of a little common-sense. In the first place, close the lips of the wound with the hands and hold them firmly together to check the flow of blood until several stitches can be taken and a bandage applied. Then bathe the wound for a long time in cold water. "Should it be painful," a correspondent says, "take a panful of burning coals and sprinkle upon them common brown sugar, and hold the wounded part in the smoke. In a minute or two the pain will be allayed, and the recovery proceeds rapidly. In my case a rusty nail had made a bad wound in my foot. The pain and nervous irritation were severe. This was all removed by holding it in smoke fifteen minutes, and I was able to resume my reading in comfort. We have often recommended it to others with like result. Last week one of my men had a finger-nail torn out by a pair of ice-tongs. It became very painful, as was to be expected. Held in sugar-smoke twenty minutes, the pain ceased, and promised speedy recovery."

Though Shaking Like an Aspen Leaf

With the chills and fever, the victim of malaria may still recover by using the celebrated specific, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which not only breaks up the most aggravated attacks, but prevents their recurrence. It is infinitely preferable to quinine, not only because it does the business far more thoroughly, but also on account of its perfect wholesomeness and invigorating action upon the entire system. Testimony is concurrent, positive and ample, showing the decisive nature of its effects, and that it is no mere palliative. Physicians concede its excellence, and there is a constant influx of communications from persons in every class of society avouching its merits, and bearing witness to its superiority over other remedies for malarial disease. It is especially popular throughout the West, wherever fever and ague prevails, as it does in many of the fairest and most fertile portions of that vast region.

Are Fat People Healthy?

Why are fat people always complaining? asks some one who entertains the popular though erroneous notion that health is synonymous with fat. Fat people complain because they are diseased. Obesity is an abnormal condition of the system, in which the saccharine and oleaginous elements of the food are assimilated to the partial exclusion of the muscle-forming and brain-producing elements. In proof of this, it is only necessary to assert the well-known fact that excessively fat people are never strong, and seldom distinguished for mental powers or activity. Besides, they are the easy prey of acute and epidemic diseases, and they are the frequent victims of gout, heart disease and apoplexy. Allan's Anti-Fat is the only known remedy for this disease. It contains no acid, is absolutely harmless, and is warranted to remedy the most confirmed case of obesity, or corpulency.

We still assert that Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is a great Remedy for Heart Disease, and give the following proof:

My wife was troubled with water about the heart, and could get no relief from any physician. She was also troubled with great nervousness at certain intervals, arising from Heart Disease. I purchased some of the HEART REGULATOR, and she obtained great relief. The use of the HEART REGULATOR gave her immediate relief from all sinking of the spirits, and she would not be without it at any time.

She would gratefully recommend the HEART REGULATOR to any one troubled with the Heart Disease, and advise them to try it as a safe and certain remedy.

It is astonishing with what rapidity ulcerous sores and eruptive maladies are cured by Henry's Carbolic Salve, an external antidote to unhealthy conditions of the skin which is preferred by physicians to every other preparation containing the carbolic element. It is undoubtedly the finest antiseptic and purifier extant. It acts like a charm on purulent eruptions, and has also been successfully used for rheumatism and sore throat. All Druggists sell it.

A cough or cold taken between now and Christmas frequently lasts all winter. This is certainly the case with people who have weak lungs. The most convenient, reliable and inexpensive remedy is Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. It is to be used internally and externally.

This year Mr. Fellows attains to fifty years of age: his weight is 2?? lbs., and his health as perfect as when a boy of seventeen.

The retrospect shows a life of exposure to hardship, often to privation, to confinement and sedentary pursuits, to great mental and physical pressure and depression, culminating in Pulmonary Consumption in the year 1864, which illness brought about the discovery of Fellows' Hypophosphites. A full account of this case is published in Fellows' "Medical Monthly," to be had free of all Druggists.

FELLOWS' HYPOPHOSPHITES

Pearls.

It is easier to believe an ill report than to inquire into the truth thereof.

An army understands better the idea of glory than that of liberty.

The wisest of men is he who has the most complaisance for others.

How we loiter away our lives! If we wasted all our means as we do our time, we should be bankrupts all.

If you wish to be happy, have a small house and a large balance at your banker's; if you wish to be unhappy, adopt the opposite plan.

Sloth makes all things difficult, but industry all easy; and he that riseth late must trot all day, and shall scarce overtake his business at night, while laziness travels so slowly that poverty soon overtakes him.

Spice.

A startling report—The fourth-of-July fire-cracker in your coat-tail pocket.

There are sixty thousand commercial travelers or "drummers" in the United States. What other country can beat this long roll?

A business man says the reason he takes no interest in politics is because he objects to taking so much interest where there is so little principle.

Beecher is drawing two thousand five hundred dollar houses in San Francisco, and beats actors, opera singers and circus managers. They say there is but one man who can draw a bigger house and he's an architect.

Did You Ever.

Did you ever know a tradesman asking for his account who had not "a bill to take up on Friday?"

Did you ever know a lodging-house landlady who would own to bugs?

Did you ever know a man who did not think he could poke the fire better than you could?

Did you ever know a housemaid who, on your discovering a fracture in a valuable china jar, did not tell you it was "done a long time ago," or that it was "cracked before?"

Did you ever know a red-haired man who had a very clear notion of where scarlet began and auburn terminated?

Did you ever know a subscriber to the Anti-Cruelty-to-Animals Society who didn't kick the cat?

Did you ever know a lady with fine eyes wear green spectacles?

Did you ever know an amateur singer without "a horrid bad cold?"

Ancient Rome.

(Burlington Hawkeye.)

Rome was settled by two young men who came to Henry county about 753 B. C. Their gandpa's brother sent them down the river on a steamboat, only there was no steamboat. But the young men did not drown; just floated along like deep water Baptists until they came to Rome, where they landed. They were only a few weeks old so they hired a wolf to take care of them and give them rations. Then when they were old enough they slew the old wolf and took her scalp to the County Clerk's office and got $2.50 for it. Afterward they called on the old gentleman, who had paid their passage down the river, and had it out with him. Remus held the old gentleman's ear, while Romulus passed a thin slab of steele from the sterno-hyoid muscle through the common carotid arteries and jugular vein, and emerged a little below the occipital bone. Shortly afterward the action of the heart became irregular and weak, the pulse fell rapidly, and there was a general decrease in the temperature of the body, respiration became difficult, and finally impossible, articulation was impeded, and when the family physician arrived it was evident that a permanent suspension of the vital forces had already ensued. It is claimed by some historians, indeed, that poor old Amulius never recovered from the shock, but died the same day, which, being wash day, covered the memory of Amulius with ignominy. Shortly after this event the two brothers returned to Rome where one day Remus, while climbing over a picket fence around his brother's watermelon patch, was shot by Romulus, although other authorities say he was killed on the railroad, while trying to carry two quarts of Roman whisky across the track in front of a B. and M. freight engine. After that Romulus disappeared, and the Romansthink he went to heaven, although the appearance of an Illinois Sheriff in Rome two hours after Romulus became scarce has caused some authorities to think he went to the penitentiary. Romulus and his brother were considered great men, and stood very high in society, though it is said that their ma was no better than she should have been, which was very consistent in her. These boys had two Mars, in fact, and one of them was their pa. This sounds strange, but it is as true as anything else in this history.

As Rome grew, society was rent in two great divisions. Nobody was considered any body who did not own a red sleigh and a mouse colored horse, and didn't live in a house with a bay window, chateau roof, mecahnics' lien and a cut-throat mortgage on it. A Roman lady who didn't belong to a Literary Club, and attend conversations, and get trusted for five new hats a year, was snubbed at prayer-meeting and neglected at mite societies. So the patricians did all the voting, and held all the offices, and run all the public institutions and spent all the public funds, and the people who smoked clay pipes and carried hods, and clerked, drove drays, did all the fighting and paid part of the taxes. So whenever the patricians caught a plebeian they sent him to jail or drafted him into the army. And whenever the plebeians saw a patrician alone they mauled him around and pelted him with stones. The patricians were called General, Colonel, Mayor, Captain, Judge and Honorable. The plebeians were called plain Bill. Once in a while a plebeian would aspire to honor and authority, and became a kind of brevet patrician. He was called "'Squire."

There is a touching beauty in the pale wildrose that grows by the dusty wayside, half choked with thistle-down; but it is all lost to the man who breaks both his back suspender-buttons when he stoops to pluck it.—Puck.

The "Old Fashioned Mother.

The old fashioned mother—One in all the world, the law of whose life was love; one who was the divinity of our infancy, and the sacred presence in the shrine of our first earthly idolatry; one whose heart is far below the frosts that gather so thickly on her brow; one to whom we never grow old, but in the plumed troop or in the grave council, are children still; one who welcomes our coming, and never forgets us—never And when, in some closet, some drawer corner, she finds a garment or a toy that once was ours, how does she weep, as she thinks we may be suffering or sad. Does the battle of life drive the wanderer to the old home-stead at last? her hand is upon his shoulder, her dim and fading eyes are kindled with something of the light of other days as she gazes upon his worn and troubled face. "Be of stout heart my son no harm can reach you here." But sometimes that arm-chair is set back against the wall, the corner is vacant or occupied by strangers, and they seek the dear old occupant in the grave-yard. Grant you never have! Pray God you never may! It has been eloquently said that if christianity was compelled to flee from the mansions of the great, the academies of the philosopher, the halls of legislators, the the thrones of busy men, we should find her last retreat with women, at the fireside. Her last audience would be the children gathering around the mother's knee, the last sacrafice the secret prayer escaping in silence from her lips, and heard, perhaps only at the throne of God.

A PLUCKY HORSE.

New York Sun.

After the 7:45 Long Island railroad express train from Hempstead passed Garden City yesterday morning, the engineer, John Townsend, espied a gaunt, black horse grazing by the fence. As the train neared the horse he bounded out on the track with a snort of defiance, and started on a fast trot ahead of the locomotive. He was not swift-footed enough to keep ahead, however, and as the train crept close on his flying heels, engineer Townsend shoved down the brakes and set the whistle to shrieking. At this the horse redoubled his speed, and the train started ahead, and was quickly at his heels again. For over a mile the race was kept up in this way. Every time the train overtook the horse it would be slacked up and a wild whistle would make the horse renew his efforts. Still he determinedly kept on the track.

In one place there was a small culvert crossing the road bed, and the horse got one of his feet in this and went down heels over head. His nose struck the track and he made a sommersault on his back, and then rolled on his side. The engineer stopped the train and went with some of the passengers to see whether the horse was dead, but before they could reach him he was on his feet and away down the track again at a tremendious pace, still snorting defiance at his pursuers. At the end of the next half mile he stumbled and fell a second time, but pluckily picked him self up and ran on. A little further on as the engine was close to him, he dropped on his knees again, but was instantly erect and off once more.

After he had ran nearly three miles he came to a road diagonally crossing the railroad, and wheeled into it just as the train was again rushing and howling close behind him. The horse kicked up his heels as he dashed snorting down the road and disappeared. The train lost about seven minutes on its schedule time by the race, but the passengers quietly enjoyed it. A Pine street broker, who was on the train, says it was the finest sport he ever saw.

TO CONSUMERS

—OF—

LORILLARD Tobacco

The great celebrity of our tin tag tobacco has caused many imitations thereof to be placed on the market, we therefore caution all chewers against purchasing such immitations.

All dealers buying or selling other tin tobacco bearing a hard or metalic label, render themselves liable to the penalty of the law, and all persons violating our trade marks are punishable by fine and imprisonment. See act of congress, Aug. 14, 1876.

The genuine Lorillard Tin Tag Tobacco can be distinguished by a Tin Tag on each lump with the word Lorillard stamped thereon.

Taxes paid Gov'm't in 1877 about 3, 00,000, and during past 12 years, over 20 000 000.

BUCHANAN, MICH., Oct. 21, '78.

ED. TIMES:—As your country is agitated from one end to the other and all through the middle, on the financial question, will you allow a man that is only an adopted citizen give his experience on the question of finances in your country; the most beautiful country on earth; a country having a greater diversity of climate, productions and resources, than any other country on this globe. And when I contemplate that it is controled by the greatest set of knaves on earth, it forces me into the act of proving it, and the American people are the greatest set of fools for allowing themselves to be controlled by a set of villians financially. To illustrate my position: I landed in N. Y. in 1864, when the rebellion was to its height. I brought with me $50,000 in gold. I invested it in United States six per cent bonds, paying less than 50 cents on a dollar. I bought $110,000 in six per cent. bonds with my $50,000. You may say I might then went home satisfied, but I did not. I made myself acquainted with your banking law, and concluded to stay and enter into the banking business. I felt sure that the north would succeed, and the more bonds I obtained the better it be for me and my posterity. After I made all my arrangements to suit, I went to Washington in the spring of 1867, deposited my $110,000 in the treasury and obtained a charter for a national bank in New York, capital $100,000; leaving $10,000 in the treasury to my credit besides the $100,000 to secure me the right to a bank. The government gave me $90,000 in currency to do business with. I returned, opened my bank, and during the year converted my currency interest and profits into bonds, and In the spring of 1868 I stood as follows: I had $110,000 in bonds at Washington. I had on hand in interest and front $13,600 and $90,000 in bonds, for which I had exchanged my currency for, making a total of $213,600. In the spring of 1863, I took my $103,600 in bonds and deposited them to my credit, having $213,600 in bonds in the treasury to my credit. In the spring of 1868 I took out a charter for another bank, in Ohio, capital $100,000, and the government gave me $90,000 in currency as a circulating medium. I ran that bank, and in the spring of 1869, I stood finacially, as follows: bonds in treasury, $213,600; interest on said bonds, one year, $12,816; profit on two banks, $14,000; currency converted into bonds, $90,000; total, $330,416. In the spring of 1869, I again obtained a charter for a bank in Indiana. I then obtaine $90,000 in currency on my deposite of $100,000, and in the sping of 1870, I stood as follows: $330,416 in the treasury; interest on the same, $19,824; profits on my three banks, $21,000; $90,000 more of bonds that I had exchanged my currency for, making a total of $461,240. In the spring of 1870, I again went to Washington and obtained a charter for for a bank in Illinois, and at the end of the year I stood as follows: $461,240 in bonds, at Washington; interest one year on the same, $27,874; profits on the four banks, $28,000; 90,000 in bonds from my currency; total, $606,915. In June, 1871, I went to Washington and obtained a charter for a bank in Wisconsin. The government again gave me $90,000 for my Wisconsin Bank, and in July, 1872, I found myself with the following amount: $606,915 in bonds at Washington; interest on the same, $36,414; profits 35,000; 90,000 in bonds by conversion; total, $768,329. I now found that I had the above amount in the treasury to my credit. I then went to Washington in July, 1872, and obtained a charter for a bank in Kentucky and 90,000 in currency for my bank. In the summer of 1873, I stood financially as follows: $768,329 in bonds at Washington; profits 42,000; interest 46,099; and 90,000 in bonds by conversion; total, $946,428. This amount was to my credit in the treasury at Washington. I then went to washington and obtained a charter, in 1873, for a bank in New Orleans. In the summer of 1874, I stood as follows: interest $56,785, profit 49,000; 90,000 bonds by conversion, and 946,428 in bonds in treasury; total, $1,142,213. In 1874 I took out another charter for a bank in Alabama. I received $90,000 more in currency. In the summer of 1875, I stood as follows; $1,142,213 in the treasury; profits 56,000 in bonds by conversion; total, $1,356,746. The above was my financial condition in August, 1875. I then went to Washington and obtained a charter for a bank in Virginia, and the first of August, 1876, found me worth $65,000 in profits, 81,404 interest, 90,000 in bonds by conversion; from currency $1,356,746 in bonds in the treasury; total $1,591,150. In August, 1876, I took my last charter for a bank in Philadelphia, and in August, 1876, I stood financially as follows: interest $95,469; profits, 70,000; bonds through conversion 90,000: bonds in treasury, 1,591,150; total $1,846,619. I threw them all into the treasury, and in August, 1877, I drew interest to the following amount: $110,797, and profits $70,000; add that to my previous wealth and I found I had $2,027,416. I then wound up my banking, returned to the treasury my $900,000 in circulating currency, leaving me a nice sum of $2,027,416 for my $50,000 in gold that I invested ten years before, or a little over ten years. I found it was not quite time to stop, so I took my $2,027,416 and funded them in 4 per cent. bonds to run 40 years, and now I find the United States in debt to me to the full amount of $2,928,601 in principle and interest, and I deem the interest just as much as the principle, and so will my posterity. You see the interest owing me is greater than the principle by $672,769. I am very much obliged to the republican party in office in America, for the chance they have given me to become a millionaire in a little over ten years with only $50,000 in gold to start with. I expect to leave this country this Fall, with a debt against the tax-payers of America of $2,928,601.40. I will not leave without asking the question: How much would I lose if they should at some future time conclude to pay me in what you call greenbacks? I answer, I should lose my interest just as long as my money should lay idle, and no longer, as I can get 4 per cent. any where for my money, and they may pay me in greenbacks just as soon as they please, and I shall not grumble, and I should consider the voters of America fools if they did not do it, if the laws of the country permit. Your republican party have run your nation in debt over $1,000,000,000 since I have been in this country by the funding debt law, and let them always remember where there is a possibility as in my case, there will at all times be a probability.

Yours, JAMES O'NEAL.

As further evidence of the unjust legislation in favor of National Banks, we submit the following, taken from the Indianapolis Sentinel.

An eastern paper having a taste for "curious calculations," has devoted some attention to showing the possibilities of making money without work under the national banking law, which allows five or more individuals to associate themselves together for the purpose of starting a national bank.

"Suppose," says the New York Advocate, "that at the close of the war, ten men, each owning a farm worth $100,000, should sell, and place their currency in bonds.

The law exempts their investment from taxation.

"Under the banking law these ten men associate their capital and deposit their $1,000,000 of bonds with the controller of the currency as security, and receive a chartel for a first national bank, and with this charter they receive a loan of $900,000 of bank currency at one per cent. interest. Their bonds still continue to yield them their regular six per cent interest.

"Now, in order that they may monopolize the money of the country, and that it may not get so plenty as to reduce the rate of usury, they provide in the banking law that whenever they receive $100 of bank currency from the controller at one per cent. the government should destroy $80 of its own legal tender greenbacks.

"But with the first national bank they do not stop.

"With the $900,000 of bank bills they purchase bonds at par, deposit these and start a second bank, receiving another loan of $810,000. This is again put into bonds, another bank started, and $729,000 more of bank currency received. The following table shows the number of banks that may grow out of the first one having $1,000,000 capital:

No.	Bonds deposited.	Currency. drawn.

Total bonds	$9 387 978

"Now, these ten men, with an original capital of $100,000, have established twenty nine first-class banks, have bonds deposited to the amount of $9,387,978, yielding them an annual interest of $560,278, besides a cash capital of 46,866 to do business upon.

"The simple interest alone upon these bonds for twenty years (the time for which they borrowed the money) will amount to $11,205,560.

The people are not in a mood to have their anxieties quieted by the poopoos of bank organs. Mr. Randall, of Penn. in a recent speech said that he believed that "there are great abuses existing with our national banking system. Banking is nothing more or less than a business, and our present laws create a distinction in favor of banking as against any other business, and the democratic party proposes, so far as I understand, that no longer shall a double interest be paid the banker." The demand is that the national banks shall surrender their power, and that possible abuses by them shall cease. In this regard there is no mistaking the tone of public sentiment. Greenback currency, cheaper and better, will take the place of national bank bills, double interest will cease, and the banks will be shorn of their power, which when improperly directed, is in direct conflict with the welfare of the country. The Boston Globe, in a recent issue, in an article upon "Bank Tactics," says:

"Were every man in our state indoctrinated with the principles of true finance, and the house were to be divided, seven eighths of the people would mass upon one side, and a very few—just as much influenced by their own interest—would be counted upon the other. The bank adherent believes in the banking system because he can derive great advantages therefrom by way of facilities; he can get money at all times to use, and of course to him inflatation always obtains. He knows of no contraction. He is a director, or well acquainted with the board. He controls the institution. With some, however, the bank is always contracting. Such can ask, appeal, importune; no money to spare. Now, from this one example see the whole machinery. Whenever they find an abundance of money is needed, it is plenty for the favored ones, and for them alone. They inflate for their special customers and for nobody else, for the family of Noah's ark—Shem, Ham and Japhet, their father, mother and sisters. Every other applicant is excluded. All but they must stay out side, without the shelter of an umbrella, and be showered upon by deluges of perplexities, privations, poverty, misery. Whom they will, they exalt, and whom they will, they humble. All this power emanates from a bamboozled people. Thank God they are arousing to their senses.

Hence, it is obvious why the banks shout against general inflatation. Their profits result from partial, individual, private inflation, which they can occasion. They wish to retain this prerogative in their own hands. If the government mentions national, universal, greenback inflation, it is at once denounced as iniquitious, because it accommodates everybody without distinction, the poor as well as the rich, and levels down their special privileges to an equality with the general public. People are not compelled to crawl upon their knees for a favor, and be gruffly or politely denied it. The national government is the proper judge of the time for inflatation and the time for contraction because it is the agent, the organ, the creature of the people. It will be more likely, if composed of reliable representatives, to administer for the popular interests. Will a private institution be as likely so to do? Ask experience and observation. Now, a little reflection will show why the banks sharply protest against the first whisper to have but one currency for all and no longer one for the bank, one for the bondholder and one for the people. The fact is, we are enjoying a favorable chance to extricate us from this ban, to unyoke the masses from the discriminating banks; for a greenback dollar will very nearly buy a gold dollar, which are about equal value. And while they are so, it is the precise time to buy in those outstanding bonds, cut off the interest, reduce this national curse of debt, and substitute greenbacks for the bank bills. Let the banks circulate greenbacks and there will be no more hypocrisy in the cry of that chimera, a specie basis, for the cry will cease."

Manifestly, the people are alarmed at the encroachments of the money power, and they believe, and not without justifiable reasons, that the banks are the citidels of that power and can wield it in such a way as to promote the interests of the rich to the detriment of the producing classes.

Henry Clay would "rather be right than be President." But when he ran for the Presidency, you know, he was left.

THE YARN OF THE "NANCY BELL."

BY WILLIAM S. GILBERT.

'Twas on the shores that round our coast
From Deal to Ramsgate span,
That I found alone, on a piece of stone,
An elderly naval man.

His hair was weedy, his beard was long,
And weedy and long was he;
And I heard this wight on the shore recite,
In a singular minor key:

"O, I am a cook and a Captain bold,
And the mate of the Nancy brig,
And a bo'sun tight, and a midshipmite,
And the crew of the Captain's gig."

And he shook his fists and tore his hair
Till I really felt afraid,
For I couldn't help thinking the man had been drinking,
And so I simply said:

"O elderly man, it's little I know
Of the duties of men of the sea,
And I'll eat my hand if I understand
How you can possibly be

"At once a cook and a Captain bold,
And the mate of the Nancy brig,
And a bo'sun tight, and a midshipmite,
And the crew of the Captain's gig!"

Then he gave a hitch to his trousers, which
Is a trick all seamen larn,
And, having got rid of a thumping quid,
He spun this painful yarn:

"'Twas in the good ship Nancy Bell
That we sailed to the Indian sea,
And there, on a reef, we came to grief,
Which has often occurred to me.

"And pretty nigh all o' the crew was drowned
(There was seventy-seven o' soul);
And only ten of the Nancy's men
Said 'Here' to the muster-roll.

"There was me, and the cook, and the Captain bold,
And the mate of the Nancy brig,
And a bo'sun tight and a midshipmite,
And the crew of the Captain's gig.

Till a hungry we did feel,
So we drawed a lot, and, accordin', shot
The Captain for our meal.

"The next lot fell to the Nancy's mate,
And a delicate dish he made;
Then our appetite with the midshipmite
We seven survivors stayed.

"And then we murdered the bo'sun tight,
And he much resembled pig;
Then we wittled free, did the cook and me,
On the crew of the Captain's gig.

"Then only the cook and me was left,
And the delicate question, 'Which
Of us two goes to the kettle?' arose,
And we argued it out as sich.

"For I loved that cook like a brother, I did,
And the cook he worshiped me;
But we'd both be blowed if we'd either be stowed
In the other chap's hold, you see.

"'I'll be eat if you dines off me,' says Tom.
'Yes, that,' says I, 'you'll be.
I'm boiled if I die, my friend,' quoth I;
And 'Exactly so,' quoth he.

"Says he, 'Dear James, to murder me
Were a foolish thing to do,
For don't you see that you can't cook me,
While I can—and will—cook you?'

"So he boils the water, and takes the salt
And the pepper in portions true
(Which he never forgot), and some chopped shalot,
And some sage and parsley too.

"'Come here,' says he, with a proper pride,
Which his smiling features tell;
''Twill soothing be if I let you see
How extremely nice you'll smell.'

"And he stirred it round, and round, and round,
And he sniffed at the foaming froth;
When I ups with his heels, and smothers his squeals
In the scum of the boiling broth.

"And I eat that cook in a week or less,
And, as I eating be
The last of his chops, why I almost drops,
For a vessel in sight I see.

"And I never larf, and I never smile,
And I never lark nor play;
But I sit and croak, and a single joke
I have—which is to say:

"O, I am a cook and a Captain bold
And the mate of the Nancy brig,
And a bo'sun tight, and a midshipmite,
And the crew of the Captain's gig!"

THRICE WARNED.

A Story of the Supernatural.

The circumstance that I am about to relate is of such an extraordinary nature that it will be better for me to give a short sketch of my birth and antecedents, in order that the reader may be able the better to judge of it for himself.

I am not about to attempt an explanation, for the endeavor to explain the supernatural is bound to end in fog and failure. I will merely state the plain facts of the case as they happened, without comment, and then, as I said before, the reader can judge for himself.

To commence with, I am a Highlander by birth, and my father was noted as the descendant of ——; but my father has nothing to do with the present narrative, so I will pass him by.

My mother was noted for miles around for the possession of that marvelous faculty of second sight for which so many of my country have been famed. In fact, she foretold her own death, which occurred shortly after the arrival of my brother and myself, who were twins.

My father soon followed his wife, and Robert and I were left alone, two helpless children. An uncle, however, who resided in Aberdeen, having heard of the death of his brother, undertook the charge of us, and we were removed to his house and brought up by him.

There was always a wonderful affinity between my brother and myself. It was more than affection; it was a mysterious attraction that caused us to be uneasy unless we were in one another's society, and anything that affected one of us, even if he were miles away, was sure to be felt by the other.

Time went on, and when we were 16 our uncle considered that we were old enough to enter his office, where we were accordingly placed as clerks.

From the first this never suited Robert. He was not fitted for the rough, every-day drudgery and routine of a place of business, and, although he never once complained, I could perceive and feel what torture and agony it was to his proud spirit to descend to the dull slavery of the desk. In a few months this became more perceptible, and his cheeks, always pale, grew more so, his eyes became large and feverish, and his breath short and difficult to draw. The reader must forgive any lingering over this, for Robert was my only brother, and I loved him.

At length it became evident to all that he was ill, and he was put to bed, and medical aid was called in. But it was then too late. The death warrant had been signed, and my brother was going. I was permitted to stay with him, as my presence appeared to soothe and give him ease.

It was 3 o'clock one morning; the church bells all over the town had just struck the hour, as I was sitting in his room by his bedside. He had been slumbering, but suddenly awoke and said:

"Douglas, my brother, I have just seen our mother, and my time is up in half an hour. Do not grieve, brother; I am glad. My nature was not suited for this world; yours is different. And I may be able to assist you where I am going."

I was not 17, and I could not restrain my tears, as I cried:

"Do not go, Robert, and leave me all alone in the cold, heartless world!"

"Hush, my brother!" he replied. "I must obey, but this I will promise you: if I am permitted it, I will revisit you; and, should I be allowed the power, I will always warn you of coming danger. And now, farewell, brother; my time is nigh. I can feel the weakness coming that precedes removal. Farewell, brother, until we meet again! Fare—"

The half hour struck out, and Robert fell back dead. My cries aroused the house, and in a few minutes the ordinary nurse, the servants and my uncle had entered the room.

I was led away, in spite of my entreaties to be left, and placed in my own room. Lying across the foot of my bed, I felt as though my heart would break; but, fortunately, my grief found relief in tears, and in a short time I had wept myself to sleep.

I know not how long I had slept, when I awoke suddenly with a feeling of intense happiness. As I opened my eyes, I perceived that my dead brother Robert was standing by my side. He looked radiant and pleased, as, holding up one hand, as if to demand silence, he said:

"All is well, dear Douglas, and I am permitted to guard thee from harm."

No sooner had he finished speaking than he melted away into the gray dusk of the approaching dawn. I immediately arose, and, pulling up the blind before my window, looked forth. It was not yet daybreak, though that rosy appearance that generally comes before sunrise was apparent. Then I lay down, and once more fell asleep.

By the end of the week my brother was buried, and I was alone in the world.

Years passed on. My uncle died, and left the wealth he had accumulated to his wife's family.

With a new head to the firm there came new rules, regulations and staff, and I had to find a fresh occupation. Fortunately, without being long out of employment, I obtained a situation in an insurance company's office, where I managed to get along very well, liking my superiors and being liked by them.

One morning, as I was making an entry in my ledger, the manager passed my desk and beckoned me to follow him. I did so into his private office, where he told me to seat myself. Having shut the door, taken up a position in front of the fire and lifted his coat-tails, he began:

"I have called you in here to offer you a rather hazardous piece of business, which, however, if you fill properly and to our satisfaction, will no doubt ultimately be the means of making your fortune."

Of course I intimated my pleasure at the honor, and was about to inquire into the nature of the business, when the manager went on:

"You have now been with us some years, and we feel that we can place implicit confidence in you; in fact, I was requested to pick out a confidential man, and one I could depend upon, and I have chosen you."

I bowed and murmured my thanks.

"The nature of the business you would be employed upon is this: In this town is a firm of ship-owners who are in the habit of insuring their ships and cargoes for extremely large sums, and lately they have been very unfortunate, or, rather, I should say, fortunate. Do you comprehend me?"

"Not quite, sir."

"Why, within the last year they have lost, in mid-ocean, two ships and a brig, and have received the insurance money on them. We have lately received an intimation that, in the first place, the cargoes are not what they purport to be, and that the craft they have lost are not only old and worn-out tubs that have been sold for breaking up, but also that in two cases, at least, these ships have been scuttled for the sake of the insurance upon them."

The last words the manager spoke nearly in a whisper, and paused, as if to give me time to take in the enormity of the offense. Then he continued:

"Now we wish to discover them, if possible, in the very act—as I may say, in flagrante delictu," and he puffed out his cheeks and looked very managerial indeed. "Consequently, we have decided on sending out an agent in their next craft, in order to discover whether these reports be true or not, and that agent, sir, will be you."

I was fully aware of the dangerous nature of the job offered me, but at the same time I had so little to care for that, without hesitation, I immediately accepted the duty.

"Very good, Douglas—very good!" remarked the manager, evidently much pleased. "I am glad to see that I have not been disappointed or mistaken in my estimate of your character. You can now return to your work, and later on I will see you again, and explain what the nature of your duty will be. In the meantime," he added, as I was leaving the room, "be careful not to hint a word of what I have mentioned to you."

Of course I promised to be silent, and it would have been better for me if every one else had been as silent as myself on the subject.

A day or two passed, and then the manager informed me that the time had come. The firm previously alluded to had insured a brig named the Falcon, bound to Mauritius with an assorted cargo.

He then went on to tell me that I must obtain a passage in the Falcon under the plea of being unable to pay the fare in the ordinary mail-boat; and then, once on board, I was to keep my eyes open, and write a daily diary of everything that occurred, particularly if at all of a suspicious nature.

One of the seamen, it appeared, had also been engaged by the insurance company—the one, I believe, who had first raised their suspicions—and I was told his name was Jack Allen.

Furthermore, he entered into particulars respecting remuneration, increase of pay afterward, and a manager's place at a branch office in case of my conducting the investigation to the satisfaction of the board.

After receiving my instructions and a check for expenses, I bade the manager good-by, for I was not to return to the office, for fear of arousing suspicion, and took my departure. Having obtained change for the check, I went to my lodging, and, putting on a suit of old clothes, made my way down to the harbor. I had not much difficulty in finding the Falcon. She was a nice-looking brig, and appeared quite new; at all events she was newly painted, and that is much the same thing to a landsman. A gang-way-board stretched across from the shore to her deck, and, walking across this, I was soon on board.

A boy was busily employed doing nothing, and, having asked to see the Captain, that party appeared on deck. He was not a bad-looking man, but had that loose, rollicking, shifty expression generally to be found with lack of conscientiousness.

"Good-day, Captain!" I observed. "I hear you are bound for Port Louis, Mauritius. If that's so, could you manage to give a poor fellow a lift on the cheap?"

"On the cheap, eh?" replied he, taking stock of me up and down. "That depends. What do you call cheap?"

"Well, I've got a little coin," I replied. "But I can't afford those mail-boats—they're too much altogether; besides, I want to keep a trifle, in case I don't get the work I expect when I get out there."

"Well, will £25 hurt you?" asked the Captain.

I feigned to be horrified, and offered £15; but at length we arranged for £20, and he was to find me in everything, I messing with him at his table.

Having effected this, I promised to be on board by the Thursday evening, for she was to leave harbor on Friday morning.

By the appointed time I was down at the port with my modest luggage, which was soon transferred to a little cabin in the Falcon that I was to occupy. The Captain was not on board when I joined, so I took possession of my little bedroom, and, putting things to rights as well as I could, turned in, and went to sleep.

The next morning I was aroused by a sound of trampling overhead, heavy ropes being thrown about, loud voices, swearing, and all the usual accompaniments considered necessary by nautical people to the proper clearing of a vessel out of harbor.

In about twenty minutes the noise had succumbed, and there was a gentle heaving motion; so I went on deck, and found that we were at sea—fast leaving the mouth of bonny Dee behind, together with the city of granite. Then, at the Captain's invitation, I accompanied him into the cabin to breakfast. He now introduced me to the first mate, who was to mess with us. He was a dark, surly-looking fellow, whose appearance I disliked at once, even before he opened his mouth. And, when he commenced to speak, his conversation confirmed my first impression. He hardly ever spoke without an oath or a curse of some kind.

"Yes; now let's have the 'wind that blows;' we've 'the ship that goes,' and, I dare say, one of us has 'the lass that loves a sailor!'"

Matters went on in the usual humdrum way they always appear to me to do at sea for some time, and I began to think that the company had sent me out on a wild-goose chase.

But I soon discovered my mistake. I don't know whereabouts we were, because I take no interest in nautical matters, and understand very little about latitude and longitude; but it was about a week after we got into warm weather that, after dinner, I lay down on the lockers at the stern of the cabin to have forty winks. I had not lain there long, however, when the Captain and the mate came in.

"To-night will be the very time, Hodge," exclaimed the mate. "The weather's calm; we're just in such a position that we could reach" (some place I couldn't catch the name of) "in the boats in a couple of days."

"I don't agree with you, Sharpe," replied the Captain. "In the first place, I should like it to be blowing just a decent gale. It would be very fishy for a craft like this to go to the bottom in a nice breeze only; and then, again, in a week's time we shall be getting near the Cape de Verd islands."

"Just as you like, skipper. Only, if you take my advice, you'll do it at once, and get it over. Hallo! here's this long-shore chap! Let him look out if he's been listening!"

"Hush!" said Hodge; "I expect he's asleep. Don't wake him."

And they approached me, in order to see if I were awake or no. That was a very unpleasant five minutes. I could feel that they were gazing at me, and counting my pulsations, as it were, and yet I had to lie quiet and calm.

"I hope he is," said the mate. "It'll be bad for him if he ain't, —— his eyes!"

And they retired to the other end of the cabin, and apparently went up the ladder on to the deck. Nevertheless, I thought it better to keep my eyes still closed, and myself in the same position. It was well I did, for at the close of another five minutes I heard one of them, who had stayed behind, leave the cabin and go on deck. Although no more was said or done respecting this, I had an idea that they suspected me after that, and watched me about in consequence.

Two or three days passed away, when one evening I had been writing up my diary as usual, and replaced it, as I thought, in the private pocket where it was usually kept. By some accident it must have fallen to the deck, for in about half an hour the steward came up, and, with the Captain's compliments, would I join him, with the mate, over a glass of grog? I accordingly descended, and, innocently enough, walked up to where the two men were sitting.

"This book was picked up a quarter of an hour ago, and brought to me," exclaimed the Captain, holding up my unhappy diary. "Is it yours?"

It was no good prevaricating or attempting to evade, so I determined to lead off with a bold move.

"It does belong to me," I replied; and at the same time snatched it out of his hand. "And now what have you to say?"

"That you are a spy!" exclaimed the mate.

"Now, the question is, how much do you know, and how are we to be sure that you will not peach on us?" said Hodge.

"The question is nothing of the kind!" I replied, as bold as brass. "The question is, I know enough to give you fellows penal servitude. You dare not touch me; and now what are you going to do, in order to save yourselves from punishment?"

Hodge looked rather blank at this. And then, in a minute, he said to the mate, "Sharpe, come for'ard a bit; we must talk this over."

Accordingly they went away out of earshot and began arguing, the mate insisting upon something the Captain would not agree to.

At length they returned, and Hodge said, "Well, Sharpe and I can't quite agree yet. We must talk it over again. And, in the meantime, you must allow yourself to be put under arrest in your cabin. No harm is intended you."

I did not desire that the matter should come to a free fight, especially as I thought more than once that I could perceive the butt of a pistol peeping out of Sharpe's pocket; so I consented, and in five minutes was bolted in my cabin.

At supper time the mate brought me a good plate of food and my usual glass of grog. I ate the meat—I think it was sea-pie—and drank the grog, and then prepared to read. But all at once an overwhelming sensation of drowsiness came over me. In vain I struggled against it. With my eyes closing in spite of myself, I fell back across my bunk asleep.

"Douglas, awake, my brother. Save yourself."

And then I was going off again.

"Douglas, awake, my brother. Save yourself."

This time the voice roused me more, and I was thoroughly awake, but still under the influence of the narcotic with which I had been drugged.

"Douglas, awake, my brother. Save yourself."

The third warning in my lost brother's well-known voice completely restored me. I jumped off the bunk in the dark, and discovered that the cabin contained over a foot and a half of water. Then I saw the plot. The design of the Captain and mate had evidently been that I should go to the bottom with the scuttled ship.

With great difficulty and a hearty shove I succeeded in breaking open the door, and in another minute I was on deck. It was nearly flush with the water, and as I jumped up I could perceive that the three boats belonging to the brig were in the water and manned.

"But where's the passenger?" I heard somebody say. "I ain't going to shove off without him."

"He's dead drunk," replied the mate. "We haven't got time to wait for him."

"That's false, James Sharpe!" I sang out, as I approached the gangway. "You either didn't give me enough, or else you gave me too much. Which is Jack Allen?"

"Here you are, sir; jump in."

And the third boat which it appeared was steered by Allen, who had been inquiring for me, came alongside and took me off.

That night we had a stiff gale of wind, the three boats separated, and the two commanded by the Captain and the mate were never heard of.

After some very hard work, and being wet through nearly all the time, we were picked up. In less than a month we were once more in the channel, and then it did not take us long to reach London, when we took the train to Aberdeen.

The evidence was most conclusive; for, in addition to what I had heard, Allen had actually watched the two villains down the hold, and saw them boring the holes which ultimately scuttled the Falcon.

With regard to the company, they kept their word toward me, and I shall never go to sea again.

The reader has now heard my narrative of the three warnings, and can form his own opinion.

Danger Dimmed by Darkness.

Owing to the darkness that fills our deep mining shafts our miners are less conscious of the dangers of their trade than they would otherwise be. A miner standing on a bit of a plank thrown across a shaft 1,000 or 1,500 feet in depth sees little of the pit yawning beneath his feet. The darkness rises up until it almost seems to form a floor under his plank, giving a place on which his eyes may rest and preventing an unsteadiness of the head. Place the same shaft on the surface of the earth, and let it tower 1,500 feet into the air and broad light of day, and the miner standing on his single plank at an elevation three times as great as the tallest church spire would be unable to move—would be paralyzed. Looking down through the awful depth below, he would clutch the nearest timbers, afraid to make a move in any direction. Make for him doors on each side of this shaft, representing the openings at the stations, and he would not be likely to jump from door to door across the yawning shaft, as he does underneath the ground, where the dark rises up and makes a seeming floor between the doors. It is undoubtedly the darkness that benumbs the senses of the miner to the danger to which he is exposed when passing to and fro across shafts and winzes, or when climbing the interior of their compartments, trusting to the scanty hold for hands and feet afforded by the narrow ledges of the timbers projecting from the walls.—Virginia City (Nev.) Enterprise.

THE consumption of cotton by American manufacturers was greater by 110,000 bales in 1878 than in 1877. The yield of the staple in the United States exceeds that of any year on record, being 4,811,265 bales, of 1,480 pounds gross each, up to Sept. 1.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

DYSPEPSIA.—A simple and effectual remedy for dyspepsia is to abstain from drinking immediately before and during meals, and for an hour afterward.

BUTTER AND BILIOUSNESS.—Butter is heating, fattening and relaxing; liable to become rancid in the stomach, especially when melted; it is bad for bilious persons, and should be eaten with moderation.

WOUNDS.—Sponge paper, made by adding finely-divided sponge to paper pulp, has been used in France for dressing wounds. It absorbs water readily, and retains moisture for a long time; it is therefore applicable to many purposes in the arts and manufactures.

THE SLEEP FOR CHILDREN.—The Herald of Health cautions parents not to allow their children to be waked up in the morning. Let nature wake them; she will not do it prematurely. Take care that they go to bed at an early hour—let it be earlier and earlier, until it is found that they wake up themselves in full time to dress for breakfast.

RELIEF FOR EARACHE.—Persons will find relief for earache by putting in a spoon two or three drops of sweet oil or, better still, almond oil, the same of molasses and laudanum, warming it all together. Absorb some of the mixture in cotton wool; put it in the ear, with a piece of wool outside to keep out the cold air, repeating the thing if necessary. A roast onion-heart dipped in this and surrounded with the cotton is also often very efficacious.

IMPORTANCE OF A CLEAN SKIN.—Most of our invalids are such, and millions of more healthy people will become invalids, for the want of paying the most ordinary attention to the requirements of the skin. The membrane is too often regarded as a covering only, instead of a complicated piece of machinery, scarcely second in its texture and sensitiveness to the ear and eye. Many treat it with as little reference to its proper functions as if it were nothing better than a bag for their bones. It is this inconsideration for the skin that is the cause of a very large proportion of the diseases of the world. If, as claimed by some scientists, four-fifths, in the bulk, of all we eat and drink must either pass off through the skin or be turned back upon the system as a poison, and that life depends as much upon these exhalations through the skin as upon inhaling pure air through the lungs, it must be of the most vital importance to keep the channel free.

HEAT AND LIGHT IN A SICK-ROOM.—A recent writer gives the following sensible suggestions on this subject: Each person in a room should be supplied with 3,000 cubic feet of air per hour; and this should be done, where possible, without creating a perceptible draught, for the nervous irritation induced by draugths is liable to produce internal inflammations. The temperature of a sick-room should be kept at a uniform height, the best average being from 65 to 70 degrees F., except for infants or very old people, who require a temperature of from 75 to 80 degrees F.; and for these it especially important to guard against changes, and to keep it as uniform as possible. All cases of fever require a temperature lower than the average, as from 50 to 60 degrees F., to assist in reducing the high temperature of the body; but when the fever subsides, and there is much debility remaining, the temperature should be raised somewhat above the average. As a patient can bear a greater degree of cold when in bed than when out of it, convalescents from severe disease, fevers especially, should have the temperature of their rooms higher than that maintained during the height of the attack. Diseases of the air passages, as croup and diphtheria, require a high temperature (80 deg. to 85 deg. F.) and a moist atmosphere. The best method for heating the sick-room is by the open-grate fire. The sick-room should not be darkened by blinds, except where there is a disease of the eyes, with photophobia, or when the patient is very restless and cannot sleep; then strong light must be excluded. Otherwise the sunlight should be allowed to enter and act chemically by decomposing the noxious gases, and thus purify the air. Of course, it is not advisable to place the patient under a strong, uncomfortable glare of sunlight, nor in summer to allow the sun's rays to shine into the room and raise the temperature too high. Artificial light has no useful effect, but does harm by burning up oxygen.

Mormon Converts.

There arrived at New-York, a few days ago, 160 Mormons, ten of whom were elders, of whom the chief was George Barber. They are natives of England, Scotland and Wales, a few Scandinavians, however, being among them. The converts to Mormonism are principally mechanics, miners and laborers, the representation of farmers being very small. In conversation with Elder Barber, he said the Mormon country welcomed mechanics and miners, as there were very few of this class in the territory. Their young men had an aversion to trades, and as a general thing followed farming for a living. The elder said that during the season 10,000 Mormon converts had been sent to Utah, and that the party under his charge would be the last batch for this year. He claimed that Mormon missionaries have to pay most of their expenses themselves. The converts will start for Salt Lake City, where they will be distributed through the numerous settlements.—New York paper.

Sherman on Hooker.

To a reporter who asked him about the Gen. Hooker interview in the Brooklyn Eagle, Gen. Sherman laughingly said: "Oh, there's nothing in it. Don't say anything about that. The fact is, Hooker is a little off here," tapping his head in a significant way. "Everybody who knows him pays no attention to what he says." About the army, Gen. Sherman said that what there is of it is in splendid condition. They are as well prepared to meet Indians now as at any time, "but too many of the red-skinned devils would keep the force on the jump."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

A GOLD MEDAL
CLARK'S
O.N.T.
Best SIX-CORD SPOOL COTTON. It is celebrated for being STRONG, ELASTIC, and of UNIFORM STRENGTH. It has been awarded MEDALS at the great Expositions, from the first at Paris, in 1855, to the Centennial at Philadelphia, in 1876. In this country CLARK'S O.N.T. SPOOL COTTON is widely known in all sections for its Superior Excellence in Machine and Hand Sewing. Their Mills at Newark, N. J., and Paisley, Scotland, are the largest and most complete in the world. The entire process of manufacture is conducted under the most complete and careful supervision, and they claim for their American production at least an equal merit to that produced in their Paisley Mills. As No Grand Prizes were awarded at Paris for Spool Cotton, they are Glad to announce to the American Public that they have been awarded a GOLD MEDAL, being the highest award given for Six-Cord Spool Cotton.

NEW AND CURIOUS INVENTIONS.

THE swinging motion of railway cars is now ingeniously utilized as an indicator of the velocity of trains, the management to this end being as follows: Within a case, clock-work is fixed, which causes a large horizontal plate to rotate once in twelve hours. On the plate a disk of paper is held by a spring, the border being divided into hours and minutes. The point of a pencil, which is attached to two springs and a pendulum, plays on the paper. Caoutchouc buffers below the box communicate the swinging of the car to the pendulum, so that the pencil makes a zig-zag line round the paper; on removing the latter, the rate of traveling may be studied.

THE introduction of iron buggies is now proposed. The inventor has constructed a vehicle which consists exclusively of iron and steel. For instance, in place of hickory spokes and oak fellies, he employs wrought-iron tubes and T iron. These tubes fit into the axle box at one end, and are riveted to the T iron at the other. The first noticeable effect of the employment of iron for all parts, it is said, has been to add to the weight of the vehicle, this having accrued in spite of the thinness of the parts. The cost also has been enhanced, but for this the augmented strength and durability are regarded as a full equivalent. In appearance it is neat and light.

AN improved life-preserving mattress, as exhibited in action, is described in Les Mondes. This mattress is not wholly an air one, but without air, and of its own buoyancy, will support four persons on it, and many more if they are merely clinging to it. It is so made as to form a mattress on board ship, either as a bed in the berth, or as a lounging mattress on deck, and is always ready for service. Pillows are made of the same material, and uninflated will keep afloat one person. The valves by which the mattress and pillow can be inflated to a higher degree of buoyancy are so constructed that, without any disjointing, the filling with air is readily accomplished, and there are no stoppers to be lost. The successful working of this arrangement has been fully demonstrated.

THE plan of constructing buildings with fire-proof flooring throughout, according to a new and improved system, is now being generally adopted in England. This system consists in forming the floor of solid timbering instead of the ordinary joists and floor boards—the floor is, in fact, all joists, which are laid close together, side by side, and either spiked or screwed through as the laying progresses, so as to form a compact, solid mass of timber, capable of resisting the action of fire for a greater or less time. An additional protection is afforded by a thick coating of plaster, which also forms the ceiling, the plaster being held up to the under side of the joists either by half-driven nails or by dovetailed grooves in the wood. Staircases are similarly constructed, though with lighter timbers.

A NOVEL invention is described in the Moniteur des Fils et Tissus, the object of which is to produce a new effect by embossing a design upon velvet in one or more colors, differing from that of the piece or ribbon. In this case the face of the velvet has a mordant or adhesive substance, such as gum, stearine, etc., applied to it, and the coloring matter in a powder, or flocks of any material from the shearing machine, silk waste ground fine, or any other substance, are then deposited upon it, and made to adhere by heating the fabric. The piece is then passed under an engraved roller, and the pattern thus embossed upon it. The parts of the pile which pass into the recesses on the roller remain standing, and, by submitting these projecting parts to the action of brushes, the substance deposited upon them is removed, but remains in the depressed portions, and the printer can thus obtain results almost unlimited in variety and effect.

Take Care of the Horses.

The Illinois Humane Society, through an appeal issued by their committee, make the following suggestions, which owners of horses will serve their own interests by attending to:

1. Shoes—If horses are sharp shod in icy weather they will pull larger loads to greater advantage; it is poor economy to neglect the proper shoeing of horses, which may thus be seriously injured.
2. Blankets, etc.—Horses should be protected by blankets or waterproof covers from rain or snow while standing. The cost of a blanket is very small, and its use would repay the outlay many times. Any woolen or other protection placed under the pad or saddle, and extending back over the hips, will be found very useful as protecting a weak part of the animal.
3. Clipping—The clipping of horses is considered to be, at least, imprudent, and by this society inhumane owners are respectfully urged to allow the animals to retain the covering which nature has provided.
4. Check reins—Work horses, if at all, should be checked very low; they can thus pull to greater advantage, protect their eyes from rain or snow, and are less liable to stumble or injure themselves. It will be noticed that the city railway companies have largely abandoned the use of check reins.
5. Bits—It is prudent to warm with the hands, or otherwise, bits before placing them in the horses' mouths.

Longevity in America.

A comparison unfavorable to longevity in America has been drawn between Gov. Morton, dying at 54, and Thiers, living until he was 80. The Philadelphia North American resists the unfavorable inference in this style:

"We have now living in our own city, in the person of Gen. Robert Patterson, one who has been and done as much and suffered as great changes of climate, and endured as much labor as perhaps any of the named Europeans, and yet, eclipsing them all in years, he is quite their equal in vigor. Here, too, at our doors in Henry C. Carey, capable of doing the work of any of the men named, at 85. And Mr. Cameron is in his 80th year, and by no means ready to fall asleep while this administration lasts. We recently buried Horace Binney, wanting but three years of being 100; and, recalling other prominent men, whose lives were active and laborious, there was Webster, who lived to 70 years; Clay to 75; Benton an additional year; Chief Justice Marshall, 80; J. Q. Adams, 81; Thomas Jefferson, 83; Lewis Cass, 84, and Chief Justice Taney, 87. The list can be easily extended, and the more it is examined the more fully it will be proved that American life is no more deadly than European, and that professional life has as good chances of continuance here as there."

The Fate of a Flirt.

The Pittsburgh Exposition is over for this year, but there is one thing connected with it that will be read with interest here. Rather a good-looking couple from the country boarded a train here the day before the Exposition closed, and with a number of others went to Pittsburgh. Arriving the girl met an old acquaintance, with whom she soon became uncomfortably (for the other chap) friendly. She and her Pittsburgh friend stuck together like wax all day, viewing the sights, apparently oblivious of the fact that her escort was around. When the hour came for starting home she went with her Pittsburgh friend to the depot, and hung upon his arm until just before the train started, her escort, the while, looking very much displeased. They boarded the train, she taking a seat just behind him. The conductor tapped her on the shoulder for "tickets." She leaned timidly forward and said:

"Tickets, John."

"Tickets be —!" said John. "Get your tickets from the fellow you trolloped around with all day."

This was followed by loud laughing from a number sitting near, some of whom had been watching the girl's movements during the day, and she had to go down into her pocket for the necessary wealth to pay her fare to this city.—Youngstown Register.

Another Arctic Exploring Party.

A party of bold and intrepid explorers, consisting of ten persons, have left for British America and the Arctic regions, the object being to solve the great problem, viz., how to reach the North pole. The explorers are very hopeful that in the extreme northern regions they may be able to find some traces of the long-lost explorer and navigator, Sir John Franklin and his followers. The party will proceed to the Red River of the North and descend said river as far as Pembina. From the latter place a small steamer will carry the exploring party as far north as navigation will permit. They will then proceed as best they can to Fort York, on the west side of Hudson bay, in about 58 deg. north latitude. At this point they will put their boats together, carried in sections a la Stanley, and launch them and push as far north as 80 deg. before going into winter quarters. A band of fifty trained and tried Esquimaux trappers and fishermen are engaged to accompany the explorers. The Esquimaux are thoroughly equipped for the voyage, and provided with trained dogs, sledges, reindeer, etc., and can travel at a rapid pace.

Egypt's Canals.

Egypt is as dependent for her very existence on the waters of the Nile as ever she was. There is not an acre of tilled land but is fertilized directly from the river. The annual rise, caused by the equatorial rains, begins in June and attains its greatest height in the latter part of September. The country is irrigated by 846 canals, measuring in all 8,400 miles, of which 112 have been constructed during the present reign. The large canals which issue directly from the river tap it at a higher elevation than the district they are intended to irrigate, and from them issue smaller canals which water still lower and more remote sections.—National Repository for November.

A Few Remarks.

At the weekly conference meetings the Rev. Dr. Blank was a good deal pestered by a zealous brother who was very much edified by his own exhortations, and it was often deemed necessary to "head him off," by calling on somebody else to speak or pray just as he was about to begin. On one occasion, as he rose to speak, the pastor gently interrupted him by saying: "Brother, will you lead us in prayer?" The brother hesitated but a moment, and made answer: "I was about to offer a few remarks, but perhaps I can throw them into the form of a prayer!"

AMONG the many publications claiming to be family journals, there is none so fully entitled to the claim as The Chicago Ledger. Its "Home" department—made up of well-written contributions from experienced women upon household management, kitchen economy, home decoration, floriculture, gardening, poultry-raising, etc., etc.—is more than worth the price of subscription ($1.50 a year). No housewife or mother should be without THE LEDGER.

MARY STALFA, of Traverse, Mich., stepped on a loose floor-board, and fell through into the room below, where sat a young man who had never seen her before. He may have been sentimentally impressed by the fact that she came down to him from above, for before night he asked her to marry him, and she assented; but evidently he judged too hastily, for within two months he applied for a divorce.

THE excavations in the old Roman forum are being conducted with zeal and thoroughness. It has been thought that the ancient Via Sacra would be discovered under the Arch of Titus, as there were many monuments along that highway. The excavations have been very deep indeed, but no trace of any monument has been found.

COMMANDER CAMERON, who earned great fame in Africa last year, is about to begin a journey to demonstrate the feasibility of constructing a railway from the Mediterranean to India without following the course of the Euphrates.

Government Clerks.

A stranger in Washington, who was not aware that he was in the capital city of a great country, happening into the street just before 9 o'clock on a week-day morning might easily mistake the meaning of the sight that would meet his eye. He would see the sidewalks filled with men; and among them a few girls and women.

If he were to follow a group of those passers, he would observe that they entered one of those vast structures called "the departments," where the business of the nation is done. But so great is the number of those entering that he might readily fancy that they were assembling for some unusual occasion.

These men are Government clerks, and they are assembling to enter upon some of the dreariest work that falls to the lot of intelligent men.

"I will do anything for you I can, said a Congressman to a young friend who was seeking something to do; "but don't ask me to get you a department clerkship. It kills a man's ambition, and unfits him for any other work."

This remark will not surprise any one who knows how clerks in the Government service are appointed and the nature of their work. They usually get their places by patronage; and promotions are rare. The young man who is appointed a clerk at a salary of $1,200 remains in the same position until he is turned out, to make room for another.

He is not certain to retain his clerkship if he does well the work assigned to him; nor is he certain to lose it if he does the work very badly or not at all. The result is that, having very monotonous work to do, he very quickly loses his interest in it.

There is, however, a fascination in holding a Government place which few can resist after they have once felt it. The easy work and the sure pay, even when it is small, chain them to the places where they are, and forbid them to break the bands that bind them. Men will intrigue and plot to keep clerkships which do not pay them half what they might earn, if they would only pluck up energy and courage. And when they are dismissed, they plot again and beset their member of Congress with appeals to provide for them elsewhere.

Terrible Experience of a Balloonist.

On account of the high wind the balloon race at the fair ground was considered unsafe to life, but, to appease the crowd, Harry Gilbert undertook to make the ascension in the Erkenbreker, a small balloon, with disastrous consequences. No sooner was the word given to "let go" than the balloon was seized by the gale and hurled against the nearest tree, some fifty yards distant, the basket striking with great force about thirty feet from the ground. Becoming detached, the balloon shot with mighty velocity toward the top of a tree standing near the track, striking the top with such force as to open it wide, whence the descent was alarmingly rapid, striking about the center of the race-course grounds, amid the wildest consternation on the part of the multitude, many of the ladies fainting. Gilbert was picked up badly bruised and cut—with no bones broken, however. The balloon is utterly ruined.—Indianapolis Journal.

A Boy's Answer.

When Sir Walter Scott was at school a boy in the same class was asked by the "dominie" what part of speech "with" was. "A noun, sir," said the boy. "You young blockhead," cried the pedagogue, "what example can you give of such a thing?" "I can tell you, sir," interrupted Scott; "you know, sir, there's a verse in the Bible which says, 'They bound Sampson with withs.'"

"MAXIMS is what ails me," he said to the police Judge. "Maxims busted me wide open." The Court said it would like an explanation before fixing the fine. "Well, your Honor," said the prisoner, "I drank rye whisky, and I didn't get drunk. I remembered that maxim, 'Try, try again.' I tried rye again—" "Here, that's enough of that!" thundered the Court; "this ain't no circus ring. Ten dollars and costs."

Beware of Cheap Excitants,

And use, if you need a tonic stimulant and alterative, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The liquors of commerce, even when they are not adulterated, fail to produce more than a temporary exhilaration, usually followed by a depressing reaction, anything but beneficial to a weakly constitution. Not only do the potent botanic ingredients combined with the alcoholic of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters minister to the health and vigor of those who use it, but the basis—pure old rye, the finest and most salubrious liquor distilled—is no mean promoter of a healthful condition of the digestive organs. Its presence in the Bitters is essential to preserve their vegetable constituents from fermentation, and it unquestionably augments their remedial value. Few medicinal preparations of a proprietary nature have ever received such strong commendations from medical men.

WE still assert that Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is a great Remedy for Heart Disease, and give the following proof:

My wife was troubled with water about the heart, and could get no relief from any physician. She was also troubled with great nervousness at certain intervals, arising from Heart Disease. I purchased some of the HEART REGULATOR, and she obtained great relief. The use of the HEART REGULATOR gave her immediate relief from all sinking of the spirits, and she would not be without it at any time.

She would gratefully recommend the HEART REGULATOR to any one troubled with the Heart Disease, and advise them to try it as a safe and certain remedy.

A WESTERN paper says that "by this time all down-easters have got their houses banked up, and have laid in a supply of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment." It would be a wise thing for people hereabouts to lay in the Anodyne. It is the most valuable liniment in the world.

HORSE and cattle powders, if unadulterated, are of immense advantage, but the large packs now sold are trash; only one kind now known in this country are absolutely pure, and those are Sheridan's.

The National Scourge.

It is estimated that the annual damages caused by the ravages of insects and worms exceed $150,000,000 in the United States alone. Truly an enormous loss! Yet it sinks into insignificance when compared with the ravages of that more terrible scourge, Consumption, which annually sweeps hundreds of thousands of human souls into eternity. The causes of consumption are various, depending in every instance for the development of the disease upon the scrofulous diathesis, or temperament, of the victim. Thus, the same cause which will produce in one person an attack of acute disease, or a slight nervous prostration, will engender consumption in a person of scrofulous habit. That consumption can be cured by proper treatment will be readily perceived when the exact nature of the disease is understood, viz.: the accumulation and deposition of scrofulous matter (tubercles) in the lungs. Obviously, the principal remedies required are (1) a powerful alterative, or blood-purifier, to arrest the accumulations and also cleanse the blood of the scrofulous matter, and (2) a mild cathartic to expel the diseased matter from the system. This course of treatment, in conjunction with a strict hygienic regime, has proved the most successful method of curing this disease. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Purgative Pellets are the best alterative and cathartic remedies before the public, and have been alone used in thousands of cases of consumption with the most marked efficacy. Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, at Buffalo, N. Y., affords special and unequaled advantages to consumptives, not only possessing the best medical and hygienic means of treatment, but having the essential advantage of being situated in a climate where the inhabitants are notably free from this disease.

THE delicate membrane which envelopes the lungs and lines the air passages is exceedingly sensitive, and a slight irritation of it increases and spreads very rapidly. Remembering this, use, if you are attacked by a cough or cold, that incomparable pulmonic and preventive of consumption, DR. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, which invariably gives speedy relief and ultimately effects a complete cure in all cases where the breathing organs are affected. Use it in time and prevent serious bronchial trouble. Sold by all Druggists.

FOR upward of 30 years Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children with never-failing success. It corrects acidity of the stomach, relieves wind colic, regulates the bowels, cures dysentery and diarrhea, whether arising from teething or other causes. An old and well-tried remedy. 25 cts. a bottle.

IF each one of several makers had taken the highest medal at one of the great world's expositions, there would be room to question which was best; but Mason & Hamlin have taken the highest honors at every such competition for twelve years.

TO CLEANSE and whiten the teeth, to sweeten the breath, use Brown's Camphorated Saponaceous Dentifrice. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

THEODORE REED, - - - Editor.

California, in the Next Election.

It may be, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, that the next election of a President may be thrown into the House of Representatives. That is not probable, but possible. Should it be, it is well known that each State has a vote in the House, a majority of the delegation determining that vote. The result of the Congressional elections is that the Democrats have secured a majority of the House delegations in nineteen States. The Republicans have secured a majority of the delegations in eighteen States, and California, by special act of Congress, will elect her members next year. In the following States the Democrats have secured a majority of the members of the House of Representatives:

Alabama,
Arkansas,
Delaware,
Florida,
Georgia,
Indiana,
Kentucky,
Louisiana,
Maryland,
Mississippi.
Missouri,
North Carolina,
Ohio,
Oregon,
South Carolina,
Tennessee,
Texas,
Virginia,
West Virginia,

Here are only nineteen States, and if the election should go to the House it would require twenty votes to elect. The Republicans have secured these eighteen, if Nevada is included:

Colorado,
Iowa,
Kansas,
Maine,
Massachusetts,
Michigan,
Connecticut,
Illinois,
Nevada,
Minnessota,
Nebraska,
Rhode Island,
Vermont,
Wisconsin,
New Hampshire
New Jersey,
New York,
Pennsylvania.

This leaves California alone. California has four member of the House. In this Congress two are Democrats and two are Republicans. If, next year, the Democrats should elect three of these four members, the Democratic party would have twenty States in the House. Otherwise there is a tie.

In this case, if the election fails by the people of the States through the Electoral College, it fails also in the House. There will be a struggle for California, to cover accidents. In the last election the First District was Republican, Mr. Horace Davis receiving 22,115 votes, against, 19,363 votes for Mr. Piper, Democrats. The Second District was Republican, Mr. Page having received 20,815 votes, against 15,916 for Mr. Carpenter, Democrat.

The Third District was Democratic, Mr. Luttrell obtaining 19,846 votes against 18,990 for Mr. Kenna, Republican.

The Fourth District was the close District in the State. Mr. Wigginton, Democrat, had 19,097 votes and Mr. Pacheco, Republican, had 19,093—a difference of four votes. The seat was only determined after a contest, in favor of the Democrat. This is the close situation in California, and if the Presidency has a possibility of the Presidency being thrown into the House, California becomes an important State. There is a difference between a majority and a tie which is certainly of consequence.

Passing the pressure which will doubtless be brought to bear on California, what will be the result of a tie vote? There is no election of a President by the Electoral College chosen by the people of the States. There is no election of a President by the House of Representatives. No President chosen at all. Who shall act as President? There can be no lapse in the Executive. The Constitution says the Vice President shall act. But if there has been no choice of a President by the Electoral College there has been no choice of a Vice President. Then the Constitution provides that if no man receives a majority of the Electoral vote for the Vice-Presidency, the Senate shall by a majority vote choose the Vice-President from the two highest numbers on the list of those voted for as Vice-President. It thus appears that the Democracy have not in any event lost the next Presidency by the forms of law. The system of choosing the President may be defective, but the Democratic party, if it carries a majority of the Electoral votes will not again lose the Presidency. If no party has a majority of the Electoral votes the Senate will elect the President, and the Senate will be Democratic after the 4th of March next, a Democratic majority being already elected.

The Rev. De La Matyr, of Indianapolis, bids fair to be a very important personage within the next two years The Indiana congressional delegation contains six democrats and six republicans, and Mr. De La Matyr, who is classed as a national. If the election is thrown into the house, Mr. De La Matyr can give Indiana's vote either to the republican or democratic candidate and if, as seems probable, the vote by states should be extremely close, Indiana's vote might settle the contest. The aspiring statesmen of all parties will doubtless be very polite to Mr. De La Matyr in the near future.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

De La Matyr, the congressman elect from the 7th district, may have the honor of electing the next president of the United States. If the election of the next president should devolve upon the house of representatives, and the vote of the Indiana delegation should be necessary in order to elect, the vote of De La Matyr will turn the scale—his vote will elect a president.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

Auburn Courier Job Rooms

Auburn Courier.

Here is how an exchange puts it: We suppose that many people think that newspaper men are persistent duns; let a farmer place himself in a similar business position and see if he would not do the same. Suppose he raised one thousand bushels of wheat, and his neighbors should come and buy a bushel, and the price was a small matter of only two dollars or less, and the neighbor says, "I will hand you the amount in a few days." As the farmer does not want to be small about the matter, he says all right, and the man leaves with the wheat. Another comes in the same way, until the whole of the thousand bushels of wheat are trusted out to one thousand different persons, and not one of the purchasers concerns himself about it, for it is a small amount that he owes the farmer, and of course that would not help him any. He does not realize that the farmer has fritted away all his large crop of wheat, and that its value is due him in a thousand little dribblets, and that he is seriously embarrassed in his business because his debtors treat it as a little matter. But if all would pay him promptly, which they could do as well as not, it would be a very large amount to the farmer, and enable him to carry on his business without difficulty. The above comparison is too true of the difficulties that the newspaper man has to contend with.

As the winter days come on, there is naturally a burst of natural enthusiasm on religious topics. The fanaticism on one side and "the too liberalisms" on the other, begin the great discussions; and from philosophical reasons it seems as though religious differences were effected quite unlike material substances for these arguments seem to expand by the cold chilling blasts of December, rather than contract. Last year, it will be remembered, the subject of "future punishment" was the all absorbing topic in almost every circle of life; men of thought at first, and men of very little arguments at last, until the mere school boy thought himself able to show good argument from the various epistles of the apostle, either pro or con on the question. This became a great detriment; it seemed a great detriment to the solid christian belief. On one hand the old fogies of the old schools stood striving to show by their creeds and dispensations, that the doctrine of the lake of fire, was plain and plausible, while another class clammored with Bob Ingersoll, in the too liberalism voice, which placed the just and the unjust on the car for the great destination of eternal bliss. Thus it was, the whole way between these elements was made use of by the don't-care-a-cent class of individuals, to romp in, and have a general good time. This year, it is to be hoped, that final results will be left to take care of themselves, while the people seek a way whereby they may be able to do the most good to the greatest number.—Decatur Union.

Mr. T. C. Mays left last Monday for Silver Cliff, Colorado, for the purpose of superintending the arrangement of a new newspaper and job printing office for other parties who are not experienced in that line. He expects to return in about 30 days.

Siver Cliff is a new mining town (or rather camp) of about 2000 inhabitants, more particularly described in the following which we clip from the Denver Tribune: "Parties who wish to visit this camp should take their blankets with them.

It has only two streets laid out, viz: Cliff and Main, running east and west. On these are about one hundred completed buildings, only one two stories, about twenty-five tents and as many more uncompleted houses. There are four general stores, three meat markets, two bakeries, three boarding houses, three feed stables, two assay offices, one gambling house and several saloons.

The first house was built September 15th last by H. E. Austin, formerly of Rosita. Board is cheap, only $5 per week. Three meals for $1. Miner's wages $2.50, they boarding themselves.

A new paper will be started in a few days. Mr. Stevens is now east after material.

A banking house will soon be in opperation. Raynolds Brothers of Canon and Rosita will establish a branch as soon as a suitable building can be secured.

A post office has been applied for. Mail for to this camp should now be directed to Silver Cliff via Rosita.

Real estate dealers are numerous. Most everybody owns one or more lots. Some lots double in price over night. The best are worth from $100 to $500,"

Science in Story.

Is a great work for the young, and the secular and religious press all over the country have spoken in highest terms of it. It is humorous, instructive and just the thing to give children a knowledge of themselves. Its author is Dr. E. B. Foote, who wrote Medical Common Sense. Science in Story is in five volumes, for $5, or in one compact volume for $2. Sent postage prepaid on recipt of price. Evidences of Dr. Foote's success as a writer and practitioner is mailed free. If you wish to consult Dr. Foote, address letter to 120 Lexington Avenue, New York City. If you wish for any of his publications address Murray Hill Publishing Company, 129 East 28th street, New York City.

Correction.

In our last week's issue we charged Mr. Moss, County Clerk, with having refused to publish an "Administrator's Notice" in the COURIER when so requested, which we maintained he had no right to do. Since then Mr. Moss has called our attention to the fact that the notice in question was not an "Administrator's Notice," but a "Notice to Heirs, of Petition to Sell Real Estate," appearing over his own signature, which he had a right to have published where it best suited him. That being the case, and not wishing to misrepresent Mr. Moss or any other gentleman, we are pleased to make this correction.

The Wabash Courier says; "Senator Sharon, of Nevada, it is reported, will resign his seat soon. He finds that it is much more pleasant and profitable to look after the interests of his millions than to loaf about Washington, and attempt to play the role of statesman. Sharon did not go to the capital at all last winter, and it is doubtful it he will attend the session of the Senate this season. He would have resigned his seat long ago but for the fact that he would have been superceded by a Democrat. After the fourth of March the Senate will be Democratic anyhow and his party can not suffer by his stepping down and out. Good bye, Sharon; there are few who will regret your laying aside the Senatorial toga!"

Another great slaughter in prices at the New York Store. The last and only chance offered to the people of Auburn and vicinity to get their fall and winter dry goods and clothing, at less than cost. If not closed out within the next thirty days, the New York Store will positively be removed to some other point The following prices will indicate the extra inducements offered:

Prints	worth 7 cents	for 5 cents.

Accident.

On Friday of last week, a Polander by the name of Kruker, who was employed as brakeman on the B. & O. Railroad, accidentally fell from a car while passing Auburn Junction; the train passed over him crushing one foot and limb from the knee down, so that amputation was necessary. The operation was performed by Dr. Spooner (as we are informed). Mr. Kruker is a single man.

Last Saturday night a party of men in disguise attacked the editor of the Shiawassee American, a republican newspaper published at Corunna, Mich. with the intention of giving him a coat of tar and feathers, but, by the assistance of friends the editor succeeded in dispersing the gang. The trouble grew out of the defeat of the republican candidate for county clerk, at the last election, the editor using his paper against him.

Just as we go to press we learn that a dispatch has been received from Attorney Plum at Indianapolis, saying that the restraining order of Judge Gresham of the United States district court to prevent the payment of the $17,000 which Hazzard applied on his indebtedness to the First National Bank, had been dissolved. This leaves the Bank in a sound condition, without any further litigation on that score.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE Mechanics' and Laborers' Savings Bank, of Jersey City, has temporarily suspended payment and enforced the sixty-day rule. Assets, $200,0,0; liabilities, $190,000.

"A STARTLING crime," says a New York telegram, "similar to that which was attempted at the grave of Abraham Lincoln two years ago, has been successfully carried out here. The grave of the late A. T. Stewart has been violated, and the remains of the deceased millionaire are now in the hands of body-snatchers. Francis Parker, assistant sexton of St. Mark's Church, saw on entering the churchyard this morning a suspicious mound of fresh earth. A closer view revealed the fact that the Stewart vault had been opened, and by the dim light that entered the crypt Mr. Parker saw that the coffin in which the remains of the merchant prince had been interred was broken and empty on the floor. A month ago suspicious marks found upon the slab which overlies the tomb indicated that an attempt upon the vault by body-snatchers was contemplated, and precautions were taken to thwart their plans. A watchman was employed to guard the tomb, and it was doubtless owing to the folly of the sexton in discharging the watchman that the crime was successful at last. The estate of A. T. Stewart will not offer a reward for the recovery of his body. It will give $100,000, if need be, for the detection and punishment of the outlaws, but not one cent to them for the return of what they have taken. Not a single cent will be paid in order to compromise the case.

THE WEST.

A LARAMIE dispatch reports that the Deadwood coach was stopped a mile distant from the post, by five masked men, who took from the coach two prisoners, Mansfield and McLaughlin, and hung them on a large cottonwood tree on the river bank. These men, who were charged with road agency, had been in custody in Cheyenne, and were on route for Deadwood.

BY the explosion of a boiler in the saw-mill of Joseph Ents, at Savannah, Mo., two men were killed and two others seriously injured....Five two-story brick tenement houses on Cerre street, between Eighth and Ninth streets, St. Louis, burned the other night. Loss about $8,000. Three persons lost their lives in the flames.

MR. ALFRED DUTCH, one of the oldest journalists in the West, has just died in Chicago, aged 78 years. He edited a paper in the Garden City thirty-five years ago.

THE SOUTH.

THE pestilence in the South, which has raged since the beginning of July last, and which has caused more than 12,000 deaths, is now virtually over. In New Orleans, although a certain number of deaths is daily set down to its account, the epidemic has been officially declared at an end, and in Memphis and Mobile Jack Frost has given the fever its coup de grace. From the inland points the reports are favorable.

A LYNCHING affair is reported from Arkansas, a colored man being taken from the jail at Clarksville, the other night, and hung. He was confined for an assault upon a white woman.

GENERAL.

ALONG the line of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, in the vicinity of Parkersburg, W. Va., diphtheria is prevailing to a frightful extent, producing a rate of mortality approaching that of the yellow fever in its worst degree of virulence. Similar reports are received from various parts of the country.

THE convention of the stone-cutters of the United States and Canada, in session in New York last week, protested against the future continuance of the convict-labor system.

THE total coinage of the mints during October was $6,625,400, of which $3,464,600 was in double eagles and $2,070,000 in standard silver dollars....The internal-revenue receipts for October were $10,089,704, against $10,107,300 for the corresponding month of last year.

AT a recent meeting of the Cabinet, it was decided that some recommendation shall be included in the President's message as to measures for arresting the depreciation of silver dollars. It will be suggested that this may be done either by increasing the amount of silver in the coin or by limiting the coinage, or by combining both these plans.

POLITICAL.

RETURNS from the November elections, as received by telegraph on the morning of Friday, Nov. 8, indicate the results noted below:

Illinois.—Entire Republican State ticket elected, and the Legislature is Republican by a small majority. The Congressional delegation stands 12 Republicans, 6 Democrats and 1 Greenbacker.

Wisconsin.—The election in this State was for members of Congress and the State Legislature. The Congressional vote may be summed up as follows: First district, Republican; Third, very close; Second, Republican; Fourth, Democratic; Fifth, Democrat; Sixth, Democrat; Seventh, Republican; Eighth, close, but probably Republican. The Republicans elect a clear working majority of the Legislature on joint ballot.

Michigan.—Returns indicate that the Republican State ticket is successful by a large plurality, and that both branches of the Legislature are Republican. The Congressional delegation is solidly Republican.

Minnesota.—The Republicans have about 15,000 majority on the State ticket. The Democrats elect one Congressman—Poehler, of the Third.

Missouri.—The Democrats made a clean sweep in Missouri, electing an unbroken delegation to Congress. The Democratic State ticket is also elected by a large majority.

Nebraska.—The Republicans elect their Governor and member of Congress by about 10,000 majority.

Kansas.—The Republicans elect their State ticket by 30,000 majority, and every member of Congress. The Legislature is largely Republican.

Pennsylvania.—The Republicans carry the State by about 15,000 majority. The Congressional delegation stands 16 Republicans, 2 Greenback Republicans, 8 Democrats and 1 Greenback Democrat.

New York.—The Republican State ticket is elected by a small majority. That party also gains four or five Congressmen, while the Legislature is also Republican, thus insuring the re-election of Mr. Conkling to the United States Senate. In New York city Tammany Hall was overthrown, the combination ticket headed by Edward Cooper, anti-Tammany Democrat, being elected by over 15,000 majority.

New Jersey.—The Republicans have probably elected five of the seven Congressmen—a Democratic loss of two.

Connecticut.—The Republican candidate for Governor leads his Democratic competitor 2,000 or 3,000 votes, but as the Greenback vote is about 8,000 there is no choice, and the election will be decided by the Legislature. As that body is Republican by a large majority, the election of a Republican Governor and United States Senator is assured.

Massachusetts.—The Republicans made a clean sweep, Ben Butler being defeated for Governor by upward of 30,000 majority. Only one Democrat elected to Congress—Leopold Morse, of Boston.

Rhode Island.—The Republicans elect both of the Representatives in Congress.

New Hampshire.—The Republicans elected their candidate for Governor, carried every Congressional district, and secured a working majority in the Legislature.

Vermont.—There was a special election for Congressman in the Third district of Vermont, resulting in the choice of Barlow, Greenbacker.

Virginia.—The election was quiet throughout the State, and the vote small. Gen. Joe Johnston was elected to Congress in the Richmond district. The Republicans elect one Congressman—Jorgensen—in the Fourth district.

Georgia.—The election in Georgia was very exciting. The negroes united with the Independents, and the result is the election of two or three Independents to Congress. A. H. Stephens was re-elected without opposition.

Delaware.—The Democrats elected the Governor and Representative in Congress.

Tennessee.—The Democrats elect their State ticket by a large majority, nine of the ten Congressmen, and secure a large majority in the Legislature.

Texas.—The Democrats make a clean sweep, electing all the Representatives in Congress and a majority in the Legislature.

Louisiana.—E. A. Burke, the Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, is elected. The Democrats also carry all six of the Congressional districts.

Arkansas.—All of the Representatives returned to Congress are Democrats.

Alabama.—All of the Democratic nominees for Congress were elected, except in the Eighth district, where Lowe, Independent, was chosen.

Nevada.—The Republicans elect their State ticket and member of Congress, and have a majority in the Legislature.

Florida.—The vote is so close that it will require all the returns to determine the result.

South Carolina.—The Democrats carried every Congressional district and every county in the State except one. The Legislature is consequently largely Democratic.

North Carolina.—The Republicans elect two members of Congress in North Carolina, all the other districts being carried by the Democracy.

Washington Territory.—The race between the Republican and Democratic nominees for Congress is so close that it will require all the returns to decide which has won.

New Mexico Territory.—Otero, Republican, is elected Delegate to Congress.

Wyoming Territory.—Downey, Republican, is elected to Congress by 800 majority.

FOREIGN.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch says the Porte has informed Minister Layard that the proposed reforms will be introduced in one province of Asia Minor, but the complete realization of the project will be postponed until the state of the Turkish finances permits....The native princes in India, according to dispatches from Bombay, are making liberal offers of aid to the Government in the Afghan war. The armies of some of these princes are in splendid condition, and, their people being hereditary haters of the Afghans, they will go into the war with great enthusiasm, it is thought, if their offers are accepted....Bismarck has prohibited the sale of the works of the late Ferdinand Lassalle.

AT the request of the British Ambassador the Porte has telegraphed Ahmet Kaiserli Pasha to evacuate Varna definitely and bring the troops and war material to Constantinople....St. Petersburg journals report a large number of suicides and attempted suicides in the Russian army in Bulgaria....The Government of India contemplates the adoption of a gold currency, making English gold coins a legal tender throughout the country. The importation of bar silver will probably be prohibited after a given time, and the rupee and smaller coins used as fractional currency....The Premier of Hyderabad has placed the whole treasury and army of that state at the disposal of the British Government, to be used against the Afghans.

THE republic of San Salvador, S. A., was visited, last month, by a very destructive earthquake, which overthrew several villages and caused the loss of many lives....The last of the imprisoned Fenians has been released, and will soon be in this country....The late French elections have insured control of the Senate for the Republicans. They gain twenty-eight Senators. The Electoral Colleges will meet on the 5th of January.

THE convention concluded between the countries of the Latin Union provides that the coinage of gold shall remain free, and the coinage of silver, suspended indefinitely, cannot be resumed without the consent of all the members of the union. The convention requires the ratification by the chambers of the countries in the union....Bismarck's daughter was married a few days ago to Count Rantzano, of Schleswig-Holstein....The telegraph lines for nearly 100 miles around Vienna have been destroyed by a great snow-storm....A proposition is being advanced to extend the term of President Diaz, of Mexico, for two years, he having refused to serve a second term....A Norwegian whaler, which has returned from the Arctic ocean, reports that, off Nova Zembla, she was boarded by two piratical Russian schooners and robbed of everything portable.

IT is reported that England has at length succeeded in effecting an offensive and defensive league with France and Portugal—for the purpose of making war on the King of Dahomey. None of the neutral powers have yet offered mediation, or suggested an international congress to settle the disputed questions, and avert the calamities of the impending collision....A Constantinople correspondent states that the Rhodope insurrection has received a fatal blow by the assassination of Omer Aga, one of its most influential leaders, by Kara Yussuf, former leader, who had been disgraced for plundering. Omer Aga's death produced such disorganization that the majority of the leaders dismissed their bands to their homes.

A Boy On a Pig.

A pig is about as big as a sheep, only a pig's wool isn't so good to make stockings of. Why is a pig like a tree? Because he roots. That is a conundrum. A pig washes himself in mud. A pig allas goes the wrong way. A pig has four legs, one under each corner of his body. They pickle pigs' feet, but not until after the pig has got done using them. A pig squeals awful when it rains, also when you pull his tail. A pig has got a first-rate voice for squealing, and he grunts when he feels good. You can't make a whistle out of a pig's tail, 'cos it is so crooked. Why is a pig like old Mar'm Brown? 'Cos she's got her nose into everything. This is another conundrum, which is all I know about a pig.

His Wife Did "Go In."

He had returned with his wife from a summer vacation at the seaside, and he stood in front of the house giving a friend a graphic account of the season's pleasures.

"Went in bathing every day," he exclaimed, enthusiastically.

"Ah!" responded the friend. "Wife go in, too?"

"Oh, yes, every day," said the returned vacationist.

"Can she swim?" queried the friend, with some interest.

"No, she can't," was the reply. "She tried and tried to learn, but somehow she didn't get the hang of it. She said she couldn't get the right kick, and I let her think that was the reason, but the fact was"—and here he looked up at the house, and sunk his voice to a hoarse aspiration—"the fact was she couldn't keep her mouth shut long enough to take four strokes before she'd have some silly remark to make, when kerswash—she'd swallow a whole wave, and go plump to the bottom," and the husband winked rapidly as the scene was recalled to mind, and went into the house chuckling with pleasure.

But he hadn't noticed a woman's face peering out of the curtains of a raised window. The acquaintance saw the front door open quickly; saw a hand reach out and grab the seaside boarder by the collar; saw the heels of that individual crack his back as he shot through the door, which slammed behind his vanishing form; heard a wild and stifled noise, as of a human body being hauled over a hat-rack and banged against a wall, and heard a muffled voice like unto that of an enraged woman say:

"Take that back and I'll let you up, you wall-eyed yahoo!"

William Lloyd Garrison's "Take."

The New England Franklin Club lately celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of William Lloyd Garrison's connection with the printing business. In commemoration of the event, says a correspondent of the New York World, Mr. Garrison undertook to set a stickful of solid nonpareil type. Having been provided with a stick and case, the veteran set to work in a business-like manner, amid the intensest excitement. A side-stick might have been heard to fall. The silence was only broken by the occasional click of the type in the stick and the subdued enthusiasm of the venerable patient, which found vent in such remarks as, "Where the Sweet By-and-By is the ff box?" "Sainted Thoreau, where's the italic case?" etc. Finally, in the remarkable time of 4:11:44, Mr. Garrison completed his task, and a proof of the "take" was at once pulled in gold ink on a white satin sheet. A fac-simile of this interesting relic is herewith presented:

Amnesty for Moonshiners.

In the late amnesty cases for revenue offenders in South Carolina all those offenders were specially excepted who had been engaged in attacking or resisting the officers, and in those cases it was directed that the trials should be had at the earliest possible day. The degree of amnesty granted in these cases is very different from that tried in Georgia under the last administration, and which proved a disastrous failure. In that case over 300 illicit distillers or other offenders against the law were pardoned by an executive order without consultati in with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and all were set at liberty without requiring any bonds whatever for good behavior. The result was that a large proportion of those thus pardoned were soon after engaged in the same character of offenses. In the present case there has been no pardon, and the sentence is simply suspended, with the understanding that it will be immediately pronounced and enforced upon any second offense.—Washington telegram.

Felling a Giant Tree.

Only one of the big trees of California has been felled by the hand of man. To accomplish this it required the work of five men for twenty-two days, not chopping, but with long augers, boring it down. After the tree was completely severed, the veteran stood still unmoved, refusing to fall, until by ropes, pulleys and wedges the enormous trunk was brought to the earth. This tree was found to be over 800 feet long, ninety-six feet in circumference at the base, and sound to the very heart.

A BERLIN shirt-maker, of whom the Chancellor had ordered a dozen shirts, by some blunder made the right sleeve of all the shirts a trifle shorter than the left ones. The Princess, who is a modest housewife, observed this and wrote to the maker, who expressed his sorrow and desired her to return the garments for alteration. They did not come, but in their stead came a letter from Bismarck congratulating him on this happy idea in making the right sleeve shorter than the other, so that the cuff did not bother him when writing.

"I KNOW where there is another arm just as pretty as this one," said a young Oil Citizen to his sweetheart, as he pinched her fair arm yesterday evening. The storm that quickly gathered upon the lady's brow as quickly passed away when the young man pinched her other arm, and said, "It is this one, dear."—Derrick.

A MYSTERY OF CRIME.

The Most Skillful Robbery of Modern Times.

The complete details of the recent robbery of the Manhattan Savings Bank in New York, says a contemporary, show it to have been one of the most skillfully-planned operations that has ever been known in the records of crime. It may be observed at the same time that there has never before been a crime committed that was so absolutely free from the chance of detection, either in its perpetration or after its commission. The seven masked burglars were as secure as if they were robbing a lonely farm-house, with not another house for miles around, instead of a bank in the heart of a great city, in broad daylight, with people constantly passing and repassing, who could look directly into the room where the thieves were at work. It is one of the most startling curiosities of crime that these seven men could enter this bank in daylight unperceived, overpower a family and obtain the keys and combination that guarded millions of dollars in cash, bonds and securities, enter the bank and spend an hour or two, in plain sight from two streets, packing up its assets, and then leave it through an exit into one of the most frequented streets of the city, and escape with their booty without attracting the attention of any one, although several patrolmen passed and repassed the building and looked in, as was their wont, to observe time by the clock on the larger vault which the thieves at that very time were wrecking. The circumstances of this bold robbery argue either an incomprehensible lack of observation upon the part of those whose duty it is to have their eyes open, or the possession upon the part of the thieves of invisible powers not hitherto known outside of the "Arabian Nights." Had a writer of fiction invented a similar situation for his villains, the book-reviewers would have accused him of inconsistency and want of fidelity to nature.

It adds to the despair of this situation that the only danger to which the thieves exposed themselves was in the commission of the act. When once they had escaped and concealed their plunder they were secure. The very nature of the property which they stole rendered them free from any liability of arrest. The Manhattan Savings Bank cannot afford to prosecute them if thereby it is to lose three and a half millions of dollars. It does not alter the situation that the bulk of the assets consists of bonds the thieves cannot negotiate. The bank needs them, and must have them for conversion, and private depositors are in the same fix. The thieves were wise enough to steal sufficient to save themselves from the penitentiary. They will be at some little trouble to answer letters from the bank and depositors, in fixing the details of the return of the property and the amount of commission they are to receive for their willingness to return a certain portion of it, which is of no value to them. However deplorable all this may be from the moral point of view, it is a case of hard necessity and involves the salvation of the bank. If there is any responsibility for this, it must be fastened upon the beneficent tendencies of modern civilization which have brought us to that standard of moral ethics where we can punish a man who steals a dollar out of another's pocket or a loaf of bread out of a window, but cannot punish a man whose theft involves millions. The magnitude of the crime oversweeps the limits of the law and successfully defies the processes of the courts. The mills of justice grind the petty rogue exceedingly fine, but the colossal rogue clogs the wheels with his huge load of plunder. It is not impossible as civilization progresses that we may reach that point where a person dissatisfied with the management of a bank may steal the assets and open a new bank with them over the way. The only condition of success is magnitude.

Effect of Salt on Wheat.

In an interesting series of experiments recently made on the farm of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, the manurial value of salt was unmistakably indicated. An acre of wheat dressed with 300 pounds of common salt yielded thirty-nine bushels of grain, with a proportionate amount of straw; while an adjoining acre, left unmanured, produced only twenty-nine bushels per acre, with the straw imperfectly developed. The entire cost of the crop is not stated, but the experiment shows that the additional ten bushels resulting from the salt were produced at a cost of 30 cents each. In another case a piece of ground intended for wheat was plowed the preceding fall, and again in May, when it was sowed with salt, and afterward plowed before seeding. On the 1st and 2d of September wheat was sown at the rate of two bushels to the acre. The crop, when harvested, yielded, according to the estimate of the owner, Mr. John Park, not less than forty bushels of grain to the acre, with a luxuriant growth of straw. From these and many similar cases the inference seems to be that salt is a specific for the wheat crop, imparting solidity to the grain and firmness to the straw. But it must not be concluded that equally good results will always follow the application of salt.—Montreal Gazette.

Giant Trees.

A recent explorer of the sequoia forests of California says, in Harper's Magazine, that the Fresno group of big trees, not often visited, occupies an area of three or four square miles. The average stature of these trees is about 275 feet, many exceeding 300, and the diameter from 20 to 30, yet so harmonious are their proportions that the immensity of their size is not readily realized. "Walk the sequoia woods at any time of the year," he says, "and you will say they are the most beautiful on earth. Rare and impressive contrasts meet you everywhere—the colors of tree and flower, rock and sky, light and shade, strength and frailty, endurance and evanescence." He combats the idea that the big trees are the last of forests of their kind, and argues that they will be replaced by others as enormous in size. Fire is the great enemy of the comparatively young trees, and the cones are nearly all eaten by squirrels, yet he found an abundance of young and vigorous sequoias.

Registered Bonds.

A list of the stolen bonds taken from the Manhattan Savings Institution, of New York, has been received by the Treasury Department. A caveat will be entered against each of them upon the books of the treasury. Mr. Scofield, Register of the Treasury, said to-day that the bank could not lose a cent upon the stolen bonds which were registered. They would be subjected to some additional trouble; that is all. The interest will continue to the bank, as the presentation of bonds is not required to collect interest, the money being always paid to the person whose name appears upon the treasury books. The only place where the bonds would be needed would be in case of maturity, or where a call is made. In that case, if the original holder of a registered bond has lost it, by destruction or theft, all he has to do is to make affidavit of the same at the Treasury Department, and file bonds double in amount for the loss claimed, and then a new bond is issued. The Manhattan Bank, by furnishing proof of its loss and a bond to the amount of $5,000,000, can have duplicates of the stolen bonds reissued to them. As registered bonds are not negotiable, and are only payable to the holder, who has to be properly identified, it was thought strange by some that this double identification should be required by the Government, when the bond was in itself a guarantee. Register Scofield explains the object of this. Registered bonds are assignable. Where the original holder should sell to a second party and assign it to him, a case might occur where the second holder should be sick, or die, or be in some way prevented from notifying the treasury that the bond had passed to him, so that a note of it could be made upon the treasury books. In that case the original holder might come in and aver that he had lost his bond, and secure the issue to himself of a duplicate of the bond still in existence. To guard against any such loss the guaranty in case of reissue is required. After these bonds are assigned in blank, and are put in bank as collateral, they are negotiable as coupon bonds, and are subject to loss by theft. Register Scofield says that there is no case on record where a loss has occurred through registered bonds.—Washington telegram.

Mustaches.

Though French soldiers in general wear mustaches, marines are not permitted to do so, on the ground that salt air would condense on them, and probably create ulcers. In the middle ages all classes in France wore them, including the clergy, and down to the beginning of the French Revolution the upper ranks of priests were adorned with well-pomaded and powdered hair on the upper lip. In 1792 the army was forbidden to wax and paint their mustaches, and only grenadiers were allowed to wear them. This regulation continued until 1813, when the cavalry, dragoons excepted, were permitted to let them grow. In 1822 the privilege was extended to the infantry, carbineers and voltigeurs, and to all officers of whatever service. In 1832 Marshal Soult, then Minister of War, rendered mustaches obligatory upon all soldiers who could raise them. Civilians began wearing mustaches immediately after the fall of Napoleon I., and in 1830 they became general in France, and have since remained so. Among lawyers, however, custom has enjoined shaving, and Judges, on the appearance of a mustached pleader before them, have sometimes refused to hear him unless he "made himself decent." All employes of the Bank of France are still required to shave, and custom enjoins shaving upon waiters in saloons and restaurants, and on men servants. Priests in French colonies, almoners and missionaries are an exception to the general rule of the church; they must not only allow the hair to grow on the upper lip, but on the entire face.

Poisoning by Arsenic in Gloves.

In a recent number of the Allgemeine Medicinisene Central Zeitung is a brief report of a case in which the symptoms of poisoning were traced to the use of gloves charged with arsenic. A gentleman, Maj. von B., traveling from Schleswig to Berlin, bought in Hamburg a pair of marine-blue gloves, and, on arriving in Berlin, put them on and made several visits. Soon after he felt ill; he returned to Schleswig and sought medical advice. His hands were covered with a peculiar eruption, for which his physician could not account, and he had a sensation of general weakness. Reflecting on the symptoms, he thought of the gloves, and communicated his suspicions to two medical men, who at first laughed at them, but afterward had the gloves submitted to chemical analysis, the result of which was the detection of a considerable quantity of arsenic in them.—British Medical Journal.

The Mirror Telegraph.

One of the wonders of the age is what is called the "mirror telegraph." This is a means of communication in use by the United States Signal Survey parties throughout the country. The telegraphing is done by an instrument known as the heliotrope, which concentrates the rays of the sun to a focus and casts them straight ahead, similar to a mirror. By an agreed series of long and short flashes, the parties communicate to each other the temperature, etc., from point to point. Two parties, thirty-five miles apart, were recently observed communicating, and the flashes at that distance were as bright as the flashes of the sun.

JAMES MILLER started from Ohio with his family for the far West, traveling in an emigrant wagon drawn by two horses. In Missouri one of the horses died, and he stole another to replace it. He was arrested, convicted and sentenced to eight years' imprisonment. Lately his term expired, and he resumed his journey, his family having lived in the neighborhood of the prison while waiting for him to be released.

ONE HORROR IN THE SOUTH.

How a Woman Narrowly Escaped Burial Before Death.

[New Orleans Cor. New York Graphic.]

So great is the panic and dread of contagion in many of the smaller places where the fever has broken out, and so intense is the desire of preventing the spread of the disease by putting the corpses of the victims under ground as speedily as possible, that many incidents have occurred of a horrifying nature. In Biloxi, Miss., as in many other small places, the citizens formed a Board of Health, armed with the privilege of entering the house of death and snatching away the corpse almost on the instant the pulse has ceased to beat. Miss D——, a beautiful young lady (whose father, it is said, is worth his thousands at the North), was thus torn from the arms of her aunt, and, without waiting for the doctor's certificate, without even being shrouded, was rolled in the sheet on which she had lain and consigned to the earth within two or three hours after her death. Another beautiful girl, a belle and the daughter of wealth, died at midnight, and before the dawn a cart backed up to the door with a rude coffin, and through the drizzling rain two of her young lady friends, wrapped in cloaks and carrying lanterns, jumped into cart beside her, and held the lights in the graveyard while the sexton did his work.

There are scores of instances of this nature, and there are many who feel confident that during these terrible "hundred days" of panic and confusion at the South many persons have been buried alive. It could not possibly have been otherwise, with such terror, scarcity of doctors and nurses, and overwhelming number of cases, as demoralized the inhabitants of many of the plague-stricken districts where the fever was comparatively an unknown visitant. The story of one woman alone is enough to show what basis there is for this apprehension. The woman, Mrs. L., died (apparently), having had black vomit, and was hurriedly washed and shrouded. The hearse backed up to the door, and the coffin was placed on the bed beside her. The friends, afraid to go to the infected dwelling, were crowded around the grave in the cemetery when a rumor reached them from the house that the horrid pit would not receive that tenant, as the supposed-dead woman had returned to life. With one accord the crowd made for the house, and there the rumor was verified. When the attendants were about to place the body in the coffin, the woman had turned over, and, striking her hand against the awful object on the bed, asked: "What box is this?" Strange to say, she appeared better after her reawakening, the black vomit did not reappear, and she is now in a fair way of recovery. The death-like swooning and insensible condition are attributed to exhaustion and the large quantities of champagne given to check black vomit. But one shudders to think of the fate which had been hers had the torpor continued but a few moments longer.

That there are chapters of unprecedented horror in the present Southern epidemic is known to all—but many of the worst, I fear, will be traced to the infidelity of nurses and the blunders of inexperienced or overtaxed physicians.

A Romance of the Plague.

One of the thousand and one tragic incidents of the great plague happened at Holly Springs, Miss. A beautiful young lady of New Orleans was forced by her father to marry an old man she could not love. Preferring death to slavery, the young lady ran away and gave her services as nurse to the fever-stricken at Holly Springs. After a few days of devoted attention to the sick she was herself stricken. There was a male nurse for her. There was no female hand to soothe with its gentle touch the fevered brow. But the noble Ridley was there to perform the last sad offices to the dying girl. Toward the last she said to him: "Kiss me." As Ridley kissed her on the cheek, she exclaimed, "Kiss my lips," which he did. She then said: "You are the only man I ever kissed; kiss me again." While Ridley was in the act of kissing her she threw her arms tightly around his neck, and instantly expired. God bless the brave hearts.—Memphis Avalanche.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

One acre of land will produce 1,000 bushels of sugar beets, which, made into sugar, will yield 4,800 pounds of sugar; or into vinegar, 5,000 gallons; or into proof spirits, 1,000 gallons. Such are the possibilities of an acre of ground, with proper skill and cultivation.

Fattening Pigs.—Fattening pigs should be pushed on as rapidly as possible before the cold weather. A pound of fat made now costs less than that made next month, and the latter costs less than the same amount made in December. Remember that the cold weather wastes fat.

Ground for Oats.—Ground for oats should be fall-plowed and left ridged, so that the cultivator or harrow may fit it for seeding in the early spring. The land for early potatoes should also be plowed and manured. Spread the manure upon the plowed ground and leave till spring; then plow it under.

Preserved Apples.—Weigh equal quantities of good brown sugar and of apples; peel, core, and mince them small; boil the sugar, allowing to every three pounds a pint of water; skim it well, and boil it pretty thick; then add the apples, the grated peel of one or two lemons, and two or three pieces of white ginger, if you have it. Boil till the apples look clear and yellow. This preserve will keep for years.

I believe, from experience and observation, that well-improved grass lands, with many kinds of grass, not overstocked in the dry season, and a liberal supply of hay, cut early and well cared for, will produce as good if not better cattle than too much stuffing with grain, which has a tendency to contract the inwards and prevent thrift when confined to grain alone.—Spanglar.

In speaking of the necessity of land-drainage, Mr. Mechi says: "The want of a hole in the great agricultural plant-pot during the last wet winter has caused many an agricultural purse to be only half filled. How strange it is that no farmer would have a plant-pot in his green-house or home without a hole in the bottom, while the same individual often does not consider one to be necessary in the big plant-pot outside."

Farming is a business similar, in its broad features, to all other trades and manufactures, and should be managed on the same principles. It is unpleasant, therefore, to observe that, while manufacturing and commercial interests have attained a distinguished position in this country, agriculture has not met with that consideration which its importance demands. Whatever the material prosperity of the country may be, it must be based on that which supplies the resources of natural life and vigor to the nation.

A very simple process is employed for freeing woodland newly brought into cultivation from the stumps of trees. A hole about two inches in diameter and eighteen inches in depth is bored in the stump about autumn, filled with a concentrated solution of saltpeter and closed with a plug. In the following spring a pint or so of petroleum is poured into the same hole and set on fire. During the course of the winter the saltpeter solution has penetrated every portion of the stump, so that not only this, but also the roots, are thoroughly burnt out. The ashes are left, and form a valuable manure.

No other crop gives as large an amount of easily-digestible food for cows, young stock, sheep or hogs, as the sugar beet, while the manure from feeding the beet is of much greater value than when animals are fed upon almost any other kind of root. France grows one-half more wheat upon an acre, fattens a much greater number of cattle than the same territory in America, from the fact that that country raises enormous quantities of sugar beets for making sugar, and has the rich manure from the refuse which is fed to the stock. To have the full value of the raising of sugar beets we should have the sugar manufactory as well, but until that comes no more profitable crop can be raised and fed out upon the farm than beets. The ground for beets, like that for any other crop, should be mellow, tilled deeply, and rich. The seed should be sowed as early as possible, in rows from two and a half to three feet apart—so as to allow the use of the cultivator between—and the seed should be sown at the rate of three to four pounds to the acre, and the plants thinned out, and, if need be, transplanted, so as to stand from twelve to fifteen inches apart; this will give large roots, and a crop of twenty-five to thirty-five tons to the acre.—Rural New Yorker.

The bandage system, which we were the first to suggest some twenty-five years ago, and have often referred to since, is the only effectual protection we have yet seen against the operations of the worm in fruit trees. We repeat again that in not a single instance have we ever had a worm in our dwarf pear trees where this was properly attended to. It is simply to bandage the bottom of the tree with any kind of muslin or cloth, and tie it, letting the bandage be about six inches above ground and two inches below. It should be applied as soon as the ground is in a fit condition to go upon. These bandages should be removed at the end of October, but it will do no harm to let them alone, only that they remain in good condition for another season. As long as this is continued we defy the worm. The beetle lays its eggs an inch or two above the ground early in the spring, that is, as soon as the warm days in March will admit of its coming forth from its winter quarters; the eggs are soon hatched by the sun, being laid on the sun-side of the trunk, and the young grub finds its way down to the soft bark beneath the soil, where it gradually works its way in. The bandage prevents both the laying of the eggs and the descent of the grub. Let doubters try it. One man will bandage 200 trees in a day. It may also protect the peach tree in the same way. —Germantown Telegraph.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

Yeast.—Five potatoes, one cup of white sugar, four table-spoonfuls of flour, with a little salt and yeast to raise it.

Layer Cake.—Three cups of sugar, one cup butter, six eggs, four cups flour, one cup milk, four teaspoonfuls of yeast powder.

Pickles.—Pickles should be touched only with a dry spoon or ladle. A few drops of water, or the introduction of a wet spoon, will sometimes spoil the entire contents of a pickle jar.

Soot and Salt.—Salt will remove soot from the carpets. Brush the soot off as much as is possible without rubbing it into the threads of the carpet, then scatter salt, and sweep with a stiff broom.

Cleaning Silk.—White or light silk may be cleaned by rubbing it on both sides with Indian meal, and carefully dusting it with a bit of silk or a fine handkerchief. The same process may be used on kid gloves.

Indian Steam Loaf.—Two cups Indian meal and one cup wheat flour, two cups of sweet milk and one cup of sour milk, half cup of molasses and one teaspoonful of soda; to be steamed three hours, and is good hot or cold.

Beef Loaf.—One and one-half pounds of beefsteak chopped very fine and free from gristle; two cups of rolled crackers (fine); one cup of cold water; one-half cup of butter; salt and pepper to suit the taste; bake till done.

A Starch to Preserve Colors.—For starching muslins, ginghams and calicoes dissolve and add to every pint of starch a piece of alum the size of a shellbark. By so doing, the colors will keep bright for a long time, which is very desirable when dresses must be often washed, and the cost is but a trifle.

Frosting.—Take the whites of four eggs, and two table-spoonfuls of fine white sugar, and beat to a stiff froth, and spread it on the pies as soon as baked, then set them in the oven just long enough to get a nice brown.

Raisin Pie.—One cup of raisins chopped fine, one cup of sugar, two eggs, one cup of vinegar, one cup of sirup, one cup of water, one-half cup of flour, one teaspoonful of cloves, the same of cinnamon and soda, butter size of an egg; two crusts.

Economical Fruit Cake.—Two cups sugar, one of butter, three of flour, one of milk, two of chopped raisins, one of currants, one of citron, two eggs, one teaspoonful of soda, two of cream of tartar, two teaspoonfuls each of cloves, cinnamon, nutmeg, one teaspoonful of mace, and two teaspoonfuls of brandy.

Our Kitchens.—You are fortunate if your kitchens have a sunny outlook. A south window catches all the precious winter sunshine, and is not as uncomfortable on account of heat in the summer as an east or west window. Sunshine goes a great way toward furnishing a room, as well as driving care, fatigue and disease away from those who live and work in it. Of course, you may not all have model kitchens, though you may so much desire them; and just here comes to mind this quaint old rhyme, which applies to housekeepers, as much as to any other class:

For every evil under the sun
There is a remedy, or there is none.
If there be one, try and find it;
If there be none, never mind it.

The Afghan Capital.

Cabul, the present capital of Afghanistan, suffered a temporary eclipse in the middle of the last century through the rise of its southern rival, Kandahar. The latter, founded, in 1754, by Shaw Ahmed, the greatest of Afghan sovereigns, rapidly grew into one of the largest and most flourishing cities of the kingdom; but, on its founder's death, in 1772, his effeminate son, Timour, transferred the seat of government to Cabul, where it has remained ever since. It must be owned that this dignity is fully merited. Standing upon a river of the same name, in the midst of a wide plain bordered by low hills and dotted with countless villages, the Afghan metropolis has a striking picturesqueness of aspect, heightened by the innumerable gardens which are the prominent feature of every Asiatic city from Tashkend to Damascus. The houses are of wood, but much neater and more commodious than is usual in Eastern towns. The great bazar and several of the public buildings are of essentially modern construction, thanks to the partial demolition of the place by the English in October, 1842; but it possesses one splendid monument of antiquity in the tomb of the Emperor Baber, the founder of the Mogul dynasty of India. Its climate is surprisingly healthy on the whole, although the great difference of temperature between day and night exposes foreigners to the risk of fever and ophthalmia. From a military point of view, again, its position, which may be compared with that of Sophia in Western Turkey, is admirable for all purposes of defense. Placed at the intersection of the four great roads leading to Koondooz, Herat, Peshawur and Kandahar, it is protected on the north by the snows of the Hindoo Koosh, and on the southeast by the westernmost spur of the Suleimann range, while the most practicable approach from the southwest is commanded by the impregnable fortress of Ghizni, the Afghan Gibraltar, whose capture in 1841 was only accomplished by treachery. In a word, Cabul needs nothing but a more complete system of fortification to make it one of the strongest places in Central Asia.

Shakspeare's Intellect.

A Scotchman was asserting that some of the most celebrated poets and brightest intellects the world ever produced were descendants of his race, and quoted Scott, Burns, and others as evidence. An Englishman who was present retorts: "I suppose you will claim next that even Shakspeare was a Scotchman." "Weel," he replied, "I'm nae so sure o' that; but ane thing I do ken—he had intellect eneuch to be a Scotchman."

SABBATH READING.

The Middle Classes.

SERMON BY PROF. SWING, OF CHICAGO.

Give me neither poverty nor riches * * * lest I be full and deny Thee, and say, Who is the Lord? or lest I be poor and steal, and thus profane the name of my God.—Prov. xxx., 8-9.

What is called a "middle class" has long existed in the world; has been so large in numbers and so great in influence, and for the most part so happy, that there must be a certain philosophy of that condition. Such a constant and immense form of human life cannot be the result of chance, but must be rather a part of the method of Him who placed man upon this planet. It will give dignity to this class, and will help you to feel that it possesses a special significance of intrinsic worth if you will mark how omnipresent it has been in earth's history. In the days of the magnificent Solomon this prayer of Agur rises up and tells us that just below the immense riches of the Hebrew Kings there moved a multitude which were neither up to the level of monarchs nor down at the level of beggars; a multitude not so lofty as to need no God, and not so low as to disgrace one. So around all the rich ones of any nation may be seen the homes of the moderate property-holder. This prayer of Agur discloses the fact that the middle class had shown its virtues long enough to mankind to create the petition that the Lord would place the suppliant in that estate. To fall below it would be to fall into sore temptation; to seek to rise above might lead to an undue pride of life. The prayer reveals the existence of a second estate as far back as history runs.

Evidently, however, the moderate men of the past were in smaller numbers than in modern times, for the centralization of power led to a centralization of money by means of despotic taxation, and confiscation, and conquest, and hence the men of moderate property were few and the beggars and slaves many. In our times the suppression of tyrants and the progress of the ideas of industry and equality have enlarged the middle class, and have made it surpass in number all the beggars below it and all the wealthy above it. The constant presence of this class, its quality in all times, and at least its immense numbers, make it worthy of our study. If an old saint prayed that God would place him in this middle class and keep him there, we who now live may well look into the merit of such a religious petition.

The moderate-property man should a priori be the most fortunate, because all through nature the law of the golden medium runs. Nature dislikes excesses. It is fond of averages. A shrub below the forest gets too little light; a tree above the forest is blown down. The trees, therefore, stand shoulder to shoulder in the great woods. A soil excessively poor grows nothing, and a soil excessively rich will grow only mushrooms, that have no leaf, nor flower, nor fragrance. The rose and the wheat must wait for the thin soil to be made rich or for the luxuriant soil to be depleted by sand or clay. Thus the fields seem to send up the prayer for neither poverty nor riches. But there is safer ground than such analogy. It is not probable that the Creator of the world would make that the worst condition which must absorb the millions, and if we find two other conditions, that of poverty and that of enormous wealth, which are being constantly emptied into the middle class of liberty, and industry, and education, it may be inferred that God has not made most pitiable that estate in which the most millions are to be grouped.

Let us pass from what should be anticipated to what may be actually observed. Reason may err as to what should be, but it cannot err so easily as to what is and has been; and, thus arguing, the truth would appear that the middle class has been and is the happiest class. The debate, of course, does not lie between the middle class and the lowest, but wholly between the middle and the highest. All those competent to bear testimony have, upon reflection, declared that the most enjoyment has not, as a fact, followed those who have possessed the most gold. Why the human heart should not be happy according to the property it possesses I cannot argue here, for no one can enter the soul of a Crœsus, ancient or modern, and learn why he should not be happier than the man of modest home by his side; but, as a simple fact, the men who have borne witness have, for some reason, arranged themselves upon the other side. Those who have composed our songs; those who have composed our philosophies; those have written our romances and our dramas, have loved to locate the best hours of man in a home of the plainer style. These artists of the heart have put more vines and flowers on the outside than they have heaped up gold-plate or jewels within.

It may be observed, too, that no sooner have the extremely rich built their splendid palaces than they at once project some country place a hundred times as simple, to which they can fly when they long for a certain fullness of joy and peace. Let us not find fault with them, for you and I would accept of a city palace any moment were the temptation placed well before us. Indeed, though there are three classes, in fact, the beggar, the middle class, and the moneyed prince, there is only one class in essence, for all would accept of millions instead of hundreds, were the choice set before them. But all are weak, all are human, and what I seek this morning is a philosophy of the middle class, which is better than we are—a philosophy which is struggling like a Christ to lift us up to its height. To return; the deep thinkers and the extremely rich have borne witness to the charm of moderate means, and have thus confessed that there was a condition as good as their own, even though they had not the moral power to fling away enough gold to make them descend into it.

* * * * * * * *

It has always come to pass that the families of moderate property have been in the beginning and the end of each nation the nation's chief hope. Nations have died by raising one-half of their number up to aristocracy, and by sinking the other half to beggary. The nations have all died between these two millstones—the vanity of the highest and the broken hearts of the lowest.

The tendency is for the children of the extremely rich to enter upon a career of either indolence or more positive sin. They are set aside from the struggle of existence, and by the law of nature begin to decline. Beholding this decay of the highest, civilization and religion make their new requisition for men and women upon the class beneath, and give us the phenomenon of a higher class always fading away, and of civilization appealing to the common people for salvation. Society is like the rose-tree or the vine. In the gay summer time some ambitious branches overtop the rest; some leaves and roses rise high above the garden wall, but winter comes, and the loftiest foliage and twigs die first. They cover the ground with their ruin, but the central vine, the lower order, clings modestly to the wall, and in the spring time every inch of it bursts forth in new life. Not otherwise that living, mysterious plant—society. The children of the rich fall. Their leaves, once so gaudy, fall upon the earth and are hidden in its dust, and the nation, when it wishes a new spring time of all its hopes and powers, looks further down the garden wall to where the plant is still full of all the rich juices from which roses and grapes are made.

It thus appears that the prayer of Agur involves one of the laws of individual and national life. Not only is the plain, humble condition the happiest, and on this account worthy of being woven into a most sacred prayer, but it stands as a fundamental law of human triumph, and hence may be inserted in our spiritual petitions with a twofold earnestness, the one from the happiness of self, the other from the welfare of mankind. It may be well a matter of wonder that a heart hidden away in a nation so old and so small as the Hebrew kingdom should have found a prayer so wonderful in wisdom. But he had seen the evil he lamented and the good he sought. He had seen David and Solomon pass from honor to dishonor, from glory to shame; and had seen the rags also of the beggar, and, between the two, the happy home, and near by the tears of the beggar on one hand, and on the other near by a ruined throne, he knelt down and poured forth this wise request, to give him a home but shield him from the palace and the rags.

If our meditation this morning be true, then a duty springs up to our sight, namely, to seek to be numbered in that middle throng so potent in public and private good. If any of you are beggars by reason of vice or indolence, throw away at once those monsters, and attempt to climb to that condition where hope dwells and where toil is transformed by expectation into a pleasure.

If any of you possess riches which have checked life's industry and which are creating for you a train of sinful or foolish wants, and which, after you, will palsy the industry of your children, then distribute the great fortune before you die, while you can direct the million, and hasten down and tenderly let your children down to that zone on the mountain side where blows the perfumed breath of perpetual spring. The vale is too sickly and the summit too cold.

Are you already in the "middle class?" and, bless God, perhaps we are all there; then mark well the deep meaning of that lot, and make no effort to climb a height on which all have become dizzy and from which all have at last fallen. Remember the intellectual power, the mental harvest of arts and sciences which has always waved upon that soil; and remember the supreme happiness which the rich and the lofty have found at last to bless the plain man's home. Are you a man of industry, of integrity; are you compelled to take up each day the honorable warfare of earth; are you compelled to labor for the supply of the best wants and to support beings the most dear? then you the nation loves, you civilization loves, you religion loves, and, throwing their arms around you, they all say: "We depend upon you. We look to those who have neither poverty nor riches."

Horse Biscuits.

Horse biscuits are the result of careful experimenting by the Prussian military authorities for some condensed form in which to put provender for army horses in war time. These, after a very severe trial, are admitted to be a great success. The biscuit, or as it has also been called, the "oat-comfit," consists of 30 parts of oat flour, 30 parts of "dextrinated" pea meal, 30 parts of rye flour, and 10 parts linseed meal; or, 40 parts of oat flour, 40 parts of dextrinated pea meal, and 20 parts of linseed meal; or, 20 parts of pea meal, 20 parts of wheat flour, 20 parts of corn, 20 parts of rye flour, 10 parts of grated bread, and 10 parts of linseed meal; or, finally, other analogous mixtures. The Russians also tried these horse biscuits during the recent war. The horses were fed on these biscuits during twenty-six days, and every day notes were made of the state, plumpness and weight of the horses, and their strength tested with the dynamometer. The superiority of the comfits over oats (a third of which are undigested and lost in the dung-heap) was so marked that they were adopted, not only in imitation of Prussia, as an exceptional recourse for times of war, but also as a steady food in time of peace. A ration is about 3¼ pounds; it comprises from twenty-five to thirty biscuits of from four to five inches in diameter by four-tenths of an inch in thickness. These biscuits, strung on wire, can be suspended to the saddle without danger of breakage, and a horse can thus easily carry nourishment to last him four or five days. They are given either dry or wet (after having been broken up), at the rate of seven in the morning, twelve at noon and seven in the evening.

One-third of the liquid portion of the sewage of Paris is conveyed to Gennevilliers, a kind of peninsula made by the windings of the Seine below Asnieres. A BLACK HILLS TRAGEDY.

A Fatal Pistol Duel Between a Man and Woman—Elizabeth Lovell Killed by One Whom She Sought to Assassinate.

(From the Black Hills Enterprise.)

A tragic denouement to a petty quarrel was an event of Sunday. In our issue of that day, it will be remembered, we chronicled the arrest and imprisonment of Mrs. Lovell, who, as a desperado and a hard case generally, has figured conspicuously in the Police Court and elsewhere during the year. Her house stands at the north side of the road running down the gulch, and upon the hillside, immediately in rear thereof, upon disputed ground, the residence of S. J. Rogers, access to which is had through the lot of Mrs. Lovell. Ill-feeling has existed between the old Amazon and Mr. Rogers for a long time, and on Saturday she was arrested for uttering threats, but was subsequently released upon bail. The tragedy that followed was witnessed by Deputy Sheriff Bennett, whose literal report thereof is as follows:

I was sitting in the front room of Mr. Rogers' cabin, where I board, at half-past 1, when Rogers returned from up town and threw off his coat. At this moment I saw Mrs. Lovell leave her house and start up the hill. I said to Rogers, "Here comes the old woman." She came up the path about one-third of the way, where she met the old man who lives at her house, when she stopped, spoke to him, and turned him back toward us, both advancing about half way up, at which point the old man turned and came diagonally toward the house, the old woman approaching by the direct trail. When she got about two-thirds of the way she stopped and took a six-shooter from beneath her apron and examined it. I said to Johnnie, "I guess she is going to fix the fence." She was on the porch at this time. Instead of stopping where the fence should stand she came on toward the house. As she did so I went into the front room, Johnnie said: "I guess she is coming right into the house; she's got a cocked revolver in her hand." He came into the room, apparently to avoid her, and said: "Am I to stand and be killed in my own house by this woman?" and passed into the back room, where he secured a revolver, and returned, conversing with me all the while about the precautions he had taken to prevent trouble with her. He stepped to the front door and sat down on the inside, where he continued the conversation with me and his wife. The old woman had quietly moved up to the front door, and, stepping partially inside, leaned against the jamb, and eyed me as if to satisfy herself that I was unarmed, when, without a word of warning, she quickly thrust the pistol against Rogers' left breast, fired, and jumped off the porch. Rogers sprung to his feet and struck at her with his pistol but missed her, when he passed out to the porch a step or two, firing his revolver. Five shots were fired at the woman as she ran down the hill, calling to the old man to shoot, or not to shoot, can't say which.

The third shot, I think, took effect, and the woman fell. Rogers staggered into the room, dropped his pistol and, exclaiming, "She's done for me," lay down on the lounge. I ran up town after the doctor, passing Mrs. Lovell on the trail. When I returned she was not to be seen.

Mrs. Lovell was carried to her house, where she lingered in an unconscious condition for an hour, when death ensued. The bullet entered the head from the rear, traversed the brain, and lodged beneath the right eye. An inquest subsequently held completely exonerates Mr. Rogers; the latter was seriously, but not fatally, injured, the ball entering at the left side below the heart, taking a downward course and traversing the body, lodging on the right side. He is 28 years of age, a native of Emingport, Can., and was for several years employed as bookkeeper in Plattsburg, N. Y., where, seven years ago, he married. He has resided in the Hills for the past eighteen months.

Took It All In.

A Philadelphia boy, aged 12, whose uncle is a member of the Legislature, was permitted to take a trip to Harrisburg last spring in order to visit the State House. He came home chuck full of importance, and when his little brother ran to meet him at the gate William coldly waved him back and said:

"I refer you to the Committee on Fisheries, bub, and how's my dog?"

His mother was glad to see him, and, when she asked if he had enjoyed himself, he replied:

"Oh, I suppose so, though I now move to strike out all after the enacting clause."

"What sort of talk is that, Willie, dear?" she asked in great surprise.

"Never mind the talk, mother, but move the previous question and bring on the pan-cakes."

The hired girl came in with the dinner and wanted to know how he liked Harrisburg. He looked at her with great dignity and replied:

"I now move to lay your petition on the table, Hannah, for future consideration."

She got mad about it, and William slyly informed his mother that it was his opinion that Hannah's title should be made to conform to the body of the bill. He went out to see the boys after dinner, and a house-painter asked him where No. 657 was?

"We'll have a call of the House and see," replied the boy as he looked around.

"Whose house?" asked the painter.

"I don't want no sass!" said the painter, who thought that the boy was making fun of his red nose.

"Of course not. Let's pass the bill to a third reading, or else go into committee of the whole and debate it."

"I think you need dressing down!" growled the painter, and he banged William into a snow-bank and pushed a heap of snow down behind his collar.

"Has the minority no rights?" yelled the boy as he kicked the painter upon the shins.

He would have been walloped had not his mother appeared. The painter moved away when he saw her, but called out:

"I'll see you again, boy!"

"I refer the whole bill to father, with instructions to report a bill to walk you into the Police Court," replied the Representative, and he went in to tell his mother the difference between suspending the rules and rushing a bill, or referring it to the Committee on Cornfields till some one came around with the cigars.

Sighing—sighing to me,
"Why building so late?

WILD MAN OF THE WOODS.

A Fearful Prodigy Captured in the Wilds of Tennessee and Brought to Louisville for Exhibition.

His Body Covered With Fish Scales.

[Louisville Courier Journal.]

The wild man brought to the city yesterday by Dr. O. G. Broyler, of Sparta, Tenn., is truly a mysterious and wonderful creature. He will be exhibited throughout the country by manager Whallen, of the Metropolitan, who is a third owner in this remarkable being, who promises to successfully baffle all explanation of his unnatural appearance. Before entering into the details of his capture, which form quite a thrilling and interesting episode, a description of the curiosity, which promises to excite more attention than Barnum's "What is it?" will be given. At a distance the general outline of his figure would indicate that he is only an ordinary man. Close inspection shows that his whole body is covered with a layer of scales, which drop off at regular periods, in the spring and fall, like the skin of a rattle snake. He has a heavy growth of hair on his head and a dark, reddish beard about six inches long. His eyes present a frightful appearance being at least twice the size of the average sized eye. Some of his toes are formed together, which give his feet a strange appearance, and his height when standing perfectly erect, is about six feet five inches. A nervous twitching of his muscles shows a desire to escape, and he is constantly looking in the direction of the door through which he entered. His entire body must be wet at intervals, and should this be neglected, he begins immediately to manifest great uneasiness, his flesh becomes feverish, and his sufferings can not be alleviated until the water is applied. At times he is dangerous, and yesterday morning, when Mr. Whallen attempted to place him in a wagon, in which he intended to bring him to the theater, it occupied some time. The strange creature acted in the most mysterious manner, refusing obstinately for some time to get into the wagon. He has quite a sharp appetite, having eaten a meal yesterday morning that would have fully satisfied at least four men. With the exception of fish, his meals are all prepared in the ordinary way, but the fish is eaten entirely raw. Dr. Broyler says that when alone he will sometimes mutter an unintelligible jargon, which it would be impossible for any one to understand, but that in the presence of visitors he remains perfectly silent. Yesterday afternoon from 1 to 4 a private exhibition was given, and a number of physicians were present, among them Drs. Brady and Cary Blackburn, who said that he was a great curiosity. Dr. Blackburn said that his scaly condition could not be attributed to any skin disease, but undoubtedly he was born in that condition. He will be on exhibition in one of the private rooms of the Metropolitan theater this afternoon and to-morrow between the hours of 1 and 4 o'clock. Only physicians and those especiallay invited will be allowed admission. His exact age is not known, but for the past eighteen years he has been running wild in the Cumberland mountains in Tennessee, near the Caney Fork and Big Bone creek. He has been the constant terror of the community, although he was never known to attack any one until the day of his capture. Dr. O. G. Broyler, of Sparta, says since the surrender of the confederate army it has been his intention to capture the creature and exhibit him throughout the country. The doctor says the parents of the wild man are respectable citizens of North Carolina, named Croslin. That their son is unquestionably a mysterious freak of nature they did not deny, but they could not account for his scaly skin. At the tender age of five years, having always been possessed with a roving disposition, he left his home and immediately plunged into the mountainous region of Tenn. Here he lived as best he could, subsisting on the products of the country, such as roots and herbs and small animals that he could capture. When in the water he was in his element. He would dive down into the depths of the inland lakes, remaing under water for a considerable length of time, and finally emerge with both hands filled with small fish which he would devour at once in the raw state. Dr. Broyler says that until about eighteen months ago he had not attempted the capture, although he had been watching the creature's actions for the past twelve years. About the 15th of September he started into the mountains fully determined to succeed in the capture.

The "Wild Man of the Woods," as he was termed by the people of the vicinity, was unusually fleet of foot and possessed with a great deal of agility, bounding over the mountainous ravines in the most fearless manner. During the chase they kept the wild man constantly in sight, and their plan was to tire him out, in which they finally succeeded. He was pursued through the wild mountainous country, over lakes and precipices, until his pursuers almost despaired of success. Stratagem was finally resorted to. The lariat was thrown at him without success, and then a kind of a net trap was formed into which he was decoyed and capturtured. He ran fearlessly into the net and became entangled in the mashes. Captured, but not conquered, a struggle ensued, in which Dr. Broyler was seriously wounded. The wild man fought with his hands, after the fashion of a bear, and bruised and scratched the doctor in a frightful manner. At last they quieted their unwilling victim and brought him to Spatra. The doctor immediately telegraphed to Mr. Whallen, who purchased a third interest in the wonder, and had him brought to Louisville yesterday morning. The presence of this wild man in Louisville has excited considerable attention among the doctors, and also a large crowd of curious persons, who are anxious to see the wonderful creature. There will be only one public exhibition in this city, which takes place at the Metropolitan theater Saturday afternoon.

The Afghanistan question in England is assuming serious shape. It is already vexatious, and may become costly. Who shall bear the expense, if war comes, is a troublesome question. Whether India or the home Government shall pay for the war, if the war happens, is an important and quarrelsome subject. England is a prudent State. She counts the cost. She is not lacking in valor, but she is a good judge of a bargain. It is estimated that the last Afghan war cost $75,000,000. It is also estimated that the difficulty now pending, if it should reach war, would cost $20,000,000. This is not a large sum for England, but when, in this expenditure, a question in Government is involved, shillings become pounds. The war within may become greater than the war without. India, taxed to exasperation, and still with a constant annual deficit of perhaps $20,000,000 to annoy her people, may not like to have a war, and its costs, heaped upon her people. It will be claimed throughout Great Britain that the Empire that adopts the Imperial policy should equitably distribute the cost of it. It is within the recollection of some of our grandfathers that the English policy toward thirteen forlorn little Colonies was regarded as "crowding the limit," and an "infidel" from Virginia wrote a little Declaration, and some Boston disloyalists threw some tea into the sea, and a surveyor sent out by the College of William and Mary took command of a handful of soldiers, and, somehow, the helpless Colonies became a great State. We say this, not because the story is likely to be soon repeated in history, but it only "reminds us."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Plymouth "Democrat" contains the following novel proposition made by a Marshall county farmer, who proposes to compete with seven others for a years subscription for the 'Democrat:' "That each of the eight persons bring to this office six ears of corn, at the same time depositing 25 cents with the editor; each separate lot of corn to be shelled, without the loss of a grain, at this office between December 25th and January 1st; the lots of shelled corn to be weighed separately and the money paid in to be placed to the credit on subscription of the man whose corn weighs most. This can be done fairly, and will be likely to increase the production of the very best in the grain, for the heaviest shelled corn is certainly richest in all those qualities which make the cereal valuable, richest in oil gluten and starch, the two former being the essentials for fattening purposes. We should like to have responses from our farmer friends."

THE countenance is pale and lead-en-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a gnawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy, not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY

in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

The genuine DR. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper.

Insist upon having the genuine Dr. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

Indecent Trains and Short Dresses.

Ohio Farmer.

It would seem as if any one, however blinded by custom, might see the absurdity of a nation of intelligent women allowing themselves to be converted into town and country scavengers, without thanks or even the recompense of approval. There really seems no prescribed limit to the height which skirts may be lifted in walking, if only the wearer is hung round about with clogging folds, from which she can never free her hands without paying the penalty of wet and mudbedraggled trains. Holding on to her draperies as for dear life, she may raise them to her knees, and her style of clothing is tolerated with complacency. But let it be known and seen that the dress is hung so as to never come below the tops of the boots, and that the limbs are properly and decently covered—what fears are harbored for the morals of women.

Miss Abbott at the White House.

The Star gives the following description of last evening at the White House: It is well known that Mrs. Hayes is especially friendly to artists, and always extends to them an invitation to call on her while staying in Washington. In response to her kind invitation Miss Emma Abbott informally visited her on Sunday evening. On leaving her carriage at the white house Miss Abbott met Gen. Sherman and his daughter, and the General said: "Why, Miss Abbott, is that you? What a fortunate thing it is that I came this evening," and he gallantly escorted the lady to the red parlor. President and Mrs. Hayes, Gen. and Mrs. Hastings, and Chief Justice Waite were introduced, and later in the evening Atty. Gen. Devens and representative McKinley called, and a most delightful evening was enjoyed. As Mrs. Hayes had expressed a wish for Miss Abbott to sing some hymns, a pianist came in about 9 o'clock, and Miss Abbott sang the hymn, 'Nearer, My God, to Thee," especially prepared for her, with such pathos of power that it drew tears from her listeners. The president, anxious that his little daughter should hear Miss Abbott, had her waked up, and a nurse came down to the parlor with her while Miss Abbott was singing. It was a great surprise to Miss Abbott to meet Chief Justice Waite, who heard her sing nine years ago, in Toledo, after the eventful journey on which she sold her dress to get money to reach that city. Miss Abbott related the incidents of that journey, her hunger, cold, cheerlessness, her desperation and the temptation to commit suicide, so touchingly that it will not soon be forgotten.

A Temperance Man Who Has Money to Bet.

OBERLIN, O., Nov. 6, 1878.

In claiming to be a temperance, party is not the Republican party guilty of the most shameful hypocrisy?

Since its advent into power it has held unbroken sway in several of the States, and could, if it would, have passed good, efficient temperance laws in those States. To test the question, I hereby agree to pay $25 for the proof that any Republican Legislature in any State ever passed a law which was intended to stop the drunkard making business in that State; and for $25 I agree to produce proof that in several of the States Republican Legislatures have repealed laws which were intended to restrict tippling shops.

For several years the General Government in both its Legislative and Executive Departments was intrusted to the Republican party, and it could, if so disposed, have passed laws excluding tippling-shops from the District of Columbia and the Territories. And to further test the question, I agree to pay $50 for the proof that any Republican Congress ever passed a law which was intended to stop the traffic in alcoholic liquor for drink purposes in said District and Territories; and for $50 I agree to bring forward the proof that laws have been passed by Republicans in Congress favorable to the liquor traffic. If, therefore, the Republican party has never passed any law in State or nation which was intended to stop drunkard-making as far as possible within its jurisdiction but on the other hand has repealed laws which were intended to check drunkard-making, and has passed laws favoring the liquor traffic, it is guilty of the grossest kind of hypocrisy in claiming to be a temperance party. I live in Oberlin, Ohio, and have never voted any other than the Republican ticket, but I hate hypocrisy as I hate all other iniquity, and shall be pleased if the Republican party can relieve itself from this sin, in which case I will cheerfully pay the money offered.

The Teachers' Institute.

The DeKalb county Teachers' institute convened in Agricultural Hall, Waterloo, Monday, Nov. 11th. Superintendent Barns presided, and W. M. Urie and Miss Rose Moody were made Secretaries. Mr. C. R. Reed leads in the singing exercises and Miss Lona Jackman presides at the organ. The attendance is quite large, and the exercises during the daytime follows the course usually taken at such meetings. Monday evening President Helwig, of Wittenberg College, Springfield, O., delivered his lecture upon "Language." Tuesday evening Prof. Smart, State Superintendent, entertained the Institute with his lecture on "What I saw in Europe." Wednesday evening Geo. P. Brown, of Indianapolis, addressed the Institute. To-night Miss Vineyard gives her entertainment in Elocution. To this entertainment an admittance fee of 25 cents will be charged, to be applied towards defraying expenses of the Institute. The entertainment will be a treat to all, and deserves a large patronage. To-morrow evening, should the Institute not adjourn at the close of the afternoon session, a social meeting will be held. Below we give a roster of the teachers in attendance:

Edison and His Factory.

A writer in the November Scribner declares of Edison that there is nowhere such another ingenious mind, but there is also nowhere such a worker. When in search of a special object he allows himself absolutely no rest. At Newark he mounted to the loft of his factory with five men on the occasion of the apparent failure of the printing machine he had taken a contract to furnish, and declared he would never come down till it worked. It took sixty hours of continuous labor, but it worked and then he slept for thirty. The routine of his day is a routine of grand processes and ennobling ideas. Nowhere else, probably, would such a day be possible. There are not fortunes, if there were capacity, to carry on a business of pure scientific research on such a scale. His whole great establishment is occupied, not in manufacturing, nor primarily in objects for profitable returns,—though these follow,—but in new reflections, new combinations, in wrestling from nature inch by inch the domain she would have kept hidden. He comes in the morning and reads his letters. He overlooks his men and the experiments of his assistants. The element of hazard enters into these somewhat. There are a great number in progress—the action of various chemicals upon various substances or upon each other, or the phenomena of substances subjected to the various forces at command. Strips of ivory, for instance, in a certain oil six weeks become transparent. A globule of mercury in water, then with a little potassium added, takes various shapes for the opposite poles of the battery, retires coquettishly or is attracted, forms in whirlpools, changes colors or becomes immobile. There is no use at once for these results, but they are recorded in numerous notebooks. When the proper time comes they are borne in mind; some one of them may form the connecting link in the chain of an invaluable discovery. Then, perhaps, he tests for the thousandth time his carbon telephone for new perfections, and then goes on carrying forward a step each for the work in progress, or becomes wholly engrossed, according to his mood, in one.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case. Try it. Sold by W. McIntyre & Son.

THE SUN FOR 1879.

THE SUN will be printed every day during the year to come. Its purpose and method will be the same as in the past: To present all the news in a readable shape, and to tell the truth though the heavens fall.

THE SUN has been, is, and will continue to be independent of everybody and everything save the truth and its own convictions of duty. That is the only policy which an honest newspaper need have. That is the policy which has won for this newspaper the confidence and friendship of a wider constituency than was ever enjoyed by any other American Journal.

THE SUN is the newspaper for the people. It is not for the rich man against the poor man, but it seeks to do equal justice to all interests in the community. It is not the organ of any person, class, sect or party. There need be no mystery about its loves and hates. It is for the honest man against the rogue every time It is for the honest democrat as against the dishonest republican, and for the honest republican as against the dishonest democrat. It does not take its cue from the utterance of any politician or political organization. It gives its support unreservedly when men or measures are in agreement with the Constitution and with the principles upon which this Republic was founded for the people. Whenever the Constitution and constitutional principles are violated—as in the outrageous conspiracy of 1876, by which a man not elected was placed in the President's office, where he still remains—it speaks out for right. That is THE SUN's idea of independence. In this respect there will be no change in its programme for 1879.

THE SUN has fairly earned the hearty hatred of rascals, frauds and humbugs of all sorts and sizes. It hopes to deserve that hatred not less in the year 1879, than in 1878, 1877 or any other year gone by. THE SUN will continue to shine on the wicked with unmitigated brightness.

While lessons of the past should be constantly kept before the people, THE SUN does not propose to make itself in 1879 a magazine of ancient history. It is printed for the men and women of to-day, whose concern is chiefly of to-day. It has both the disposition and the ability to afford its readers the promptest, fullest and most accurate intelligence of whatever in the wide world is worth attention. To this end the resources belonging to well-established prosperity will be liberally employed.

The present disjointed condition of parties in this country, and the uncertainty of the future, lend an extraordinary significance to the events of the coming year. The discussions of press, the debates and acts of Congress, and the movements of the leaders in every section of the Republic will have a direct bearing on the Presidential election of 1880—an event which must be regarded with the most anxious interest by every patriotic American whatever his political ideas or allegiance. To these elements may be added the probability that the democrats will control both houses of Congress, the increasing feebleness of the fraudulent administration, and the spread and strengthening everywhere of a healthy abhorance of fraud in any form. To present with accuracy and clearness the exact situation in each of its varying phases and to expound according to its well known methods, the principles that should guide us through the labyrinth, will be an impotant part of THE SUN's work for 1879.

We have the means of making THE SUN as a political, a literary and a general news paper, more interesting and more useful than ever before; and we mean to apply them freely.

Our rates of subscription remain unchanged. For the DAILY SUN, a four page sheet of twenty eight columns, the price by mail post paid, is 55c a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight page sheet of fifty-six columns, is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year post paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages fifty-six columns, is $1.00 a year, postage paid For clubs of ten sending $10.00 we will send an extra copy free. Address,

A THANKSGIVING PARTY.

Banks and his wife consulted
One bright November day,
Planning a splendid dinner
In a pleasant, airy way.
"We'll have a grand Thanksgiving,"
Said Banks; "and Polly, dear,
You get the guests together,
And I'll provide the cheer."

Then Banks, with heart o'erflowing,
Said, "Now's the time, my dear,
To ask one's wife's relations,
So let them all be here.
Yes, ask them all, my darling;
Your husband's not the man
To stop half-way in making
A pleasant family plan."

So Polly asked her people—
And they were not a few—
Papa, mamma and brothers,
And all her sisters too.
These brought their little children
A laughing, romping crowd—
And, in the after-dinner speech,
Banks really felt quite "proud."

Yet through it all a shadow
Into his bosom stole;
He knew what bills were coming in;
They paralyzed his soul!
He knew that Mother Pippling
Was whispering good advice
In Polly's ear, and, somehow,
That wasn't very nice.

He knew the romping children
Had done him damage dire
(For Banks had dainty furniture
As any could desire);
But still the guests were merry;
The dinner "went off well,"
In spite of many vexing things
Which one don't care to tell.

And when, at last, 'twas over,
And every guest gone home,
The tumbled house quite still again,
And resting-time was come,
Sweet Mrs. Banks said, cheerily,
"My dear, how kind of them
To come to us! Though mother"—
(Banks softly coughed "Ahem!")

"Yes, mother noticed—bless her!—
One slight omission, dear;
She said Thanksgiving dinners
Without one 'thank' were queer.
I know you don't say grace, dear;
But don't it seem to you
That to give thanks at such a time
Is what one ought to do?"

He fell into a reverie:
"You're right!" he sighed at last;
"Thank Heaven the thing is over;
They're gone, and all is past!"
And so, in simple language,
By that good husband Banks
The grand Thanksgiving dinner
Was crowned by hearty thanks.

AUNT HARR'ET'S SAMP PUDDING.

A Good Thanksgiving Story.

"I declar' for't," sighed Aunt Harriet—sinking wearily into the splint-bottomed rocking-chair, setting her felt-slippered feet upon the stove-hearth and clasping her hands in front of her knees—"I declar' for't, if I don't think this makin' Thanksgivin' day a matter of cookin' and eatin' is the most foolish of all our New England notions. Every year since I can remember the programme has been the same. The whole month of November spent in preparin' for this 'grand gastrenemical exhibition,' as Parson Pendl'ton used to call it. I have never in my life been away from this house on a Thankagivin' day; and ev'ry year we've been overrun with comp'ny. Father wouldn't think 'twas Thanksgivin', I s'pose, if the house wasn't full. For my part, I should like a change; either to go som'ers Thanksgivin' day, and be waited on, or stay at home by myself."

"Oh, Harr'et, I wouldn't talk so," remonstrated grandmother, who was taking off her false front and putting on her white muslin night-cap. "You know the work of preparin' for dear ones is pleasant work. Our social family gatherin's make us all better and happier. Your father would feel dreadfully cut up to hear you run on in this complainin' way about makin' Thanksgivin'. Of course you are tired to-night, but don't think about that; count over your mercies, and think how much you have to be thankful for."

"Hum," went on the wearied spinster, in her peculiar nasal tone, "I could make thanksgivin' in my heart so that it would sing for joy without makin' such an ado about my stomach."

Reaching down and opening the oven door, a suggestive and delicious odor, as of baking fowls and browning pastry, burst forth, filling the roomy kitchen. She peered inside the oven for a moment, turned around one of the pans, using a corner of her long, straight, blue-print apron for a holder, and then, shutting in the culinary wonders which were to grace to-morrow's dinner, she continued:

"I have spent three weeks in house cleaning, only to get everything in apple-pie order just in time to be turned topsy-turvy. Every room is full to-night, and I must stretch my tired frame on a lounge. It never makes any difference where Harriet sleeps; she can can be tucked anywhere. Last night I was up until 11 o'clock to get the pound-cake baked. Night before last it was the mince and pumpkin pies. To-night it will be 11 before these chicken pies are browned fit to be seen, and flat midnight before I can get to bed. I am tired and sick of the great national stuffing day, and, for my own part, shan't want a mouthful of the nice food that the pantry shelves are groaning under. I would far rather have a bowl of samp and milk and a day of leisure along with it."

The bedroom door just behind the speaker was unlatched, and John and his wife, who had late in the evening driven in from the west part of the town, so as to be at home to breakfast on Thanksgiving morning, and who had been put into Harriet's room, heard every word of this tirade.

"We'll have them all next year if we get the house fixed over," whispered Jane, under the blue-and-white coverlid, and John nodded assent, whispering in his turn: "It's hard on Harriet, to be sure."

The project was broached next day, was agreed to by all hands, and throughout the year it was talked of as a settled thing that their next Thanksgiving reunion should be held at John's.

"Father and mother are to come over on Monday," said John's wife, as the festal season drew near, "and on Wednesday, when the preparations are nearly or quite complete, we will send the team for Harriet."

"I'll not make that amount of trouble for anybody," replied the maiden sister, who was, in fact, the main-stay at the homestead. "If I conclude to join in your dinner, I will, on Thursday mornin', walk over through the woods in time to go to meetin' with you."

Grandpa Buxton's farm consisted of a long strip lying between two rivers, with a wooded hill about midway of its length. Grandpa lived in an old farm-house in the eastern meadow; and John had fitted up an elegant new residence on the bank of the west river. So the old couple were not to leave the ancestral acres, although it was four miles from one house to the other, around the point of the hill, and two miles by the foot and bridle path across the woods.

On the sunny, smoky Monday morning preceding Thanksgiving grandpa and grandma started with old Dobbin and the chaise to jog around the mountain road to John's. And on that same Monday morning in the far West a pretty, plump little woman, with her husband and five children, started in an ox-cart to go the fifteen or twenty miles to the nearest railway station where six of them were to take the cars for the East to spend Thanksgiving, while the father retraced his wearisome way to the lonely log cabin on the forest prairie.

It was a rather dowdy and old-fashioned company, as might have been expected, so far as clothes were concerned, but attractive in their rosy, healthy, buoyant good-nature. They were all as happy as happy could be—from 12-year-old Johnny to baby Hat—for were they not journeying to the wonderful homestead where mamma lived when she was a little girl? and where the scenes of all mamma's stories were laid—"mamma's splendid stories, which were better than any fairy stories, or any stories printed in books or papers."

On, on they whirled, and it was Wednesday afternoon; yet these children, who had never in their lives been five miles from their own clearing, were not cross, or sour, or out of patience, although they were dreadfully tired, and oh, so hungry! for the sizeable lunch basket, well filled when they started from home, had quite given out, and the reinforcements bought in haste at wayside restaurants not very filling.

"Only fifty miles from grandpa's now," and the plump little woman marshaled her brood about her as they made the last change of cars. "Only two hours of precious time." But, alas for human calculations, there was a connection to be made at an out-of-the way junction on the line. The eastern train was late. Trains always are late the night before Thanksgiving, there are so many happy souls going home. "These trains are mail trains, they must meet, and our train must wait."

"'Twill make a pretty late supper time," said Charlie.

"I should think it was supper time now," cried Mary, poking around in the bottom of the empty hamper.

"I suppose there is some place near by where I can get a lunch for the children," said the pleasant mamma to affable Conductor Carroll, who came through the car just then.

"I'm sorry to tell you, madam, that the restaurant has been discontinued, and the hotel burned down a week ago or so. You can see the ruins just over the brook there."

A glance at the ashes and embers of what was once a hotel was not very satisfying to five hungry juveniles, and mamma, for the first time since she bade her husband good-by, with almost a cloud on her brow, said:

"We will play we have got to grandpa's, and see how nearly our real getting there will be like our play. I will begin—now—'What would I like for supper, Sister Harr'et? Oh, a cup of tea for me, and plenty of milk and bread for the children.' 'Wall, I declar' for't, Sister Susan, I guess these children won't eat bread and milk at grandpa's, Thankgivin', after travelin' three mortal days and nights.'"

And the plump, little mamma changed her voice in the last clause in a droll, nasal imitation of her sister, which made the children laugh.

"What would you like, my dears?"

"I can smell all sorts of goodies," said Mary, sniffing until her little pert nose grew red, "and I should like pumpkin pie, if it's agreeable."

"Chicken for me," put in Johnny, promptly.

"Mince pie," said quiet Jane.

"Pudding, cake, cookies, apples, nuts, popcorn-balls, roast beef, roast pork, spare ribs, quail, ham, ducks; most anything you have in the house," cried Charlie uproariously—while they all laughed, and little Hat shouted, "Goo, goo," and made her little fat hands fly in a patty-cake, baker's-man,"

The three or four passengers in the far end of the car looked up from their books and papers and smiled at the merry little group.

Meanwhile Aunt Harr'et, in the great old ark of a farm-house by herself, talked to the dog and the cat. She had loaded the hired man off home to his father's with a big basket packed full of Thanksgivin' fixins'. "I'll see," she said as she put in the last mince-pie and loaf of cake, "if I can't have just as thankful a heart as I could if the house was full of goodies. I mean to try it for once, and eat pudden' and milk, as I have so often wished I could, and see if I don't enjoy it just as well."

So she sifted a great quantity of corn-meal of the kind that Southern people call hominy and New England folks call samp, and, putting on the big dinner-pot, proceeded to make a pudding. It required a good deal of stirring and skimming, and kept her pretty busy for two or three hours. The meal swelled and swelled until the kettle was nearly full.

"I declar for't," said she to the cat, "I don't know what possessed me to make such a lot of pudden'. But, if I don't want it all myself, the hogs will; 'twon't be wasted"—and, fetching a bowl of milk from the pantry, she sat down in the splint-bottomed rocking-chair, set her felt-slippered feet on the fore-piece of the stove and proceeded to eat her supper.

"I declar for't," said she to the dog, who lay on the rug at her feet, "I feel exactly as if sumbudy was dead, or as if ev'rybudy was dead, and I was left on airth alone to keep tavern. I should like a little bite of sunthin' to top off with, but I wouldn't own it to anybudy that could talk; but you won't tell no tales. I'm as ashamed as a whipped dog, and feel as cheap as dirt every time I think what day it is, and how we've been prospered in every way through the year, and yet here I be, no comp'ny in the house, and none likely to come, and nothin' cooked up, and no Thanksgivin' smell about the house, and, worst of all, father 'n mother sent off out from under their own ruff. Harr'et, you're a sour, selfish, crabbed old maid, 'nd I'm ashamed on ye. Take the Bible and see if ye can't find sunthin' to git ye inter a better state o' mind."

So she strode into "mother's room" after the family Bible, and, behold! it was gone. "They've taken it with 'em to John's, and all the Thanksgivin' feelin' along with it." She took a look at the made-up bed, with its pieced-up quilt, and said again, "It seems as if ev'rybudy was dead," and went out and shut the door behind her.

"What if sumbudy should come?" she soliloquized next, taking up the cat, "but there won't. There ain't nobody to come, only what's invited to John's, excepting Sister Susan, poor, dear, precious child, away off there in the wilds; she'll never come home agin, I presume," and Harr'et laid her hands on her knees and thought of the day Susan was born, and of the day when she was married, and cried a little, and then dropped off into a nap, from which she was aroused by a subdued bustle near the back door.

Getting up and lifting a corner of the curtain she peeped out, and saw, by the light of the full moon, a wagon driving out of the yard, a trunk—or basket—a tallish boy, a shortish girl, two more children coming up the walk, and a plump, little woman, with a baby in her arms, just stepping upon the door-stone.

"Susan," gasped Harr'et, quickly unbuttoning and opening the door, and catching the surprised, rosy, little woman in her arms. They both cried a little, but Harr'et meanwhile put Susan into the splint-bottomed chair, took off her bonnet, and smoothed her hair. Then she wiped her eyes, asked after the absent husband, kissed the children, took off their things, making a mental calculation of how she should manage to get them all dressed before Sunday.

"I knew we should find you up," said Susan, looking around the familiar kitchen. "I remember how the baking used to drag the night before," and she gave a little sniff. Smelling nothing suggestive of fancy cookery, she said she believed she had managed to take a cold in some way. At this the children, each in turn, sniffed and looked curiously at each other.

"We won't let any one know that you have come until morning," said Harr'et, in her decided way, "and then we will have a general surprise at breakfast."

"They are all well—father and mother?" asked Susan, anxiously.

"Never better! Now what will you have for supper?" That was just what had been said in their play, in the car, and the children pricked up their ears.

"Oh, a cup of tea for me, and plenty of milk and bread for the children," said the plump and rosy mamma, carrying on her part of the play according to programme. But Aunt Harr'et, instead of asking them what they would like, seized upon the idea of milk, and exclaimed:

"Yes, yes, milk for the children, to be sure; of course it will be the very best thing for them after their journey. You used to be fond of samp, Susan."

"I should think so, and I have never seen any since I went away."

The children looked disappointed, but they enjoyed their supper, and thought and said they had never tasted anything so delicious as that first meal at grandpa's.

"You see," said Aunt Harriet, as she was preceding them up to bed just as the clock struck 11, "it is a good appetite and a thankful heart that makes a Thanksgivin' supper, after all."

"Yes," agreed Johnnie, "that's so; but, after all, I'm glad we're going to have the turkey, goose, ducks and chicken fixin's to-morrow."

"Beginning with stewed chicken and pumpkin pie for breakfast," said Mary.

"You see I have told them all about it," said Susan apologetically, as she carried the baby up the stairs she had last come down as a bride. "If you're crowded, Harriet, you can make up a bed on the floor for the boys."

"There are two beds in this room; can you manage here?" replied Harriet, opening the door of one of the spick and span front chambers.

"Oh, certainly."

"Then go to bed and to sleep, and don't hurry up until I call you in the morning;" and, bidding the little group a loving good-night, she hurried down stairs, quickly donned walking shoes, shawl and hood, slipped out the back door, locked it securely after her, put the key under the door sill, and started across lots for John's.

"It's lucky I haven't been baking for a fortnight," she said, and then she continued, "if I had, the folks would all be at home, where they'd orter be, and I shouldn't have ter go prowling off after 'em. I don't see's I've made much."

Jane was taking her last chicken pie out of the oven, and the clock was striking 12 as Harriet stalked into the kitchen.

John heard her voice and got out of bed and came out in his night-gown to hear the good news, for Susan was the youngest sister and the pet.

"I'll go over and bring them all around here to breakfast," said John, eagerly. "It don't seem as if I could wait until morning."

"I will tell you what shall be done," said John's wife. "We won't say a word about it, but will carry our fixings all over home. Do you suppose I'm going to have that dear child and them children come half across the continent to Thanksgiving at grandpa's, only to be sent away from the old homestead to one of the neighbors? By no means."

Then, indeed, Harriet broke down and cried in good earnest. And, what was a wonderful thing for her to do, she put her arms around her sister-in-law's neck and kissed her heartily.

Thanksgiving morning opened bright and fair. When Aunt Harr'et, in a pretty, flowered wrapper, looked in to awake the travelers, she found them up and dressed. Grandpa and grandma, John and his wife, and all the rest were waiting to receive them at breakfast, and everything went on just as it was set down in the "play."

"There are Thanksgiving smells enough this morning," said Mary; "I guess we did all have colds last night."

But all kept their own counsel, and the plump little mother has not yet ceased wondering how it happened that Harr'et should have been making that immense samp pudding on Thanksgiving eve.—Springfield Republican.

A Very Exact Denial.

The nephew was the typical nephew of the comedies and novels; the uncle the typical uncle. The former got himself into debt; the latter had to help him out of debt.

But the most long-suffering of men must at last lose patience, and one fine day the uncle writes to his dear nephew that all is over between them. Not another penny.

The nephew flies down to his uncle's country seat and falls at his venerable relative's gouty feet.

"Uncle Peter, dear Uncle Peter, just this once. Aid me to straighten out this snarl in my finances and I will never, never come to you again."

"Oh, Roland, I know you too well. My sister's son—my only sister's son," says the old man, wiping away a furtive tear.

"Ah, your heart is touched; you will assist me once more?" says the young man.

"Listen," said his aged relative; "have you a rule?"

"A which?"

"A rule—a foot-rule?"

"Why should I have one? I ain't a carpenter."

"Go and find one immediately."

The young man, puzzled but hopeful, goes, and, at the end of half an hour, returns and says:

"Uncle, dear, here is the foot-rule."

"Very well; measure this room—length, breadth and height—so as to ascertain its dimensions."

The young man, more puzzled than ever, sets about his task, and at last makes his report.

"Uncle, the room contains 3,040 cubic feet."

"You are sure of that?"

"Absolutely."

"Very well," says the old gentleman, rising to his feet and speaking in a tone of thunder; "and now, sir, if this room, which contains 3,040 cubic feet, were filled with double-eagles, packed so tightly that you couldn't ram, jam or cram a 3-cent piece into it, I wouldn't give you a penny. Git!"—New York World.

Pathetic Incident.

An incident, as pathetic as any legend of Killarney and the Irish lake country, recently occurred at Lough Erne. A member of the royal Irish constabulary, unmindful of the rigid regulations of the police service, took the colleen of his heart to the altar without receiving the permission of his superiors. After his marriage was reported at headquarters, attempts were made to secure a relaxation of the rules in his case, for he was a popular and efficient officer. Not even at the instance of Cupid could the rigid laws of the police be waived. Poor Roe—this was the officer's name—must leave the force; such was the stern order. He prepared to start for Australia with his young wife, consoled by her love for any sacrifices he had made. Happy in their honeymoon, he and his bride sailed up Lough Erne for Enniskillen, to make final preparations for their departure from Ireland. At the landing-place his wife fell into the water while stepping from the steamer. With the quickness of thought he plunged in to save her. Losing all presence of mind, she, in her struggle for life, entwined her arms around him, and, before any assistance could be rendered, both sank to rise no more.

Nutmegs.

Nutmegs grow on trees which look like pear trees, and are generally over twenty feet high. The flowers are very much like the lily of the valley. They are pale yellow, and very fragrant. The nutmeg is the seed of the fruit, and mace is the thin covering over this seed. The fruit is about as large as a peach. When ripe, it breaks open and shows the little nut inside. The trees grow on the islands of Asia, and in tropical America. They bear fruit for seventy or eighty years, having ripe fruit upon them at all seasons. A fine tree in Jamaica has over 4,000 nutmegs on it yearly. The Dutch used to have all the nutmeg trade, as they owned the Banda islands, and conquered all the other traders, and destroyed the trees. To keep the price up, they once burned three piles of nutmegs, each of which was as large as a church. Nature did not sympathize with such meanness. The nutmeg pigeon, found in all the Indian islands, did for the world what the Dutch had determined should not be done—carried these nuts, which are their food, into all the surrounding countries, and trees grew again, and the world has the benefit.

Horror-Stricken.

Henry Faxon, of Buffalo, is said never to have recovered from a fright that Blondin gave him, his nervous system receiving a lasting shock. Blondin was about to start on one of his walks on a rope across the chasm below Niagara falls. Faxon stood laughing and jesting on the edge of the precipice overlooking the river 140 feet below. Blondin, motioning to the bystanders for silence, seized Faxon under both armpits from behind, and held him for a second or two over the verge. Faxon's countenance when Blondin laid hold of him was irradiated with mirth. When Blondin drew him back and dropped him on the green sward, he sank in a heap, horror-stricken. In the next instant, Blondin, grasping his heavy balancing pole, danced out on his rope beyond the precipice, and, turning to enjoy the effect of his maneuver, saluted his collapsed friend with a comical gesture.

BEEFSTEAK PUDDING.

A Notable Recipe for a Notable Pudding Much Beloved by the Britishers.

Olive Logan writes from London to the Cincinnati Enquirer: The manager of one of the most successful of your Cincinnati restaurants writes to ask me if I will oblige, not only him personally, but several hundred Cincinnatians, who daily dine at his place, by giving the recipe of the famous Temple Bar beefsteak pudding as served at the celebrated old chop-house, the Cheshire Cheese, patronized by Drs. Johnson and Boswell, and originally written and talked of by them.

Of course, it is out of my way to obtain the recipe from the cooks at the Cheshire Cheese, but, to oblige the several hundred Cincinnatians mentioned, I rang my bell this morning and told my Buttons to send Cook up to me.

When I informed her that I'd like her to tell me how to make beefsteak pudding for several hundred Cincinnatians, the humor of the request was too great, it seemed, for her to preserve what she considered a decorous gravity, and she threw her apron over her face, and throbbed behind it with a long pulsation of low chuckles, choked off finally into an apology for a cough. Knowing full well that an English servant desires her employers to be her superiors, and is only satisfied with them when they assert themselves as such, I did not dare to confide to Margery that I wanted this recipe to send to the keeper of a restau[illegible]. Such eccentricity on the part of a "Missus" would have been received with cold compliance, not warm co-operation. So I intimated to her that it was for a "charitable institution," and her sympathies were with me in an instant.

Armed with a pen, an ink-bottle and a sheet of paper, Cook descended to the regions below, and in an hour or two Buttons brought me her composition, written in a very neat hand and with very little bad spelling. At first glance I thought I could put the sheet in with my own copy without change for print, but I find the phraseology is so confused as to require unraveling. Below, then, follow directions for making Temple Bar beefsteak pudding (not pie) for four Cincinnatians, and I suppose the ingredients may be multiplied in the same ratio as the Cincinnatians are.

1. Make a crust of half a pound of suet, chopped fine; one pound of flour, half saltspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of baking powder, mixed together, and sufficient cold water added to make it a stiff paste.

2. Cut one-third of the paste for the cover of the pudding-basin in which the pudding is to be boiled. Roll the rest of the paste to the size required to line the pudding basin. Grease with butter the pudding basin, and lay the paste in neatly.

3. Take two pounds of beef cut in slices. Dip each slice in flour as you lay it in the basin, along with two kidneys, a little chopped parsley, a bit of good butter the size of an egg, a few drops of Worcestershire sauce, a teacupful of water, half a saltspoonful of salt, ditto of pepper.

4. Roll out the paste cover to the size of the top of the basin, wet the edges of the paste which lines the basin, then lay the cover on and press the two edges together. Dip your nice clean pudding cloth in boiling water, flour it, tie it over the top of the basin.

5. Place the basin in a saucepan of boiling water and keep it boiling four hours. For serving, take off the cloth, turn the basin over on a nice warm plate, remove basin.

This leaves your pudding the round, pudding shape on top, though the bottom is flat. When you stick your spoon in, the gravy will run out, luscious and healthy, and the meat within be as tender as young chicken. I should, perhaps, mention that the pudding-basin referred to is a bowl of crockery, holding a quart, with a thick rim around the top, which makes it easy to tie the cloth on with a string. Such pudding-basins of all sizes are sold in the shops here, and no doubt are to be bought in the china stores in America.

Cats as Retrievers.

A resident of Sacramento county, who has a peculiar faculty for training animals, has educated three cats to serve the purpose of dogs, as retrievers. When he takes up his gun and calls them from the house, they follow with a grand rush, mewing and whining excitedly. When a bird is shot they enter upon the liveliest kind of a race to retrieve it, and, if it is not in sight, hunt the ground thoroughly, never omitting to snap at each other viciously whenever they come within reaching distance. No matter which of the trio finds the bird, the carrying to the shooter is generally done by a patriarchal Thomas, who "plays roots" upon the others very cunningly, and scratches and bites if one of the other cats gets the game first and does not surrender it on demand. He carries the bird to his master, and stands guard over it until it is taken from him and bagged.—Sacramento (Cal.) Union.

A Lesson in Humanity.

The Japanese are very kind to animals. Prof. Morse tells us that a boy is never seen to throw a stone at dog or bird, and crows come into the city of Tokio and lodge in the houses. They pay for their kind treatment, for they act as scavengers, picking up what rice or fish may fall to the ground. In a crowded thoroughfare he has seen a dog lying asleep in the middle of the road. No one disturbed him, but carefully turned out from him. He once threw a stone at a dog to see how he would act. The animal rose to his feet to let the stone pass, and looked surprised, and took only the same notice of a second assault—quite different from the way a Christian dog would be likely to act. By the sides of the roads, at the foot of hills, stone monuments are placed, and have been there for hundreds of years, bearing verses that teach consideration for the dumb beasts. The unregenerate Anglo-Saxon may here learn a lesson of practical humanity.

"We had so far recovered from Typhoid Fever as to be about, and on every fine day for months crept small-like to my office for advice, medicine, strength. Out of patience, I prescribed your (Fellows') Hypophosphites with a success scarcely to be credited. Since then I doubt if an M. D. has prescribed and praised it more than I."

Such was the statement made by a first-rate physician in Moncton, N. B., to Mr. Fellows, and is another proof of the unequaled influence of Fellows' Hypophosphites over disease.

THE AFGHANS.

A People Given to War, Treachery, Cruelty, and All the Other Savage Refinements.

Afghanistan, or the land of the Afghan, is, broadly viewed, a table-land, quadrilateral in shape, south of Independent Tartary, west of the Punjaub, the northwesternmost of the British possessions, north of Beloochistan, and east of Persia. Its eastern boundary is a little west of the Indus river.

This country is about 600 miles from east to west, and 450 miles from north to south, leaving out certain provinces that are more or less intimately connected with it. Including these, it measures about 600 miles each way. Such is the elevation of the territory that, were the sea to rise 4,000 feet, it would cover only small portions of it, such as the lower part of the Cabul valley, some ground near the Indus, and a triangle bounded by lines from the Lake of Seistan to Herat, thence to Kandahar, and back to the lake. Were the sea to rise 7,000 feet, a section of the country measuring 200 miles by 250 miles would be touched.

At Cabul and all over the northern part of the country the winters are severe. In Cabul the snow is often several feet deep.

At Jalalabad the climate assumes an Indian character, and the fatal simoon is sometimes felt. The summer heat is great all over Afghanistan, especially in the districts bordering on the Indus. In Khorasan during the hot season there are often dust-storms and fiery winds. At Girishk in summer the sun has reached 118 or 119 deg. Fahrenheit.

Afghanistan is reported to be rich in minerals, but little is done to develop its resources in this direction. Some iron and lead is mined, and other minerals are known to exist.

In most parts of the country there are two harvests, as in India. The spring crop consists of wheat, barley, and a variety of lentils. The fall crop consists of rice, sorghum, maize, millet, tobacco, beets, turnips, etc. Madder, lucerne, and melons are raised largely. All European fruits are produced profusely.

The population of Afghanistan is estimated to be 4,901,000. Of these there are in Afghan Turkestan 642,000, and of Chitralis and Kafirs 150,000. Of the rest of the people the Eimaks and Hazaras number 400,000; the Tajiks, 500,000; the Kizilbashes, 150,000; Hinkis and Jats, 500,000; Kohistanis, 200,000; Afghans and Pathans, including 400,000 independent Yusufzais, 2,359,000.

The Afghans, inured to bloodshed from childhood, are familiar with death and are audacious in attack, but are easily discouraged; excessively turbulent and unsubmissive to law or discipline; apparently frank and affable in manner, especially when they want to gain some object, but capable of the grossest brutality when that hope ceases. They are unscrupulous in perjury, treacherous, vain and insatiable, passionate in vindictiveness, which they will satisfy at the cost of their own lives and in the most cruel manner. Nowhere is crime committed on such trifling grounds, or with such general impunity, though when it is punished the punishment is atrocious. Among themselves the Afghans are quarrelsome, intriguing and distrustful; estrangements and affrays are of constant occurrence. The Afghan is, by breed and nature, a bird of prey. They are eternally boasting of their lineage, their independence and their prowess. They regard themselves as the first of nations, yet they use the phrase "an Afghan job" as a synonym for a peculiarly cruel deed. "Nothing," said Sir H. Edwards, "is finer than their physique or worse than their morals."

The Afghans are organized in tribes, and elect their own chiefs and representatives to occasional councils. Their political constitution is a compound of democracy and absolutism.

Afghanistan is under one Prince, but it is hardly a monarchy as we understand the term. It is rather the government of a dictator for life over a military aristocracy, and within this a congeries of small democracies. The Sirdors govern their respective districts, each after his own fashion. The spirit of the Afghans is expressed in the remark of one of them: "We are content with discord; we are content with alarms; we are content with blood; but we will never be content with a master."

The Afghans are Mohammedans, and nearly all of them are of the Sanni or orthodox branch. They are very superstitious and fond of field sports.

The revenue of the country is from $2,500,000 to $3,000,000 a year. The regular army was formed in 1858 with 16 infantry regiments of 800 men each, 900 cavalry, 80 field pieces, and a few heavy guns. The main military force, however, is the untrained but hardy and warlike levies that the tribal chiefs can produce on occasion.

In 1809, in consequence of the intrigues of Napoleon in Persia, the Hon. Mountstewart Elphinstone was sent to Shah Shuja, then in power, and was well received. This was the first acquaintance of the Afghans with Englishmen. In 1837 the Persian siege of Herat and the movements of the Russians created uneasiness, and the English determined to reinstate Shah Shuja, long a refugee in British possessions. Raujit Singh, King of the Punjaub, agreed to assist, but finally refused his aid. The army of the Indus, 21,000 men, under Sir John Keane, advanced through the Bolan pass in March, 1838. There was little opposition, and the expedition appeared to have been an easy success. But in 1841 a revolt against the English and Shah Shujah broke out, beginning in Cabul with the massacre of several English officers. Disaster after disaster was suffered by the English. Ambuscades and the snows of winter almost annihilated the army of 4,500 men that sought to retreat into India.

In 1842 the English sent an army to avenge this defeat. This army delivered a number of prisoners, destroyed the citadel at Cabul, and then returned to India.

The country has since 1842 passed through many vicissitudes, and for several years the Ameer has been on good terms with the Government of India, and has received numerous and valuable presents from it.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

For Scalds or Burns.—Poultices of tea-leaves, moistened in hot water, are preferable to all other remedies in the first stage of burns and scalds. Or take raw onions, pound or mash fine as possible, and apply at once; it will give immediate relief.

To Heal a Cut.—Without waiting for it to stop bleeding, press the edges of the lacerated flesh together, and apply immediately a plaster made of soot and cream, binding it firmly on, not to be removed till healed, without cleanliness requires it. Then put another of the same on, without delay, not allowing exposure to the air any more than possible to prevent.

How to Cure Swelled Feet and Ankles.—Take plaintain leaves (which can be found in almost any grass plot, and in our public parks); wilt them by putting separately between the hands; cover the swollen parts with them, and keep in place by wrapping the limb with rags or a towel on going to bed at night, or keep them on during the day if not obliged to be upon the feet. A cure will be speedily effected.

Scalding of the Throat from Swallowing Boiling Water.—This accident occurs not uncommonly among the children left by themselves, and is very dangerous, as the throat swells, and the sufferer is in danger of being suffocated. Send for the medical man immediately. Meanwhile, if it can be procured, let the patient suck ice constantly, and apply a strong mustard poultice to the outside of the front of the throat.

Belladonna in Asthma.—The Melbourne Medical Record states that smoke from the leaves of belladonna possesses much more power in cutting short an attack of asthma than that from stramonium, a long pipe being the best means of smoking them, the smoke to be drawn deep into the chest. Or if, when the attack is at its height, the patient has not the power of doing this, the leaves may be placed in a saucer containing lighted charcoal or wood ashes, which should be put on a chair in front of the patient, this chair, as well as his own, being covered with a large sheet, so as to confine the fumes, before the leaves are put on the hot charcoal. From two and a half to five grains of the leaves are sufficient when smoked, and from five to twenty grains when burned.

Breathing Through the Nose.—Catlin taught the world the importance of shutting the mouth and breathing through the nose. It would seem that his little book, entitled "Shut Your Mouth," is bearing fruit in Germany, where new thoughts receive more attention from physicians than anywhere else in the world. Respiration by the mouth is easier than by the nose, but not so safe. The nose to a certain extent fits the air for entering the lungs. The sense of smell prevents our breathing an air loaded with poisonous vapors. The moisture of the nasal cavities to some extent saturates the air and makes it less irritating to the throat and larynx. The inequalities of the nasal passage and the hairs catch the dust before it goes far enough to harm. On the other hand, breathing through the mouth dries the throat, and in children may cause false croup, catarrh, and it may so affect the Eustachian tube as to cause injury to the ear and deafness. So particular, in the eyes of Dr. Guye, is the importance of breathing through the nose, that he has invented a little instrument to apply to the mouth in sleep, which holds it shut and compels nasal breathing.

Care of the Eyes.—The care of the eyes is urged by Arthur Chevalier in a new French work. The use of the eyes, he says, should be regulated by their strength, and they should never be overtaxed. A habit of resting them often during work is recommended. Thus in reading or writing stop from time to time and allow the eyes to wander over surrounding objects. To persist in working after symptoms of fatigue appear is foolish. As soon as the eyes begin to itch, or grow red, or any pain is felt in the eyeballs, work should be discontinued and cold water applied. Do not pass suddenly from darkness into bright light. Artificial lights are all injurious. The author adds: "If a person cannot tear himself away from close work, he can at least vary his occupation. Let him close his eyes from time to time, and take a turn around his room, or, what is better, take a walk in the fresh air; this, even if it be for a few minutes only, will do him a great deal of good. Let him who once becomes convinced that he is putting too much confidence in his eyes take care to abstain from all confining work immediately after rising, after meals, or by artificial light. Let him wash his eyes often during the day with cold water—a remedy which, although simple in itself, never fails in every case to produce good effects. Baths of tepid water are injurious to the eyes."

Editorial Aims Out West.

A young man sends us a long essay on "The True Aim of Journalism." We haven't read the article, but suppose the author, like almost every one else, prefers the Smith & Wesson, navy size, No. 44 caliber, to any other pistol. In this locality, especially, is the aim of the journalist of the greatest importance, and the man whose hand shakes and who can't hit an outraged community's third vest-button three times out of five has no business trying to run a paper in California.—San Francisco News Letter.

The number of the Russian branch of the Slav race, as ascertained by German investigators last year, is 58,049,395 in the Czar's empire; his non-Slav subjects foot up 13,421,087, making a grand total of 71,470,482. Among the non-Slav portion in Poland only the Slav language is allowed to be spoken in churches, schools, theaters, etc.

Miscarried Notes.

A young lady gave "her young man" a beautifully-worked pair of slippers, and he acknowledged the present by sending her his picture incased in a handsome frame.

He wrote a note to send with it, and at the same time replied angrily to the oft-repeated dun for an unpaid-for suit of clothes. He gave a boy 10 cents to deliver the package and notes, giving explicit directions as to the destination of each. It was a boy with a freckled face, and he discharged his errand in a manner that should give him a niche in the temple of fame.

The young lady received a note in her adored one's handwriting, and flew to her room to devour its contents. She opened the missive with eager fingers, and said:

"I'm getting tired of your everlasting attentions. The suit is about worn out already. It never amounted to much any way. Please go to thunder."

And the tailor was struck utterly dumb when he opened a parcel and discovered the picture of his delinquent customer, with a note that said:

When the unfortunate young man called around that evening to receive the happy acknowledgment of his sweetheart, he was very ostentatiously shoved off the steps and over the fence by the young lady's father, and in the morning he was waited upon by his tailor's lawyer, and imperatively ordered to settle or suffer.

Newspapers in Great Britain.

It appears that in Great Britain are published 1,885 newspapers and 818 periodicals, which, with 56 organs of learned and other societies, make a total of 2,759 publications, 486 newspapers and 598 periodicals being contributed by London alone. Of the newspapers 542 are Liberal, 331 Conservative or Conservative Liberal, and 941 neutral. Three hundred and ninety-eight of the periodicals deal exclusively with religious questions. There are 287 illustrated papers, of which 33 have colored illustrations. Questions relating to labor are treated of in 14 newspapers, while there are 104 prints representing trades and trade societies.—Land and Water.

Lawyer and Client.

A butcher complained to a lawyer that somebody's dog was in the habit of stealing meat from his cart, and asked what he should do about it. The lawyer replied: "Prosecute the owner of the dog, of course." "But," said the butcher, "it is your dog." "I will pay the bill," said the lawyer, bringing his hand down suddenly on the place where his pocketbook was supposed to be, "if you will tell me how much the meat was worth." The butcher replied, "About $1." "All right," replied the lawyer, "hand over $1 to me and we shall be square. The advice which I gave you in the beginning was worth $2!"—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Where Wit Won.

"What's the woman charged with?" said the Court. "She's a dead beat and vagrant, your Honor," said the officer who arrested her. Then the woman spoke up and said: "If I can prove that I'm all right will your Honor let me go?" "Of course," said the Court. "Then," said the prisoner, "here's the family Bible, by which you'll see I'm Moll Wright"—— "Saw my leg off," shouted the officer, who saw the point, "if she hasn't beat the Court, too." And the Court rubbed its nose with its forefinger and gently murmured: "Discharge the prisoner."—Mobile Register.

Ease Attainable by the Rheumatic.

Yes, although they may despair of relief, it is attainable by rheumatic sufferers, for there is a remedy which carries off, by means of increased activity of the kidneys—important channels for blood purification—the acrid element to which pathologists the most eminent attribute the painful symptoms—a theory completely borne out by urinary analysis. The name of this grand depurent is Hostetter's Bitters, a preparation likewise celebrated as a remedy for constipation, which causes contamination of the blood with the bile—and a certain means of relief in dyspepsia, fever and ague, and nervous ailments. It is, perhaps, the finest tonic extant, and is highly recommended as a medicinal stimulant by distinguished physicians and analysts, who pronounce it to be eminently pure and very beneficial. The press also indorses it.

A Sudden Death.

There is something terrible in the thought of having our friends stricken down at our side, without a parting word of endearment or consolation—one moment at our side in the flush of vigorous life, cheering our hearts with their loving sympathy; the next at our feet, pale with death, deaf to our cries and heedless of our tears. Every excessively fat person is in instant danger of such a death. Seven-tenths of the victims of obesity die of heart disease or apoplexy. Allan's Anti-Fat, the only remedy for obesity, reduces the weight by regulating the digestion and assimilation of the food. It is perfectly harmless, and its use will insure, in every instance, a reduction of weight from two to five pounds a week.

Best organs as a whole and best workmanship in detail, is the conclusion reached at the Paris Exposition as to the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs. Organs from thirty best makers in the world were tested and compared by four juries—viz., the Class Jury, Group Jury, Jury of Presidents and Supreme Jury, who awarded to Mason & Hamlin two highest awards.

A neglected cough, cold, or sore throat which might be checked by a simple remedy, like "Brown's Bronchial Troches," if allowed to progress may terminate seriously. 25 cts.

The most contemptible fraud that has been practised upon farmers and others in the last few years is the selling of immense packs of worthless horse and cattle powders. There is only one kind now known in this country that are unadulterated, and those are Sheridan's.

First preparatory student (angrily)—"If you attempt to pull my ears you'll have your hands full." Second prep. (looking at his ears)—"Well, yes; I rather think I shall."

For upward of 30 years Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children with never-failing success. It corrects acidity of the stomach, relieves wind colic, regulates the bowels, cures dysentery and diarrhea, whether arising from teething or other causes. An old and well-tried remedy. 25 cts. a bottle.

No family in this broad land should undertake to keep house without Johnson's Anodyne Liniment; many have tried to but failed. It is worth more to a family than a whole medicine chest.

William Grace.

As a general inquiry of "What is Grace's Salve, and who is its originator?" may seem to be a question worthy of being answered, we have been induced to give the following brief, yet truthful account of its history: This salve is a vegetable preparation, invented in the seventeenth century by Dr. William Grace, who was surgeon in King James' army, and who from that time always used it in his professional practice, whenever soreness or inflammation presented itself. As a medical agent for the cure of wounds, it was followed with great success, and thousands of the veterans that were wounded in the campaigns of 1688 and 1689 owed to this salve the salvation of their lives. Col. Richard Grace, who was King James' chamberlain, introduced this Salve into the royal palace, where it was used with the greatest success, and highly esteemed for its virtues in the cure of sores. At the siege of Athlone, Col. Grace ordered it to be administered to his compatriots who were wounded during the memorable day of the battle; and it was used with such success that the head surgeon of the army at Aughrim ordered Dr. Grace to manufacture 100 gross, and distribute it among the hospitals before the battle. On the sad defeat at Aughrim, after Ginkle's army took possession of the battle-field, several ambulances, which had been abandoned by the retreating army, were found to contain sealed cases of the Salve. The English surgeons tested it upon their wounded and ascertained its value, and thus were both of the contending armies befriended by it. Both Dr. William Grace and Col. Richard Grace died in the campaign of 1691—the former of disease, the latter killed in the intrenchments of Athlone, with the flag of his country wrapped around him, cheering his men on to victory. After the death of Dr. Grace, the Salve was not used much outside of his family, until the rebellion of 1798, when William Grace, grandfather of the subscriber, applied its virtues, at the battle of Ross, to his brave comrades who fell wounded while fighting for the rights of their country. This Salve was quite extensively used in certain localities of Ireland, being furnished gratuitously by the subscriber's parents until 1848, when they left the land of their nativity and came to this country, bringing with them the secret of the Salve they received from their ancestors. They continued to make the Salve, as before, for their neighbors, free of charge, until the fall of 1861, when the frequent calls for it, and the serious cases cured by it, induced the subscriber to bring it into more general notice, and to charge a small price for the article that has received the recommendation of patriots upon the battle-fields of yore, as well as from persons of the present day.—Toronto Advertiser, March 6, 1878.

I have been very much troubled with Heart Disease for the last seven or eight years, not being able to do any laborious work for two years. I have been constantly troubled with severe pain about my heart, passing no day without experiencing pain. Dr. E. G. Moore, of Concord, and other physicians, called my difficulty Rheumatism of the Heart. Have been greatly troubled to get my breath at times, and had severe sinking spells accompanying difficulty of breathing, so that I have been in great danger of immediate death. Have used but two bottles of the HEART REGULATOR, and, though not considering myself cured, can say that I do a day's work without any difficulty, and think eventually I shall become almost entirely well. I have induced others to try the HEART REGULATOR, and would gratefully recommend it to all.

JEREMIAH SMITH, Concord, N. H.

Dr Graves' HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

To be of permanent benefit a medicine must reach the source of the disease. The reason why Scovill's Blood and Liver Syrup is so successful in overcoming scrofulous and all eruptive complaints is that it entirely roots out those impurities which give rise to them. The cause of the evil being thus removed and the normal purity of the circulation restored, the skin resumes its original clearness and sores and pimples disappear. Sold by all Druggists.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—Farmers, Families and Others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. TOBIAS' VENETIAN LINIMENT, for the cure of Cholera, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Croup, Colic and Sea-sickness, taken internally (it is perfectly harmless; see oath accompanying each bottle) and externally for Chronic Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cuts, Burns, Swellings, Bruises, Mosquito Bites, Old Sores, Pains in Limbs, Back and Chest. The VENETIAN LINIMENT was introduced in 1847, and no one who has used it but continues to do so, many stating if it was Ten Dollars a Bottle they would not be without it. Thousands of Certificates can be seen at the Depot, speaking of its wonderful curative properties. Sold by the Druggists at 40 cts. Depot, 42 Murray street, New York.

that the Jury on Cotton textiles, yarns and threads, at the Paris Exposition, decreed a Gold Medal and Grand Prize to the Willimantic Linen Company for "Spool Cotton especially adapted for use on Sewing Machines," over all the great thread manufactures of the world, we owe it as a duty to the public and to Messrs. J. & P. Coats to announce that

We are advised by cable of the following awards:

J. & P. COATS, Gold Medal.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, NOV. 21, 1878

THEODORE REED, - - Editor.

Our State Legislature will meet on the 9th day of January next.

◆

◆

P. T. Barnum, the circus man is one of the newly elected members of the Connecticut Legislature. He is a Republican.

◆

Every week brings forth numerous suggestions and fine mathematical calculations, connected with the re-districting of the State.

◆

De La Matyr, the Congressman elect from the Indianapolis district says, if he is called upon to decide between a Republican and Democrat for President he will vote for the Democrat.

◆

Senator Winterbotham, the Senator from the Michigan City District, has assured the Democracy that he would not bolt the caucus nominee for Senator. Such assurances are consoling particularly when remembered that public sentiment is for Voorhees, and Winterbotham finds he can not stem the tide.

◆

In an interview with a representative of the Fort Wayne Sentinel "Col. Ingersoll expressed much bitterness toward the South, He says the southern whites are cowards, sneaks and hypocrits, and that they must be kept down at all hazards. He thinks they want to rule the country, but says that they can't do it. Their country is a sham. They can't produce anything but malaria, yellow fever and hell. They are good for nothing except to kill negroes. Col. Ingersoll says he should like nothing better than to see a negro insurrection in South Carolina which should sweep the whites from power forever."

"Bob' is a first class radical; a few lectures on the political situation with a free expression of such sentiments as the above would place him ahead of Grant in the Presidential race. He represents the true inwardness of the Republican party.

◆

Has the Republican party gained a victory in the late elections? We think not. The great amount of forced enthusiasm now being indulged in by the Republican press of the country can be accounted for upon no other theory than that the radical party had no hopes of success in any of the States, and when by the strength of a third party, and a division of the Democracy in some of the Northern States the radical party was enabled to about hold its own on Congressmen, (though it lost the Senate) the surprise was complete, and general rejoicing followed. Republican papers talk about the financial principles of their party being endorsed in the late elections, when the returns show that even in States that were republican heretofore by large majorities, that party is now in the minority so far as the popular vote is concerned. In Michigan, for instance, where the republicans claim an over whelming victory, the official count shows that that party cast 28,492 votes less than its opponents—the Democrats and Nationals. And in Pennsylvania, another State which has heretofore been reliably republican, the vote shows that the radical party is 59,249 votes in the minority, the same may be said of nearly all the States claimed by the republicans, and yet the eastern bondholders have sent forth glad tidings, claiming an endorsement of Shermans' financial policy, and with an equal amount of cheek the republican papers of the country are joining in the chorus. The republican party a short time ago had a two-thirds majority in both branches of Congress as well as an executive justly entitled to the position; in the next Congress (the 46th) the democrats will have a majority in both branches of Congress, while the radicals will be represented by a fraud in the Presidential chair. If this is any consolation to republicans, they are welcome to it. If, in 1880, the opponents of radicalism unite upon issues that are opposed to those supported by the republican party there will be no occasion to harp about a solid north, or solid south, it will be a solid country, anti-republican in all its branches, the American people will have no further use for Grant monarchies, Sherman aristocracies nor Presidential frauds.

ANOTHER MURDER AT INDIANAPOLIS.

Warren Tate the Murderer, and Wm. Love the Victim.

About 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon Warren Tate met Wm. Love in the upper corridor of the court house, between whom there passed a few words, in which the lie was given by Love, whereupon Tate drew his revolver and shot twice, producing wounds which proved fatal to Love in a few hours afterward. The difficulty grew out of a law-suit. Tate is known throughout the State as a sporting man. Those who have heard of Jenny Daily, have probably heard of Tate.

New Combination.

We are pleased to announce that on or before the first day of next month, Mr. G. C Ralston and Mr. W. H. McQuiston, both gentlemen of large acquaintance in DeKalb county, will open an extensive Dry goods and Grocery establishment, occupying two large business rooms in Ensley's block, north of the court house. The new firm will carry a full line of foreign and domestic dry-goods, clothing, hats and caps, notions, groceries, queens and glass-ware, &c., &c. The highest prices will be paid for all kinds of country produce. This will be the most extensive etablishment of the kind in DeKalb county and the business qualifications and popularity of the proprietors insures a big trade for the new enterprise.

The Farmers' Review.

The latest addition to our exchange list is the Farmers' Review, Chicago, Ill., and a most welcome addition it proves. It is as full of Departments as the government at Washington, and they all bear evidence of unusual skill and industry in their management It is emphatically a model farm and family monthly. It is, withal, the neatest and cheapest Journal of the kind in the world. Fifty cents secures a copy for one year. We will furnish the Review and our own paper, each one year, for $2.00, payable in advance.

THE NEW OPERA HOUSE.

Everything Progressing Favorably—The Drawing to be Positive.

In conversation with Mr. Lyne, of the Opera House Committee, yesterday he assured us that everything points to a grand and successful outcome of the great Masonic Opera House project. Tickets are now selling very rapidly all over the country, and all the details of the grand distribution will be fully completed before the day announced for the drawing. The concert and distribution will be positive and those who defer the purchase of tickets in the expectation of a postponement will be disappointed in getting them at all—Fort Wayne News.

HAZZARD AGAIN.

Another Piece of Sharp Practice by the Auburn Desperado.

The Chicago Times of Sunday has the following:

From an Indiana official who was in town yesterday, a Sunday Times reporter obtained the following facts in regard to another interesting incident in which Hazzard, the defaulting Indiana banker, cuts a prominent and not very creditable figure. A few days ago he called at the house of Mr. A. S. Trude, his attorney, to exchange some securities which that gentleman held as collateral for $400 borrowed money. The exchange was made at a center-table supported by a stalk in the middle. Hazzard asked for a drink of liquor, stating that he felt unwell, and while Mr. Trude was out of the room getting him some whisky, he undid the string round the papers which his attorney had taken in lieu of those surrendered, and took therefrom all those of any value, leaving only an abstract and the wrapper. On returning to the room Mr. Trude saw that the papers were not as he had left them, and he examined the package and at once discovered the theft. He reached over the table and caught hold of Hazzard's coat, but the bank embezzler, knowing what was coming, drew backward and pulled Trude over the table, which tipped over, and the distinguished criminal lawyer, a fine bottle of Bourbon, and the sick banker were in a moment rolling together on the floor. Trude was the first to rise. He had the missing papers in his hands, evidently having put in some good work while sprawling on the carpet. Hazzard was not long in following his attorney's example, and as soon as he gained his feet he drew and endeavored to cock a pistol. Trude grabbed him by the arm before he had a chance to fire and forced him to give up the weapon. Hazzard was then advised to take a change of venue, which he did with surprising alacrity.

This is the third time Hazzard has tried to secure valuable papers by the aid of a pistol. His recent attempt in Indiana nearly led to his being hung by a vigilance committee. Although the fellow is a fugitive banker he has made a practice of going back on his lawyers and best friends. He is now in Chicago with his sister, Mrs. Gear, and is stopping at one of the large hotels under an alias.

Otho;

Perhaps a descendant of one of the several kings of that name, but better known in this community as editor-in-chief of the Garrett Herald, relieved his brain last week in a Caudle-like curtain lecture devoted exclusively to the benefit of our humble self. It appears that we ruffled his patriotism a little in our remarks of the week before concerning Thanksgiving Proclamations. He assumes that we are less patriotic and moral than we should be; if so, WE are responsible, not him. The old gentleman intimates that the custom originated in the republican party; did it? if it did, then of course it should be observed, as the pure (?) and patriotic(?) motives of that party should not be questioned. We do not regard it as a party measure, nor do we look upon Gov. Williams' proclamation with any more favor than that of the President, the Herald man, however, seems to think it especially necessary to return thanks for blessings bestowed by the Almighty because he imagines that all blessings come through the influence of the radical party; then talk about "party prejudice," a fit subject for the Herald to to mention indeed, among all the thieving transactions of the radical party—the most corrupt that ever existed in any country, has the Herald ever been independent enough to denounce a single steal? The old man has considerable to say about "patriotism," we would like to enquire as to the quantity of blood HE has spilt, and amount of hardships HE has endured for the good of his country. He says Hayes and the Republican party "can take care of themselves;" no doubt of that, the leaders of that party have a faculty of taking care of everything they get their hands on. He says "superstition and prejudice cannot withstand the sifting process of intelligence," the latter however has produced no effect upon Powell. He closes by saying "such twaddle is barely worth noticing." Then why notice it? If each individual will observe the following from the lips of an eminent Minister, the observance of NATIONAL thanksgiving will be unnecessary.

"As flowers carry dew-drops, trembling on the edges of the petals, and ready to fall at the first waft of wind, or brush of bird, so the heart should carry its beaded words of thanksgiving; and at the first breath of heavenly favor let down the shower, perfumed with the heart's gratitude."

—We notice that Mace Long, the reformed drunkard and gambler, who is now lecturing in Kansas—filling a 30 day contract at about $30.00 a night, is being highly honored; he was announced as one of the speakers at the grand ovation given at the home of the newly elected Governor of that State. Mushroom Mace would interest his hearers in making a speech suited to such an occasion, about as much as Barnum's "wild children" would, in reciting the Declaration of Independence.

—Some of our subscribers along the B. & O. rail road east, say they do not receive the COURIER until Saturday or Monday. It generally leaves the office on Thursday afternoon, never later than Friday morning. Something wrong.

—The hack team at Cool's livery barn, got the advantage of C. Headly near the 9th street bridge and ran away. Mr. H. was thrown into the creek and became badly tangled in the wreck. He was somewhat hurt but not seriously.

—Ladies, remember we have now procured the services of a first-class city trimmer for the balance of the season, a lady of fine taste and large experience. Give us a call and we will give you the finest and latest styles in hats and bonnets for the least money ever offered in Auburn. Satisfaction guaranteed at the Ladies' Bazaar.

Newville.

Business is dull and money scarce.

We are going to have a shooting match in place of a lecture this week.

Red ribbon is dead, died of hard cider. Send Murphy and we will try the blue.

Mr. Lewis Cole, Sr. is still sick, he is some better but is still in a critical condition. We hope that he will soon recover.

Mr. Baker is to teach the Newville school this winter, assisted by Mr. Denman. Mr. Flint, the Trustee is to have the school at the Center, Mr. Hell in the south part of the township and Miss Flint in one of the other districts in Newville township, and Miss Ackley teaches in Orange in Concord township.

I see by your paper that you did not get the Newville items in time for publication. They were duly mailed in time and if you did not get them you must lay it to the Hayes administration and his P. M's. Perhaps it would be well enough to inform you that we do not get the paper in time, we should have it on Friday evening and it does not get here until Saturday. Now if it was duly mailed and sent on the Baltimore east, it would come on Friday, but by sending it via the Eel River it has to lay over until the mail returns on Friday. ALPHA.

Sedan.

Quite reigns in Sedan.

Are we to have a literary this winter?

J. C. Jackson Esq., is rusticating in Kentucky and Tennessee,

The attendance at the concert last Saturday was small owing to the inclemency of the weather. However the singing was excellent and was appreciated by all, so much so that the class and audience requested a repetition of it in the near future, much credit is due Mrs. C. R. Reed who presided at the organ.

Full Measure.

While most of the so-called two ounce flavoring extract bottles hold but one and one-quarter ounces, and the four ounce less than three ounces, Dr. Price's Special Flavoring Extracts are full measure, stong pure and natural as the fruit from which they emanate.

—We desirie to say in answer to numerous inquiries, that Mr. T. C. Mays the former publisher of the COURIER, has disposed of his entire interest in the same, and has no connection with the paper, nor office, in any way whatever.

How are we to know.

Dealers say how are we to know that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is unsophisticated? Know it, because it always gives satisfaction, and other kinds are bought at a price so low that it points at once to adulteration. If consumers knew the character of cheap baking powders, very few would use them.

—The American woman's suffrage convention assembled at Indianapolis last week. Mrs. Rebecca N. Hazzard, of Missouri, was elected President. A number of vice-president at large, and a vice-president from each state, were elected, among the former are Geo. W. Julian and Mrs. Gov. Wallace of Indiana.

Troy.

Weather dull and plenty of mud.

Last week was a good week for babies in Troy. No less than three.

We have a boss broom factory on the corners, conducted by Fink & Carr, two energetic young men. They make five and six dozen per day and can not keepup with orders.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

HAYES' NEW SOUTHERN POLICY.

The new administration policy toward the South is very sharply outlined by Mr. Hayes in an authorized interview published in the Washington National Republican. This interview was prepared at the White House, and has all the importance and gravity of a special message. The President was first asked whether the Southern outrages had been discussed in the Cabinet. He replied: "That is a mistake. The time for discussion has passed. It is now too late for anything but the most determined and vigorous action. This determination was reached several days ago, and the deliberations of the Cabinet on the subject since then have been comparatively brief and confined mainly to the consideration of the duty of the Attorney General in the premises."

To these remarks the interviewer replied approvingly, and then asked the President how he accounted for the result of a solid South in the face of the pledges of fair dealing by Southern Democrats.

The President—That question leads directly to a discussion of what has been latterly termed the Southern policy of the administration. When that policy was inaugurated, it was with an earnest desire to conciliate the Southern leaders, to round off the sharp angles of sectional differences, and to soften the asperities of political strife. No one will deny that an attempt to enforce this policy was earnestly made, nor that it was carried out with a conscientious desire to accomplish the result for which it was inaugurated. Of the personal and partisan sacrifices I made in this effort and of the consequent interruption of certain relations which had previously existed between myself and some of my supporters I have nothing to say just now; but it appears that the leaders who made these pledges either did not exert themselves to keep them or were unable to do so. In fact, I am reluctantly forced to admit that the experiment was a failure. The first election of importance held since it was attempted has proven that fair elections with free suffrages for every voter in the South are an impossibility under the existing condition of things.

Interviewer—And the Republican party, except in North Carolina, has thereby been wiped out of existence in the South.

The President—It is not because the Republican party appears as the sufferer in these results that I complain. It is because free suffrage and freedom of political rights have been interfered with that I am called upon to take cognizance of these disturbances. If the facts were exactly reversed, and if Republicans had permitted these outrages upon Democrats, my duty would be the same. It will not do for me, or for any official before whom these questions may come, to treat them otherwise than in a non-partisan way. The partisan press will naturally take a partisan view, and I will be held to account for aiding Republicans—stalwarts, I mean—in flaunting the bloody shirt, as it is called.

Interviewer—Yes, it has been charged that you are following in the footsteps of your predecessor.

The President—Well, I expect all that and more. I can't expect to hold the office I do without being kicked and cuffed a little, you know; but for all that I shall do my duty as Chief Magistrate of all the people, Democrats and Republicans alike; and if, in the faithful execution of the laws, justice shall demand the punishment of this man or that man, whatever his political connections may be, I shall not be deterred by partisan criticism. All that I know is that great crimes have been committed and it is my duty to aid in the punishment of the criminals.

Interviewer—And you do not think the Southern leaders—Democrats, I mean—who have promised so often to protect the blacks of the South in the exercise of their rights are responsible for these crimes?

The President (frankly)—I do not. Gov. Hampton, for example, has tried repeatedly to repress the violence which has characterized the campaign in South Carolina, and failed. Such Republicans as Judge Lee, Mr. Rainey, and ex-State Senator Swails, of that State, have advised me of these facts. They say that Hampton cannot control the "red shirts," as they call them, and they have repeatedly informed me of the speeches he has made deprecating violence in the conduct of the campaign, and it appears that Gov. Nicholls, in Louisiana, is earnestly opposed to these proceedings in his State.

Interviewer—Then the officers of the Department of Justice have been instructed to carry out the proceedings already begun against these depredators?

The President—Not only against those who have already been arrested, but against others who will soon be arrested. It is proposed to make a clean sweep of this business and exhaust every legal resource in the execution of justice. The integrity of American citizenship has been grossly violated in widespread localities. It must and shall be vindicated.

THE EAST.

A NEW YORK dispatch announces that Mrs. A. T. Stewart has offered a reward of $25,000 for the recovery of the body of her late husband, stolen from the family vault in St. Mark's Church grave-yard, and the conviction of the thieves.

ANOTHER extraordinary robbery has startled the citizens of New York. Johnson's jewelry store, in Eighth avenue, was robbed one evening of $2,000 worth of clocks and watches, in the presence of a large number of passers-by. Six highwaymen took possession of the store, and, while four of them, with cocked revolvers, covered the proprietors and spectators into silent submission, the other two smashed the large plate windows and packed in bags the stock of jewelry exposed. The plunder was then loaded into a wagon and driven rapidly away.

CAPE MAY, the favorite summer resort on the New Jersey coast, has been visited by a disastrous conflagration. Eight hotels and a large number of cottages were destroyed. The loss is estimated at about half a million dollars....Benj. Hunter, who some two or three years ago murdered his friend and partner, John M. Armstrong, of Camden, N. J., for the purpose of obtaining possession of an insurance policy for $2,500 on Armstrong's life, has been sentenced to death.

JUDGE BARRETT, of New York, has refused a mandamus to compel the Comptroller to pay another $1,000,000 of the city's money toward the completion of the Brooklyn bridge, on the ground that the $8,000,000 voted by Brooklyn and New York have been already paid.

THE association of New York bankers known as the Clearing House, at a meeting in that city last week, decided upon the following plan of action after Jan. 1, 1879: 1, Decline receiving gold coins as special deposits, but accept and treat them only as lawful money; 2, Abolish special exchanges of gold checks at the Clearing House; 3, Pay and receive balances between banks at the Clearing House either in gold or United States legal tenders; 4, Receive silver dollars upon deposit only under special contract to withdraw the same in kind; 5, Prohibit payments of balances at the Clearing House in silver certificates or in silver dollars, excepting as subsidiary coin in small sums, say under $10; 6, Discontinue gold special accounts by a notice to dealers on the 1st of January next to terminate them.

EDISON has been compelled, on account of ill-health, to give up work for a while.

THE WEST.

A DISPATCH from Pembina, Dakota, says W. H. Anderson, the Dallas (Tex.) Sheriff, in pursuit of William Collins, of the famous band of train-robbers in that region, found the man in Pembina, and attempted to arrest him. Collins resisted, and the man exchanged fire with fatal effect, both dropping dead in two minutes.

NORMAN B. JUDD, ex-member of Congress from Illinois, died suddenly at his home in Chicago a few days ago....George Fessler, defaulting Treasurer of Stark county, Ohio, has been sentenced to twelve years in the penitentiary at hard labor, and to pay a fine of $60,000 and costs of prosecution.

ZANESVILLE, Ohio, is agitated by another case of body-snatching. At an early hour in the morning a policeman had his suspicions aroused at the movements of some parties in a wagon. The officer gave pursuit, when the whole party jumped from the vehicle and fled. The wagon was found to contain the bodies of four prominent and respected citizens who had been buried in Woodlawn Cemetery within a few days.

THE SOUTH.

GOV. WADE HAMPTON, of South Carolina, has met with a serious accident. While hunting, his mule became frightened, and, the bridle breaking, he leaped from his saddle. By the fall his right leg was broken in two places, the bone protruding, and his ankle was badly hurt.

MAJ. H. W. Beantham, of the Howard Association, of New Orleans, who is now assisting in making a report of the work of the Howards during the epidemic of 1878, expresses the opinion that there have been during the past four months 40,000 cases of fever in New Orleans and vicinity.

A DISPATCH from Jacksonville, Fla., says Judge Witherspoon, of the Canvassing Board of Madison county, has been arrested by a Deputy United States Marshal on a charge of receiving and destroying one of the precinct returns, which gave Bisbee 57 majority. He was held in $3,000 bail. Samuel Smith (colored), an inspector in the same county, charged with not doing his duty, was committed to jail. The same dispatch states that a Deputy United States Marshal had also arrested the entire Canvassing Board of Alachua county for violation of the United States election laws, in throwing out three precincts on technicalities, by which Hull, Democrat, is elected to Congress over Bisbee, Republican....A Charleston (S. C.) dispatch says: "Three managers of the election at one of the polls were arrested to-day under warrants from the United States Commissioner for obstructing the Deputy Marshal at the recent election and refusing to publicly count the ballots. They gave bail. Other arrests are expected. Eighteen citizens of Orangeburg have been arrested for obstructing United States officers in the discharge of their duties at the election. They gave bail."

WASHINGTON.

IT is stated that after the 1st of January next, as an aid to the resumption of specie payments, it is very likely the Treasury Department will send, to parties desiring it, the standard silver dollar, in quantities of $1,000 and upwards, free of transportation, in exchange for like sums of greenbacks deposited with depository banks.

LORD SALISBURY'S reply to Secretary Evarts' note upon the fishery question has been received at Washington. It is friendly in tone, says a Washington telegram, "and the impression created by it upon our Cabinet was of an exceedingly pleasant character. It frankly concedes the strength and justness of Mr. Evarts' position in regard to treaty obligations and rights being superior to the local legislation of one of the English provinces. Lord Salisbury says in substance that if there has been such local legislation or local interference as conflicts with the grants of the treaty these obstacles to the United States receiving its full benefits should, of course, in justice be removed."

SECRETARY SHERMAN contradicts the report that the Treasury Department has ordered the withdrawal of $1 and $2 bank notes or greenbacks from circulation.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says "there will be a movement as soon as Congress meets to make the trade dollar a legal tender, and to thus add $20,000,000 to the circulation. The treasury authorities claim to have information that almost the entire bulk of the trade dollars are in the hands of the brokers, who are holding them expecting legislation which will increase their value 10 per cent.

GENERAL.

IT is reported from Pittsburgh that Thomas A. Scott, the railway magnate, was stricken with paralysis just before his recent departure for Europe, and that his mind is seriously impaired.

THE Chicago Times says a pooling contract has been arranged for East-bound freight by the managers of thirty-four Western roads. A Commissioner is to be appointed to run the pool, with power to enforce its decisions.

THE Secretary of State has addressed a second communication to the United States Minister to England on the subject of the Halifax fishery award. Mr. Evarts takes direct issue with the finding of the Halifax Commission, both as to the amount of the award and the manner in which it was rendered, holding that the sum of $5,500,000 is an outrageous and utterly indefensible price to set upon the benefits of twelve years of fishing in Canadian waters, and that, if paid at all by the United States, it must be regarded as covering the value of those benefits in perpetuity, and not for any term of years; and also making the objection that the adoption of this or any other award by the commission by a bare majority is not in accordance with the terms of that clause of the Washington treaty providing for such a commission, and that the award is therefore not binding upon this Government.

THE Joint Congressional Committee to investigate the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, having returned from the Pacific coast, adjourned at Omaha, last week, to meet again in Washington on the 25th inst. The members returned to their respective homes. They have traveled 12,000 miles, have heard the testimony of 150 persons, and have visited quite a large number of tribes of Indians. They will submit their report to Congress in January.

A NATIONAL convention for the promotion of American commerce was held in Chicago last week, George W. Morris, of Kentucky, presiding. A large number of representative business men were present, either as delegates or lookers-on, from the different sections of the country, and numerous resolutions looking to the further extension of American commerce to South America and Mexico were introduced and nearly all adopted.

THE International Humane Society has just held its annual session at Baltimore, Edwin Lee Brown, of Chicago, presiding.... The steamer Ludwig sailed from Jersey City for Rotterdam nearly two months ago, since which time no tidings have been received of her. It is feared she has been lost....The American Woman's Suffrage Association has just held its annual meeting at Indianapolis. Mrs. Rebecca N. Hazzard, of Missouri, was elected President for the ensuing year.

THE Hewitt Labor Committee held a day's session at Scranton, Pa., last week. Five witnesses were examined, who traversed the entire range of grievances which the mining and laboring classes are suffering under. Hickey, a prominent labor reformer, spoke of the hard times, and attributed their cause to several things—freight discrimination, coal combination, and over-population. He would have Congress take up the matter of railroads. They should be compelled to relinquish their mining business. The committee then adjourned sine die.....The reply of Lord Salisbury, British Secretary of Foreign Affairs, to Secretary Evarts' second dispatch on the fishery question has been published. The communication, though entirely courteous, earnestly insists upon the construction which the British Government has put upon the treaty of Washington.

POLITICAL.

THE Communists, or Socialists, polled nearly 8,000 votes in the city of Chicago, and elected four members of the Legislature, at the recent election.

OFFICIAL vote of New Hampshire for Governor: Head, Republican, 30,086; McKean, Democrat, 31,089; Brown, Greenbacker, 6,286; Prohibitory and scattering, 122. Head's majority, 486.

A WASHINGTON dispatch states that at a Cabinet meeting the other day "an interchange of opinion took place concerning violations of the election laws, especially in Louisiana, during the recent elections, the United States Attorney for that State having furnished a list of cases showing personal violence, intimidation, etc. The sentiment of the Cabinet was that all such violations should be inquired into with a view to the punishment of the offenders."

THERE will be a meeting of the Executive Committee of the National party in Washington on the 30th of November. It will remain in session one week, Gen. Butler, Peter Cooper, Dr. De La Matyr, and other leading Greenback lights will be present. The purpose of the meeting is to prepare a plan of campaign for 1880.

WASHINGTON telegram to Chicago Tribune: "Senator Conkling's friends admit that he is endeavoring to place himself in cordial relations with the administration, his ultimate purpose being the Presidential nomination in 1880. Harmony has become his watchword, and he will not be apt to make any further trouble in the matter of the New York Custom House nominations."

TOUCHING the recently-published newspaper interview with the President, Washington dispatches state that "the authoritative statement is made that, while the President does not consider his Southern policy a failure, he is convinced that the Southern leaders have not fulfilled their pledges; that citizens of the United States in the South have been deprived of their rights, and that it is to be the policy of the administration to protect citizens of all parts of the Union in their rights, irrespective of the political party with which they may act. The technical statement that the President considered the Southern policy a failure is untrue. Whatever the Southern policy may have been, or may have accomplished, the President has always determined to protect the citizens of the United States in their rights of suffrage under the constitutional amendments so far as it lies within the province of the executive power to do so. What is called the new departure in the treatment of the South means that the President had been compelled to change his estimate of Southern politicians, and to some extent of the Southern people."

FOREIGN.

HEAVY snow-falls are reported in Northern and Eastern Europe....A Berlin dispatch says: "The Emperor has sent an Adjutant from Coblen to congratulate Prince Bismarck on his daughter's marriage, and to present him with the Grand Cross of the Order of the Red Eagle, decorated with a scepter and crown, the only Prussian decoration which Prince Bismarck had not before received, and which is said to have been only once before conferred, namely, by Frederick William IV. on Minister Manteufel."

THE Paris Exposition was finally closed on Nov. 10. The receipts since the opening have been 12,653,746 francs....Advices from Cape Town, South Africa, report that fighting has been renewed in Transvaal. A British detachment of 500 strong was compelled to retreat. The Kaffirs then made a night attack, but were repulsed with heavy loss....A general amnesty has been granted by the Emperor of Austria to the Bosnians....A Bombay dispatch says hopes are entertained at Simla of a peaceful solution of the Afghan difficulty. It is supposed Russia is exercising a pressure upon the Ameer with this object. The Ameer, moreover, despairs of success against the British commander....The Benhar Coal Company, of Edinburgh, Scotland, with a total share and debenture capital of £734,000, has announced its inability to meet its payments....A London dispatch says that nearly one-half of the cotton-mills in the Ashton-under-Lynn district have stopped work, in consequence of the depression in the trade, and many are only running on short time.

MONCASI, who recently attempted to assassinate King Alfonso of Spain, has been tried at Madrid and sentenced to death.... Midhat Pasha has been appointed Governor General of Syria.

A LARGE number of Japanese soldiers who were concerned in a conspiracy against the Government were recently tried by court-martial at Tokio. Fifty-three of them were condemned to death and shot in batches of fifteen. Others were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.....Emperor William, of Germany, will soon resume the reins of government.....English manufacturers are still cutting down in hours and wages.

THE only two Fenians now confined in England are shortly to be released....The exiled German Bishops have expressed to the Pope a wish that an equitable arrangement may be reached between Germany and the Vatican. ....Intelligence has reached London of another Kaffir outbreak in South Africa, and that the British force on the frontier was in danger of annihilation unless promptly reinforced....There have been violent storms throughout Italy, causing the Tiber and other rivers to overflow their banks. Much property has been destroyed.... It is announced from Rome that the Vatican has decided on a complete separation from the Ultramontane party in the German Parliament.

Born in a Balloon.

There is one child that has started pretty high in the world. As the captive balloon in Paris was mounting to the clouds two weeks ago a young lady in the car was taken ill. A doctor from Tarbes, who happened to be in the car, saw her safely delivered of a boy before the balloon reached the ground, when a cab took the mother and child to a hotel. The husband, son of one of the leading Manchester manufacturers, presented the doctor with $100 for his services.

A GIRL in Hillsboro, N. C., poisoned a young man because he refused to make love to her.

Three Editions of a Dream.

Three editions of the same dream in the watches of a single night, with a sequel early in the forenoon, is a psychical phenomenon worth studying. A correspondent of the Reading Eagle relates that Anthony Romig, a well-to-do farmer living about four miles from Morgantown, woke up his wife and told her a dream that made the very strings of her nightcap stand on end. He had dreamed that some thieves had stopped his son, who had started on his way to market shortly after midnight with a wagon-load of produce, and robbed him of his cash and severely beaten him. His wife replied that it was only a dream, and advised him to go to sleep as soon as he could. He did so, but soon after again gave her another poke, and said that he had had the same dream. She begged him to try and compose himself and go to sleep, which he did. A third time the dream was repeated, on which he rose, and, it being then after 3 o'clock, dressed himself. At breakfast his vision was the sole subject of conversation. In the forenoon word was brought to the house that his son had been attacked on the road, robbed of his money and severely injured. Mr. Romig described minutely the appearance and dress of the two men who in the dream had attacked his son. When he was taken to the spot he pointed out the very place where he had seen the wagon stopped and his son assaulted by the robbers.

The American Oyster.

Our American oyster surpasses in size and fatness all other oysters of the world. He is found all along our seashore, from Maine to Mexico, but in greatest abundance and most generous growth from Long Island sound to Chesapeake bay. On the Pacific coast the oyster is not nearly so large as on the Atlantic, although the little oysters of California are much esteemed for their flavor. In England oysters are both small and scarce. It is not mere size that makes the oysters desirable. Some very large oysters are flabby and watery, and make poor eating. Until comparatively recent improvements in rapid transportation, the luxury of fresh oysters was a rarity to dwellers in the inland parts of the United States. Even as far East as Pittsburg "shell oysters" were so far from common as to be the subject of special signs in restaurant windows. The general public who ate oysters partook of the canned article. Twenty years ago people advertised as a special attraction at church fairs and other festivals such canned oysters as people of the seaboard would consider hardly fit to offer dogs. Since that time great improvements have been made in canning oysters, and they now may be quoted as really fit to eat when freshly-opened ones cannot be procured. An immense canned business is done in New York, as well as in Baltimore and Philadelphia.

A Piece of Elephantine Surgery.

During the blow on Wednesday morning a large lantern on top of the elephant house in the Zoological Garden was demolished, and pieces of the heavy glass fell into the cage occupied by the elephants. The female elephant, in walking around the inclosure, trod on one of the fragments, and, being in her bare feet, received a painful wound. She set up a howl that made the roar of the storm seem the sighing of a zephyr by contrast. Her companion was found to be comforting her as well as he could by trying to roar louder than she did, and by letting a half-pint tear of sympathy now and then roll down his trunk, which was wound tenderly about the wounded leg of the prostrate beast. Dr. Henry C. Chapman, surgeon to the Zoological Society, was summoned. She was secured by ropes and thrown on her side on a bed of straw—treatment which evoked from her some extra efforts in the roaring line. When Dr. Chapman began to probe softly around the wound with a lancet, however, she showed an elephant's instinctive respect for a friend by ceasing her bellowing and holding the injured foot perfectly still. Dr. Chapman successfully removed the fragment of glass, stopped the flow of blood from the wound, and, in a few minutes, the huge beast was again on her feet, looking as amiable as a lamb.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Wise Bishop.

One day a young man preached before the Methodist Conference on Lot's wife. He had a poor time; once or twice it seemed that he would completely break down. He saw the old Bishop before him, and that made matters worse. "Bishop, what do you think was the matter with me this morning? I can do a great deal better than that." "Quite likely. Trouble was in your subject. You had better let women alone. I never knew any good come to a Methodist minister from meddling with other men's wives."

POLYGAMY.

Address of Non-Mormon Women to the Women of the United States.

To Mrs. Rutherford B. Hayes and the women of the United States:

It is more than thirty years since polygamy was planted on the shores of the Great Salt Lake. During these years Congress has utterly failed to enact efficient or enforce the existing laws for the abolition of this great crime, and we believe that more of these unlawful and unhallowed alliances have been consummated in the past year than ever before in the history of the Mormon church. Endowment houses under the name of temples are being erected in different parts of the Territory costing millions. It is impossible to ascertain the exact number of polygamous marriages, for they are consecrated in these endowment houses, an institution no Gentile is permitted to enter, where the brotherhood and sisterhood are sealed and bound by oaths so strong that even apostates will not reveal them, and to mention which witnesses on the witness-stand unblushingly perjure themselves, and on the jury violate all considerations of oath and duty. Considering all our surroundings, polygamy has never taken such degrading and debasing form in any nation or among any people above conditions of barbarians as in Utah. It is degrading to man and woman, a curse to children, and destruction to the sacred relation of the family, upon which the civilization of nations depends; and there are things which cannot be repeated or printed that reduce the system to the lowest form of indecency. That it should be practiced in the name and under cloak of religion, that an apostle-polygamist with four acknowledged wives is permitted to sit in Congress, only adds to the enormity of the crime, and makes it more revolting to our common Christian principles. Our Legislature is composed almost entirely of polygamists and members of the Mormon priesthood, and they have thrown around polygamy every possible safeguard in their power, and right of dower has been abolished to break down the distinction between lawful wife and concubine. The Mormons are rapidly extending their settlements into Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, and Wyoming. They have the balance of power in two Territories, and are, without doubt, plotting for it in the other. We call upon the Christian women of the United States to join us in urging Congress to empower its courts to arrest further progress of the evil, and to delay the admittance of Utah into the sisterhood until this is accomplished, and we ask you to circulate and publish our appeal, in order to arouse public sentiment, which should be against an abomination that peculiarly oppresses and stigmatizes woman. It is our purpose to ask names to a petition designed for Congress, and we hope also that every minister of the gospel will commend it to the women of his congregation, and that all Christian associations will do what they can to obtain signatures. With the cordial co-operation and the concerted action of the Christian women of our land, we may confidently hope that the great sin of polygamy may be abolished.

Inconvenient Questions.

A gentleman recently invited a well-known lecturer to his home to take tea. Immediately on being seated at the table, a little daughter of the gentleman said to the guest, quite abruptly, "Where is your wife?" The gentleman, having recently been separated from the partner of his life, was surprised and annoyed at the question, and stammered forth the truth, "I don't know." "Don't know?" replied the infant terrible. "Why don't you know?"

Finding that the child persisted in her interrogations, despite the mild reproof of the parents, he concluded to make a clean breast of the matter, and have it over at once. So he said, with calmness, "Well, we don't live together. We think, as we can't agree, we'd better not." He stifled a groan as the child began again, and darted an exasperated look at her parents.

But the little torment would not be quieted until she exclaimed: "Can't agree! Then why not fight it out, as pa and ma do?"—Providence Journal.

FARM NOTES.

FARMERS should meditate on what they read, and read that they may have food for meditation.

THE Colorado potato-beetle is announced as having arrived at Soowalki, in Russian Poland.

A SHEEP-COLLAR with sharp points projecting has been invented as protection against dogs, which seize their victims by the throat.

THIS is an Indiana correspondent's way of utilizing apple juice: "Place a strong iron-bound cask in a warm place and put into it in the first place a few gallons of the best vinegar. Then add once a week an average of a pint of cider to each gallon of vinegar till the barrel is full. This will give the very best vinegar."

COTTAGE CHEESE.—Take thick milk, slice it each way with a knife, set it in a warm place so that the whey will leave the milk, but do not let it get warm enough to harden it; then put it in a cloth, and after it has well drained hang it up; with the hands rub it to a smooth paste, add a very little fine salt; mix well; serve with thick cream, sweetened and flavored with vanilla.

EGGS hatch much better if the nests are made by placing a cut of turf and a shovel of mold, sand or ashes in a box or basket, and on this a little short straw, than if straw only is used. In this way a convenient hollow is obtained that prevents the eggs rolling out from under the sitting hen. In cool weather the eggs are kept of much more equal temperature than in nests made simply of loose straw.

TO PREVENT cholera among poultry, a supply of good, clean sand and gravel should always be accessible to them. The water they drink should be in an iron vessel, or a quantity of rusty nails should be kept constantly in it. Of course the water should be pure and renewed every day. Before adopting this course, so-called cholera took one-half the flock, but now it never makes an attack, even under circumstances more unfavorable than formerly.

PERSONS who have been dilatory in taking into the house their tender plants and now find them occasionally frost-bitten, may be glad to know that English gardeners thaw them out successfully (when not too severely nipped) by sprinkling them copiously with cold water. It is useless, however, to apply the cold water before the temperature rises above the freezing point, for then the cure will be worse than the disease. The disastrous effects of late spring frosts may be remedied in a similar manner.

MANY farmers throw away the old brine in beef and pork barrels and fish packages. Sometimes they throw it on a grass patch or under a tree and kill the vegetation. If they desire to kill vegetation with it they should pour it on patches of burdocks or thistles, or around trees that are worthless. It is better, however, to use it for manure, in which case it should be applied with judgment. It may be applied to asparagus beds or quince trees liberally, but to other things sparingly. Ordinarily the best disposition to make of it is to pour it on a manure or compost heap and allow it to be absorbed.—Exchange.

A FARMER of Bucks county, Pa., has been bucking against the inevitable for sixteen years. In 1862, when there was such a rapid rise in the market price of all agricultural productions, he held for higher figures, and still held, till at last the tide turned. This seems to have filled him with the gall of bitterness, and, though continuing to give careful culture to his 133 productive acres, he keeps on putting hay and grain in stacks, of which there are now 103 on the place, in all stages of decay, some rotted down to half their original bulk, and with a luxuriant growth of weeds on top. If in good condition, it is estimated they would now be worth from $16,000 to $20,000. The case is one for suggestive and mournful study.

WE have just been reading an account of experiments made in England in dibbling wheat and cultivating it like corn, with the hoe. The seed was planted in drills, one foot apart, and four inches apart in the rows. The spaces between the drill rows were carefully cultivated until the plants had attained sufficient growth to interfere with the work. The result was eighty-four bushels per acre. Another experiment, with rows six inches apart and four inches apart in the rows, resulted in a yield of sixty-nine bushels per acre. Other cases might be given in which even greater success attended this method of growing wheat. We would suggest that our readers test this method on a small patch of ground—a square rod or more. Have it accurately measured, put it into the best condition, and see what your land is capable of producing. If it will pay we ought to know it, and we will never find out without trying. You may be compelled to cultivate the square rod with the hand hoe; but, if it is found to increase the crop to an extent that will justify the work, implements for cultivating by horse power will speedily be forthcoming.—Ohio Farmer.

The Champion.

"The laziest man I ever seed," remarked Jim Blodgers, "were a man that the boys used to call Old Laydown. They couldn't find out his fust name, 'cause he were too lazy to recollect it. He b'longed to the same sekr't society as me, and we paid him $10 a week sick benefits for three weeks. Said he hurt his leg. Found afterwards by the doctor and a dozen eye-witnesses that he injured his shins by walkin' up ag'in' a cobweb. Fact. Lazy? You bet he were easygoin'. One afternoon he fainted in the street and were brought home to bed. We weren't to be catched this time on benefits. Said he had fainted from loss of blood. Doctor examined him and found mosquito-bite under his left ear. Fact. You bet he took things comfortably. He used to lure a small boy in warm weather to hold his straw for him while he sucked his sherry-cobbler. Axed me one day if there weren't some cheap way of workin' a tooth-brush by machinery. Said he wished he could eat without workin' his jaws—feared they'd wear out too soon. Fact. Well, I don't mind if I do."—Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

IF pictures are hung by worsted cord, brush it often with the broom that is kept for walls. Lambrequins, if of woolen fabric, ought also to be brushed every few days.

A DUTCH paper states that the flavor of coffee may greatly improved and its delicate aroma increased by adding a little bicarbonate of soda to the water with which it is made.

CANARY birds that are troubled by mites may be made comfortable for months by washing their cage thoroughly in scalding vinegar and water. The mites haunt the bird at night and the cage by day.

INDELIBLE ink stains may be removed by first soaking them in strong salt water and then washing them with ammonia. The salt changes the nitrate of silver into chloride of silver, and the ammonia dissolves the chloride.

DR. G. F. WATERS, of Boston, has found in the juice of the milkweed a remedy for suppurating wounds. The time of healing varied from twenty-four to thirty-six hours; but in each instance new skin formed completely over.

TO MAKE buckwheat cakes mix one gill of wheat flour with one quart of buckwheat flour, add one large teaspoon of salt, then add gradually a scant quart of warm water mixed with one gill of yeast. Let it rise all night, and in the morning add a quarter teaspoon of carbonate of soda and bake immediately.

TO PRESERVE apples nothing more is necessary than to lay them in bulk upon a dry floor, and throw a thin linen cloth over them before the frost sets in. This is the method practiced in North America and Germany, and is found to be effectual. Care must be taken, however, that no spoiled or bruised fruit is laid down, as it will soon corrupt and destroy that which is sound.

I ALWAYS root my geranium slips in August, and in the fall they are ready to bud, provided the pot is not very large. I use peach cans for mine. They bloom all winter, provided you don't let them freeze. Then, in the spring, I take them out of the pot and put them in the ground, and they will bloom all summer and fall. I have geraniums in bloom all the year round. Keep them as free from dust as you possibly can. No flower will bloom unless it is kept clean.—Letter to Chicago Inter Ocean.

GINGER BEER.—Crushed white sugar, twenty-eight pounds; water, thirty gallons; yeast, one pint; best powdered ginger, one pound; essence of lemon, half an ounce; essence of cloves, a quarter of an ounce. To the ginger pour half a gallon of boiling water, and let it stand fifteen or twenty minutes. Dissolve the sugar in two gallons of warm water, pour both into a barrel half filled with cold water, then add the essence and the yeast; let it stand half an hour, then fill up with cold water. Let it ferment from six to twelve hours, and bottle.

PEACH MARMALADE.—We took the small and imperfect clings, as they would not admit of being removed from the stone in pieces of uniform size and shape, pared them, and, after cutting from the stone, placed in a porcelain kettle with one pint of water to two quarts of fruit; boiled until soft; took off, and put through a sieve with a wooden potato-masher. Then returned to the kettle, adding one pint of sugar to every quart of prepared fruit; brought to a boil, and sealed while hot. It can be sealed without the addition of the sugar, and when eaten let it be sweetened with white sugar to the taste, and it greatly resembles fresh peaches.

A Nation of "Esquires."

They patronize "Esquire" at Washington, and to such an extent that we are in the way to become a nation of Esquires. The title is an absurdity here, and an American is no more entitled to it than he is to that of Baronet or that of Knight. To write Sir Peter Snooks would be just as correct as to write Peter Snooks, Esq. With the exception of official titles, all titles are improper in this country. It is proper to speak of his Excellency the Governor of Massachusetts, because that is our Chief Magistrate's constitutional designation; but it is incorrect to speak of his Excellency the President of the United States, for the Chief Magistrate of the nation has no such title. The plainest form of address is the best, and Peter Snooks should have neither "Mr." nor "Esq."—neither handle nor tail—tacked to his name, even though he be the master of many millions.—Boston Traveller.

Football by Electric Light.

The intense interest aroused by the application of the electric light to novel uses was strikingly illustrated recently in Sheffield, where nearly 30,000 people gathered at Bramal-lane Grounds to witness a football match played under that light. The match, which was played by two teams belonging to the Sheffield Football Association, commenced at half-past 7 o'clock. The electric light was thrown from four lamps, thirty feet from the ground, and the rays, which were of great brilliancy, lighted nearly the whole of the ground, the players being seen almost as clearly as at noonday. The brilliancy of the light, however, dazzled the players, and caused strange blunders. The illuminating power was equal to that of 8,000 standard candles.—London Times.

SABBATH READING.

The Harvest Sheaf.

There's a lonely sheaf in the harvest field
 That weary hands have bound,
And left for many a day and night
 Alone on the stony ground.
Some tired heart must have vainly looked
 For a harvest of peace and love,
To gather at last but the hopes that died
 'Neath the clouds which gathered above.

All over the world there are harvest fields,
 And in some the reapers are gay;
In others the sowers with tear-blind eyes
 Turn empty-handed away.
Oh, summer, why scatter thy sunbeams bright
 Only for some who sow,
While there are hearts where the grains of joy
 Are struggling through clouds to grow!

But the lonely sheaf in the harvest field,
 That some weary hand has bound,
Will stand through shadow and cloud and rain
 Alone on the rugged ground,
Till the patient sower himself grows ripe
 For the harvest of heaven above,
And is gathered home by the Father's hand
 And saved by the Father's love.

Imitation of Christ.

DISCOURSE BY PROF. DAVID SWING, OF CHICAGO.

For I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you.—John xiii, 15.

A first remark may well be that the present age can find no higher degree of moral worth than are expressed in the words, "He was Christlike." If a great Judge, or a great statesman, or a great ruler passes away, the eulogists are happy enough if over the new grave they can say that the actions of the man were Christlike. The worth of learning, and talent, and office fades before that beauty of morals and conduct. Even Mr. Mill confessed that earth had no brighter example, and that, if any great destiny should be awaiting man, the following of Christ would lead thitherward. Such, at least, is the substance of his testimony. While the foot of man is pacing the busy streets, either in the pursuit of gold, or learning, or fame, or pleasure, he measures life by some one of those standards, but when his friend has come to the boundary, or when he is himself in the last moments, he flings away all these measurements and looks for the Christlike in the heart that is saying farewell to earth. It will be held in long remembrance of some of those faithful Howards in the South that they died in a service that was so perfectly Christlike. Their tombstones will need but one short epitaph—Here lies one who followed the example of his Master. These words connected with the year 1878 will contain all the eloquence for which human language can find expression. And who can say that it may not be one of the meanings of this August and September in our land that by their grief they shall point out to society the highest form and object of life, and declare it to be an imitation of Jesus?

The imitation of Christ involves "righteousness." There can be no valuable Christianity where the disciple differs from his Master in this particular. Righteousness is that relation of man to man upon which society is founded. Take away righteousness, and each man is at the mercy of the strongest, and the people become at once like a herd of sheep in a land abounding in lions. When one of our religious journals took, recently, the position that no Christian could take refuge in a bankrupt law and pay a small part or no part of a money obligation, it spoke with fearful closeness to what is Christlike in the world of morals. It is not to be conceived of that a Christ-man will ever see any arithmetic that can transform 10 cents into a dollar or reveal morals that can take from a neighbor and never pay back. The Christlike life, having incurred a debt, will go forward repaying it regardless of any temptation offered by an earthly and defective legislature, and will help build up the only opinion in harmony with the Master, namely: that not a bankrupt law, but death only may give a Christian release from his promises. I do not mean to imply that all persons who have taken what they call this legal refuge are hypocrites, and are unworthy of the esteem of good men. I mean only this: that they are erring Christians—Christians under a cloud—and that, as poor a'Kempis saw only a part of his Lord's character in the fifteenth century, so these other souls, living in the nineteenth, have yet failed to mark and measure the lofty morals of Jesus Christ.

Next to the righteousness seen in this example comes the subjection of the physical to the spiritual. The early and middle ages misunderstood this form of the sacred character; they exaggerated the spirituality of the Lord and His temperance in physical passions until they elaborated such frightful human beings as Bernard and St. Anthony, who annihilated at once the body and the soul. The distance between Christ's moderation and monkish denial is the difference between simple food and starvation, the difference between a cheerful hearth in a cottage and a reckless exposure, without clothes or roof or fire, to the wintry storm. The example of Jesus is that of symmetry, that of relative merit, and not that of painful, injurious self-denial. Christ ate the daily bread and drank the daily drinks set before Him, and wore the dress of His tribe, but the food and drink and the dress were under the control of a supreme wisdom. All those material things were the simple servants of the soul, as distinguished from those with whom the soul was the servant of food and the drink and the dress. In the spiritualism of Christ the body was valuable because it sustained a soul; in the fashionable world the soul was valuable because it vitalized a body—it kept organized the thing that could eat and drink and wear elegant raiment. The great Leader sustains no direct relations to food and drink and dress, but a powerful indirect relation in the fact that under His religion the mind and soul became so large that they crowded back the lower appetites, and filled with mental beauty a civilization which had once been the slave of physical display and physical happiness.

He estimates very badly the example of Christ who does not mark how it worked its way out of the room of the individual, the cell of the anchorite, and the closet of the saint, and became a vast out-door element of civilization. A civilization is nothing else than an accumulation of thoughts and feelings, which belong no longer to an individual, but to a century or an epoch. Antonine the Pious, dressed plainly, and ate and drank moderately, but his ideas reposed in himself; the world around was all enveloped in physical ends and tastes. A civilization is a public wealth of ideas, a fortune like that of a certain railway king, which cannot be carried away by the dying individual. The one man is gone, but the iron rails reach out for thousands of miles, and the wheels run day and night. He cannot convert the track back to a wilderness, nor put the wheels back into the iron mountains. Not a single train was delayed by his death, not a flying engine uttered one scream more or less, when the railroad prince died. Thus civilization is an idea, or a group of them, breaking away from one mind, and becoming the irrevocable words of humanity. These ideas are a network around and over the nation. Their wheels roll over all hearts by day and by night, and not the death of one man or of millions of men, can remand back from being these inwoven forms of thought. Christ, in establishing a religion, passed beyond a single house or home, and through the long and prosperous career of that religion has entered into a civilization, and thus his spirituality lies upon the world to-day, lies as sweet as Shakspeare's moonlight, which slept upon the bank.

To illustrate the relations between such a philosophy as that of Jesus and the decline of physical or material aims and ends, note the changes in the costumes of men which have taken place since Christianity began to enlarge the estimate of mind. Not all of such reform must be placed to the credit of religion, for common sense would perhaps have grown, even had Christianity never appeared; but this I claim, that, such a being as Jesus Christ pervaded the nations, "common sense" found in him a powerful leader and companion, who helped win a quicker and broader victory. The purple and fine linen have disappeared from the dress even of Kings, and gradually all men have put aside rings and jewels and personal decorations. The men of the nineteenth century attire themselves with perfect plainness, compared with all the civilized past, because gradually has escaped the long-hidden fact that a man is great only in mind and soul.

Next to the influence of Christ upon the mind to exalt it, and upon the body to simplify its forms of life, may be reckoned His power to group men into one brotherhood. He is always binding into one family earth's alienated and scattered children. He, beyond all others, binds states and races and families and souls into one. He lifts men up above that wherein they differ, and brings them to that height where all agree. In the stricken places in the South the faithful black and the faithful white, the rich and the poor, are just now blended into one humanity, because the solemnity of the hour has rendered contemptible their little disagreements, and has rendered visible the soul in which all men are one. Thus for many ages Christ has moved among men a sublime spectacle, almost a solemn unfolding of those vastnesses where all are brethren. His divineness has given Him authority; His philosophy has given Him intellectual weight; His love has made the world love Him in return; His death has drawn perpetual tears; His doctrine of heaven and hell has lent to His name deep solemnity. By this power He lifts the millions above their dissensions, and enthrones them amid their harmonies.

What the world most needs now is a form of religion which shall melt all its articles into one. "The limitation of Christ"—not that portrayed by a'Kempis, which imprisoned the Divine One in a gloomy cavern, but that broader imitation which shall not silence a single impulse of the heart or mind, but which shall build the many stones of the soul's temple up in one cemetery. It is to be hoped that our world is approaching a Christianity which will furnish the marts of business and the halls of legislation, and the chairs of Presidents and the thrones of Kings with Christian-like men. It is to be hoped the time is coming when a man will be estimated not by his riches or his station, but by his absolute moral worth, and that no epitaph for the dead will read more eloquently the simple words, "His life was Christlike."

Father Against Son.

The contest for a seat in Congress between two brothers named Wood in the Troy (N. Y.) district brings to mind a very notable political campaign that took place in Montgomery county, Pa., in 1865 or 1866. The county was very close, and a few votes changed either way was liable to change the result. The Bender family was numerous and influential, and the Democrats thought to capture it by nominating for Judge the head of the law firm of Bender & Son. The Republicans, however, nominated as his opponent the son, and the contest opened with the Bender family divided. The son was elected by two or three votes, after a very spirited contest, especially among the female members of the family.—Akron (Ohio) Argus.

CHUN PUT NAM, the Chinese Consul General, who is to watch over the interests of his countrymen in California and the Territories, is said to be the richest foreigner who has ever come to the Pacific coast to live there for any length of time; and he is not only possessed of vast wealth, but also of a high reputation for integrity and ability. He has, it is said, already taken steps to abolish the six Chinese companies, which for years have ruled over the Chinese in San Francisco.

LAST autumn Mr. Gladstone visited Ireland for the first time, and this autumn has paid his first visit to the Isle of Man. Lord Beaconsfield has never been in Ireland, nor, doubtless, in the Isle of Man. The latter remains to all intents and purposes independent, has its own Parliament, and does what it pleases. There are excellent hotels, unsurpassed bathing beaches, a mild, agreeable climate, and all things very cheap.

JOURNALISTIC AMENITIES.

What an English Magazine Has to Say About American Newspapers.

Newspapers of the Eatanswill type still flourish in America, where no esprit de corps restrains the gentlemen of the press from indulging their propensity for unpleasant personalities at the expense of their fellows. It is so much easier to be-fool and be-rogue a writer than to reply to his arguments. Neither reason, wit nor humor is required to call an opponent a journeyman grammar-smasher; to say that "his nasty little soul is not large enough to fill the socket of a mosquito's eye," or describe him as "a beery tatterdemalion," "a grit factotum," and epithets of a similar nature. Charging a rival writer with drunkenness is a favorite method of abuse. Commenting on an article in the Virginia Enterprise, the Nevada Tribune speaks of it having been "written, no doubt, under the influence of a regret for a misspent life. It is on temperance. Our virtuous and abstemious friend goes on in true teetotal style, and really writes a most excellent temperance sermon. We feel happy to know that our esteemed friend of the Enterprise has determined to keep others from falling."

A California editor invested in a mule, and the fact was chronicled under the heading, "Remarkable instance of self-possession." Said one Milwaukee editor of another: "He is one of the few journalists who can put anything in his mouth without fear of its stealing anything;" and when a Western editor wrote, "We cannot tell a lie; it was cold yesterday," his rival quoted the remark with the addition, "The latter statement is incontrovertible; but the former?"

Said an Idaho journal: "The weather has been hot again for the last few days; the only relief we could get was to lie down on the Portland Herald and cover ourselves with the Portland Bulletin—there is a great coolness between them." This kind of coolness often brings about an amusing interchange of incivilities.

A Michigan journalist declared in his paper that a certain editor had seven toes. The slandered man thereupon relieved his mind in a "leader," denouncing the statement as unwarranted, and its author as devoid of truth and a scoundrel to boot. The offending gentleman replied that he never wished it to be understood that all the seven toes were upon one foot; and the disgusted victim of the "sell," appealing to his readers, asked: "Are these subjects which ought to be discussed in organs whose duty it is to mold public opinion?" Another worthy, of whom an enemy affirmed that he had just made the strange discovery that he could wag his left ear, did not condescend to impeach the truth of the statement, but made matters even by declaring the man who gave it currency had both his aural appendages under such control as to be able to fan himself with them in hot weather.

An American writer is only too pleased to catch a brother tripping. When one journal talked in its leading article of "buttered thunder," a contemporary politely desired to know if that had any affinity to "greased lightning;" forcing the explanation that by a typographical error "*m*uttered thunder" was the article intended.

When a Western editor wrote, "We are living at this moment under a despotism," his opponent kindly explained: "Our contemporary means to say he has lately got married." A newspaper writer asserts that his ancestors had been in the habit of living a hundred years; to which another responds: "That must have been before the introduction of capital punishment." The proprietor of a Western journal announced his intention of spending $50 on "a new head" for it. "Don't do it," advised a rival sheet; "better keep the money, and buy a new head for the editor," that gentleman being evidently, in its opinion, "a young man of frugal mental capacity," as an Oregon journalist delicately termed another.

Mr. Gumbs sought to enliven the good people of Cambria county, Pa., through the medium of a lively, spicy, vigorous, fearless and entertaining paper called the Cambria Milky Way. He succeeded in making things lively—very lively—for himself. In his first number he called the editor of an older journal names which we cannot repeat. He stigmatized the Mayor as a corrupt magistrate, whose torments from mental remorse were only surpassed by the physical agony he endured as the consequence of his depraved debauchery. He mildly alluded to the Postmaster as an official Dick Turpin, whose peculations could only be compared to the terrific robberies committed in times past by those Spanish buccaneers whom he so closely resembled in general character; and finished off by delicately announcing that a well-known young lady, in rejecting a certain young man, had done the wisest thing possible under the peculiar circumstances of the case. In the next issue of the Milky Way its patrons were informed that the editor had found it impossible to go out to collect news items, because the Mayor, the editor of the Cambria Mercury, the Postmaster, Alexander Jones, and a number of other individuals, were sitting on the curbstone and roosting around on the back fence with shotguns and other murderous weapons, and looking as if they were in earnest! That same night Mr. Gumbs slipped down on a water-spout and departed for Kansas—more fortunate than his brother out in the far West, whose organ, in announcing its own demise, said: "Our editor has lately disappeared. According to the latest information he was last seen under a tree, slightly raised above certain persons who were pulling at a rope"—a way of stating Lynch law that could hurt nobody's feelings, while, as a friendly tribute to the departed, it was almost as touching as the Foxtown Fusilier's: "We stop the press with pleasure to announce the decease of our contemporary, Mr. Snaggs, the editor of the Foxtown Flash. He has now gone to another and better world. Persons who have taken the Flash will find the Fusilier a good paper."

THE Countess Bismarck, the only daughter of Prince Bismarck, was lately betrothed to the Count Kuno de Rantzan, of a Schleswig-Holstein family. The young lady was engaged two years ago to the Count Eulenburg, who died o typhoid fever.

Truth fears nothing but concealment.

The essence of true nobility is neglect of self. Let the thought of self pass in, and the beauty of a great action is gone, like the bloom from a soiled flower.

With love the heart becomes a fair and fertile garden, glowing with sunshine and warm hues, and exhaling sweet odors; but without it, it is a black desert covered with ashes.

If you would be exempt from uneasiness, do nothing which you know or suspect is wrong. And if you wish to enjoy the purest pleasure, do whatever is in your power that is right.

Wit loses its respect with the good when seen in company with malice; and to smile at the jest which plants a thorn in another one's breast, is to become a principal in the mischief.—Sheridan.

Impassioned eloquence is hardly an eccentricity; but no profession has furnished grander specimens of eloquence than the ministerial. When Whitefield preached in New York to the sailors he closed with the following bold apostrophe: "Well my boys, we have a clear sky, and are making fine headway over a smooth sea, before a light breeze, and we shall soon lose sight of land. But what means the lowering of the heavens and that dark cloud arising from beneath the western horizon? Hark! don't you hear the distant thunder? Don't you see those flases of lightning? There is a storm gathering! Every man to his duty! How the waves rise and dash against the ship! The air is dark! The tempest rages! Our masts are gone! The ship is on her beam-ends! What next?" The listening tars, reminded of the former perils of the deep arose and with united voices exclaimed: "Take to the long boat!"

Sorrowing Households.

Not a hearthstone shall you find on which some shadow has not fallen, or is about to fall. Further than this, you will probably find that there are but few households which do not cherish some sorrow not known to the world; who have not some trial which is their peculiar messenger, and which they do not talk about except among themselves some hope that has been blasted; some expectation dashed down; some wrong; either real or supposed, which some member of that household has suffered; trembling anxieties lest the other members will not succeed; trials from the peculiar temperament of somebody in the house of environment that touches it sharply from without; some thorn in the flesh; some physical disability that cripples our energies when we want to use them the most; some spot in the house where death has left his track, or painful listening to hear his stealthy footsteps coming on.

Friendship.

Man is not, neither can he be, influenced by a more pure and holy sentiment than true and unchanging friendship It is more than mortal. It is sweet emanation from heaven itself. Perhaps there is nothing in creation's wide domain with which man is so intimately connected, of so much intrinsic value, that throws over his pathway while he tarries here below, such brilliant and dazzling beams of celestial light and wraps around him such glowing beauties of resplendent glories as genuine, uncontaminated friendship. It towers in sublimity and native grandeur far above the dark and frowning clouds of envy, and hatred, and malice, and the foul breath of malignant slander. It throws around the object of its kind affection and regard its mighty power and willing protection, using its shield to ward off the shafts of the wicked, and puts forth its giant arm and snatches from the very jaws of the ruthless enemy the subject of its warm love and tenderness.—Selected.

The Floor of the Ocean.

Here is an end to all romance about hidden ocean depths. We can speculate no longer about peris in chambers of pearl, or mermaids, or heaped treasures and men's bones whitening in coral caves. The whole ocean floor is now mapped out for us. The report of the expidition sent out from London in Her Majesty's ship Challenger has recently been published. Nearly four years was given to the examination of the currents and floors of the four great oceans of the world. The Atlantic, we are told, if drained, would be a vast plain, with a mountain range very nearly the middle running about parrallel with our coast. Another range crosses it from Newfoundland to Ireland, on the top of which lies a submarine cable. The ocean is thus divided into three great basins, no longer "unfathomable depths." The tops of these sea mountains are two miles below a sailing ship, and the basins, according to Reclus, are fifteen miles, which are deep enough for drowning, if not for mystery. The mountains are whitened for thousands of miles by a tiny, creamy shell. The depths are red in color, heaped with volcanic masses. Through the black, motionless water of these abysses move gigantic abnormal creatures which never rise to upper currents. There is an old legend coming down to us from the first ages of the world on which these scientific deep sea soundings throw a curious light. Plato and Solon record the tradition, ancient in their days, of a country in the western seas where flourished the first civilization of mankind, which, by volcanic action, was submerged and lost. The same story is told by the Central Americans, who still celebrate, in the fast of Izcalli, the frightfully cataclysm which destroyed this land with its stately cities. De Bourbourg and other archæologists assert that this lost land extended from Mexico beyond the West Indies. The shape of the plateau discovered by the Challanger corresponds with this theory What if some keen Yankee should yet dredge out from its unfathomed slime the lost Atlantis?

This is the time of the year to travel and talk with a cold. My cold is very obstinate, but I am holding it in check, I think, or rather my friends are holding it in check for me. I paid but little attention to it at first, but as the cough increased in severity and the hoarseness became worse, Mrs. Clements, who is a homeopathist, gave me Bryonia and phosphorus; the day following I went to Middleton, and good Mrs. Brown gave me boneset syrup; then, on the advice of a traveling friend, I took to horehound and liquorice, but on reaching Erie Mr. Thornton changed my treatment and prescribed choride of potash lozenges. I next sent for a regularly ordained physician who gave me a box of pills and a box of tablets and a receipt for two dollars. That evening old Mrs. Bryan sent me a bottle of carbolic acid in solution, and Mr. Gregory sent me a carbolic tube. I inhaled the bottle and swallowed the tube and experienced great relief. I then resolved to refuse any further treatment, but Mrs. Dawson persuaded me with a very harmless and pleasant preparation of glycerine and sugar,* and at night, I still further submitted to a cold water compress. The next day a woman gave me a dose of medicine in the street car, and I munched Brown's bronchial troches all the rest of the day, and declared I would try no more prescriptions. That very night I was tucked into bed by friendly hands, and filled to the chin with hot lemonade. To-day, I am wearing a liver pad around my neck. To-morrow—but alas, who can tell what to-morrow will bring forth?—Extract from the dairy of a reformed missionary.

DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

—Alabama has an Anti-Equestrian Society, based on the belief that horses were never made to carry burdens on their backs, and that is extremely cruel to ride them.

—Paper teeth are a new invention in Germany, and a number of specimens were displayed at the late paper exhibition in Berlin. They are warranted fully as durable as any other teeth.

—The Russian leather, so much prized for durability and grateful smell, is prepared by the use of the essential oil of the birch tree. Bales of it will lie for a long time in damp warehouses without spotting or being otherwise injured by mildew.

—Two mounted constables were taking a thief to prison in Nevada. As they were going through some lonely woods the constables' horses fell to the ground, the cords of the hind legs having been cut by ambushed friends of the thief, and he escaped.

—Women often dress as men for the sake of getting employment, but why a man lived for years in Dakota in petticoats, passing as "Mrs. Noonan," and doing laundry work for soldiers at Fort Lincoln, is not explained. His fraud was not discovered, but he confessed it on his deathbed.

—A Boston woman induced her rather weakminded husband to will all his property to her, and then locked him up in a woodhouse to die, while she received the courtship of the man whom she intended to marry when she became a widow. In her absence, the husband's friends made a search and found him emaciated, drugged and nearly dead. She was arrested.

—At a political gathering in Buffalo the other day, where a large number of smokers were together, one gentleman remarked that it was no pleasure to him to smoke in the dark; and the discussion spreading, it was discovered that nobody had ever heard of one who did enjoy a pipe or cigar when he couldn't see the smoke. Is this universal experience?

—James Miller started from Ohio with his family for the far west, traveling in an emigrant wagon drawn by two horses. In Missouri one of the horses died, and he stole another to replace it. He was arrested, convicted, and sentenced to eight years imprisonment. Lately his term expired, and he resumed his journey, his family having lived in the neighborhood of the prison while waiting for him to be released.

—To prove the value of lands along the line of a Texas railroad, the company have been exhibiting the products of the country through which it passes. Apples ripening all along from May to Christmas, in seventy-three varieties, form part of the collection; also clusters of grapes fourteen inches long; peaches in one hundred varieties, weighing from ten to fourteen ounces each, and over one hundred kinds of valuable wood.

—A young woman in Atlanta, Ga. bought from an elderly woman her son, for the purpose of making a husband of him. The young man was twenty years old; the mother, however, sold him for a muslin dress and a few yards of calico. The trade was made on Sunday and the man was to be delivered three miles from the purchaser's house on the Tuesday following: and, although that Tuesday was a bad day, the fair purchaser walked in the rain to get possession.

—Jealous husbands and wives will be interested to learn that the post office ruling to the effect that under the law a husband cannot open his wife's letters nor a wife the letters of a husband is not to remain a dead letter. Col. L. V. S. Mattison, an active Republican politician, has been arrested in Oswego on a charge of opening letters addressed to his wife. A suit for divorce is pending between the parties, and Mr. Mattison intercepted the missive for the purpose of procuring evidence. Mrs. Mattison made the complaint on which the warrant for arrest was issued.

—A Jamaica (L. I.) tombstone has an inscription as follows: "Here lieth the body of Lewis Galdy, Esq., who died on the 22nd day of September, 1737, aged 80. He was born at Montpelier, in France; which place he left for his religion, and settled on this island, where, in the great earthquake, 1672, he was swallowed up, and by the wonderful providence of God, by a second shock, was thrown out into the sea, where he continued swimming until he was taken up by a boat, and thus miraculously preserved. He afterward lived in great reputation, and died universally lamented."

Too Much Politics.

[Fort Wayne Sentinel.]

Just after our recent elections the Sentinel complained that we have too much politics and too many elections in this country. We are glad to see that the press generally is taking a similar view of the case. The Boston Journal is discussing the subject with much ability, and advocates lengthening the terms of governor and state officers in that state. There are now three states—Maine, Massachusetts and Rhode Island—which elect their governors annually. In sixteen states the governors are elected for two years, in three states for three years, and in sixteen states for four years. In thirty of the thirty-eight states the legislatures are elected biennially, and in twenty-eight of these the legislatures meet biennially. Experience has shown that biennial sessions of the legislature are frequent enough. The Sentinel would favor a change giving all state officers a four years' term and making them ineligible for re-election. We should also like to see the adoption of the amendment now pending changing the election in Indiana from October to November, which would involve a large saving of trouble and expense. The tendency is toward fewer elections and longer terms of office. Within proper limits the tendency is a good one. It is not well to be plunged out of one campaign into another, or to be always in a state of frantic excitement about politics. The American people need long intervals of rest, and if they get them they will be better fitted, when a political emergency arises, to cope with it. By all means let us have less politics and fewer elections.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case. Try it Sold by W. McIntyre & Son.

THE SUN FOR 1879.

THE SUN will be printed every day during the year to come. Its purpose and method will be the same as in the past: To present all the news in a readable shape, and to tell the truth though the heavens fall.

THE SUN has been, is, and will continue to be independent of everybody and everything save the truth and its own convictions of duty. That is the only policy which an honest newspaper need have. That is the policy which has won for this newspaper the confidence and friendship of a wider constituency than was ever enjoyed by any other American Journal.

THE SUN is the newspaper for the people. It is not for the rich man against the poor man, but it seeks to do equal justice to all interests in the community. It is not the organ of any person, class, sect or party. There need be no mystery about its loves and hates. It is for the honest man against the rogue every time It is for the honest democrat as against the dishonest republican, and for the honest republican as against the dishonest democrat. It does not take its cue from the utterance of any politician or political organization. It gives its support unreservedly when men or measures are in agreement with the Constitution and with the principles upon which this Republic was founded for the people. Whenever the Constitution and constitutional principles are violated—as in the outrageous conspiracy of 1876, by which a man not elected was placed in the President's office, where he still remains—it speaks out for right. That is THE SUN's idea of independence. In this respect there will be no change in its programme for 1879.

THE SUN has fairly earned the hearty hatred of rascals, frauds and humbugs of all sorts and sizes. It hopes to deserve that hatred not less in the year 1879, than in 1878, 1877 or any other year gone by. THE SUN will continue to shine on the wicked with unmitigated brightness.

While lessons of the past should be constantly kept before the people, THE SUN does no propose to make itself in 1879 a magazine of ancient history. It is printed for the men and women of to-day, whose concern is chiefly of to day. It has both the disposition and the ability to afford its readers the promptest, fullest and most accurate intelligence of whatever in the wide world is worth attention. To this end the resources belonging to well-established prosperity will be liberally employed.

The present disjointed condition of parties in this country, and the uncertainty of the future, lend an extraordinary significance to the events of the coming year. The discussions of press, the debates and acts of Congress, and the movements of the leaders in every section of the Republic will have a direct bearing on the Presidential election of 1880—an event which must be regarded with the most anxious interest by every patriotic American whatever his political ideas or allegiance. To these elements may be added the probability that the democrats will control both houses of Congress, the increasing feebleness of the fraudulent administration, and the spread and strengthing everywhere of a healthy abhorance of fraud in any form. To present with accuracy and clearness the exact situation in each of its varying phases and to expound according to its well known methods, the principles that should guide us through the labyrinth, will be an impotant part of THE SUN's work for 1879.

We have the means of making THE SUN as a political, a literary and a general news aper, more interesting and more useful than ever before; and we mean to apply them freely.

Our rates of subscription remain unchanged. For the DAILY SUN, a four page sheet of twenty eight columns, the price by mail post paid, is 50c a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight page sheet of fifty-six columns, is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year postpaid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages fifty-six columns, is $1.00 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10.00 we will send an extra copy free. Address,

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

The Governor of Pennsylvania has signed the death warrant of Jack Kehoe, the leader of the Molly Maguires in Pennsylvania.

A New York dispatch states that Judge Hilton offers a reward of $50,000 for evidence that will secure the arrest and conviction of the five persons believed to have been engaged in the robbery of the Stewart vault, or he will pay $10,000 for the arrest and conviction of any one of them.

Thomas H. Powers, senior member of the firm of Powers & Weightman, the largest manufacturers of quinine in the United States, has just died in Philadelphia, leaving a fortune of $10,000,000.

THE WEST.

Chicago children are happy. After being deprived of "Humpty Dumpty" for nearly a year, Manager Haverly has taken pity on them, and the present week little Humpty "sits on the wall" at his theater. The Nick Roberts' Troupe present the ever-welcome pantomime in a manner that causes the average boy to shout with hilarity.

Quite a severe shock of earthquake was experienced in the region of St. Louis on the night of Nov. 18, and on the following night the country round about Cairo experienced a similar unpleasant visitation.

A horrible coal-mine explosion occurred at Sullivan, Ind., last week. Seven miners were killed outright by the accident, and half a dozen more are so badly injured that they cannot long survive.

THE SOUTH.

The Supreme Court of Florida has decided that the three precinct returns rejected by the Alachua County Canvassing Board are good and valid, and has issued a peremptory writ to the board to canvass them. These precincts gave Bisbee a majority of 450, and, by their rejection by the Canvassing Board, elected Hull (Democrat).

WASHINGTON.

Commissioner Raum has received a telegram from Charleston, W. Va., stating that 900 indictments had been found against illicit distillers and other violators of the revenue laws in that State.... Sixty-six clerks on the contingent rolls of the Patent Office were discharged last week for lack of funds. One-half of them were women.

The Treasury Department has begun the purchase of gold bullion at Denver, Col., purchasing directly from the miners, paying them in greenbacks. The department expects to buy at least $20,000 a week for some time, and to extend its purchases to all the gold of the Black Hills country. The Treasury Department will pay miners the full value of their gold, charging only the cost of assaying and sending it to Philadelphia to be coined at a transportation rate of 58 cents per $1,000, or as third-class mail matter.

A Washington dispatch says there now remains outstanding of consols of 1865, $67,000,000; consols of 1867, $310,000,000, and consols of 1868, $37,000,000. Of other bonds now outstanding bearing 6 per cent. interest there are the three issues of absolute bonds, loans of 1881, which amount to $283,000,000, so that the entire amount of 6 per cent. bonds now outstanding is $688,000,000, nearly one-third of the entire bonded debt.

The leading silver men in Congress, reports a Washington correspondent, declare with great emphasis that they, and those who acted with them, will oppose any attempt to either limit the coinage of silver or to restrict its legal-tender quality.

Gen. Sheridan and Gen. Gibbon, in their annual reports to the General of the Army, made some serious charges against the efficiency and integrity of the Indian service, as administered by the Interior Department. Secretary Schurz has taken notice of those charges so far as to indite a sharp letter to the War Department defending the Indian office against what he terms the unjust attacks of Sheridan and Gibbon. He calls upon those officers to make good their charges by specific proof—failing to do which, he suggests that they would do well to hold their peace.... It is announced that the work of redeeming legal tenders in coin on and after Jan. 1, 1879, will be confined to the New York sub-treasury alone, and will not be undertaken at the various Western and Southern sub-treasuries.

GENERAL.

A serious railway disaster is reported from Florenceville, New Brunswick. A passenger train ran off the track, took fire and was burned. Two persons were killed, and a child was burned to death. Many others were badly burned and crippled, some fatally.... Burned: Several stores and cottages at Atlantic City, N. J., loss $50,000; fifty business houses in the town of Bradford, Pa., loss $150,000; a number of shops in the Virginia State prison at Richmond, loss $65,000; a block of business buildings in Knox, Ind., loss $30,000.

The valley of the Cauca, in New Grenada, South America, has suffered fearfully from grasshoppers. All the growing crops have been completely ruined.... Advices from Chili state that serious riots, resulting in the killing and wounding of eighty people, occurred in Santiago.... Advices from Salvator state that the volcanoes of Isalco and Santa Ana are in a state of tremendous activity.... A letter from Panama says: "The intelligence of a severe earthquake in the southern portion of the republic is fully confirmed. The destruction appears to have been complete. The loss of life and property is very great."

The National Type-Founders' Association met at Cleveland, Ohio, last week, to arrange rates for the future. A slight reduction in the price of type was decided upon.... The twelfth annual session of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, has just been held at Richmond, Va. Twenty-five States were represented by eighty delegates. Reports of officers represent the order in a flourishing condition throughout the country.

Some time ago Charles W. Angell, of Chicago, treasurer of the Pullman Palace Car Company, ran away with over $100,000 of that corporation's funds. News has lately been received of his arrest in Portugal, and that $80,000 of the stolen money was captured with him.

POLITICAL.

Judge Buckner, of Missouri, who was one of the most vigorous Greenback Congressmen during the last session, says that he does not think there will be any attempt, at financial legislation this winter. The action of the banks, however, in discriminating against silver he thinks will further intensify the feeling against the national banks, and may lead hereafter to some aggressive legislation.

The official count in Pennsylvania gives Hoyt, Republican, for Governor, 319,567 votes; Dill, Democrat, 297,060; Mason, Greenbacker, 81,758; Lane, Prohibition, 3,653. Republican plurality, 22,507; total vote in the State, 702,[illegible].... The Republican vote in sixty-nine counties in Michigan from which official returns have been received is 124,969; Democratic, 77,9[illegible]; National, 74,011.... Official returns from sixty-two counties in Kansas give the Republican candidates 70,787; Democratic, 38,323; Greenback, 21,421.... Returns from all the counties in New York give a Republican plurality of 37,616; Republican vote, 388,676; Democratic, [illegible]; Greenback, [illegible]; Prohibition, 3,533.... The Republican majority in Illinois, on the State ticket, is about [illegible]. The total Greenback vote is about [illegible].... The Detroit Free Press places the National vote in Michigan at 75,000, as against 5,000 two years ago, and estimates that 23,500 Republicans and 41,500 Democrats of 1876 voted the National ticket.... The Cameron element in Pennsylvania, it is stated, favors Blaine as a Presidential candidate.

The whole Greenback vote of Pennsylvania is [illegible]. The counties where they polled their largest votes were: Allegheny, 7,734 votes; Schuylkill, 6,508 votes, and Luzerne, 6,066 votes.... The Legislature of Georgia has re-elected John B. Gordon to the United States Senate.... The official Republican majority in Minnesota is 19,084.

A Washington dispatch says "the Committee on Elections in the next House will have a great deal of work to do. It is already known that contests will be made from nine States. In view of the remarkably close vote in a number of districts, and the informality of certificates, the Clerk of the House will have a very responsible duty in making up the roll of the next House of Representatives."

A Lieutenant of police has been found guilty, in the United States Court at Cincinnati, of violating the Federal Election laws by interfering with a Supervisor in the discharge of his duties.

FOREIGN.

The Afghans are massing their forces to oppose the English invasion.... The Russian army is to be still further increased.

King Humbert, of Italy, has made a narrow escape from death at the hands of an assassin. While riding in a carriage at Naples, a man rushed upon the young monarch with a dagger, and succeeded in inflicting a scratch upon his left arm, and slightly wounding Signor Cairoli in the left thigh. The King displayed great coolness, and struck the assassin on the head with his sword. Signor Cairoli seized him by the hair. The assassin was immediately taken to the guard-house. The Queen and her son, who were in the carriage with the King, displayed much courage. The assassin's name is Giovanni Passanante. He is by occupation a cook, and is 29 years old.... It is reported from Constantinople that, after long discussion in Cabinet council, Safvet Pasha persuaded the Turkish ministers to recommend a settlement of the Greek frontier difficulty on the basis of the Berlin treaty, and that the Sultan will accept this advice.

There is great popular indignation throughout Italy over the attempted assassination of King Humbert. Several letters from members of the International Society have been found at the would-be assassin's abode, and more Internationalists have consequently been arrested. The King had, previous to the attempt on his life, received two letters intimating that it would be made.... A Florence dispatch says that during the passage of the procession in honor of King Humbert's escape, down the Via Nazionale, a bomb was thrown among the corps of veterans and exploded. Two men were killed and several slightly wounded.... A collision between the police of Lemberg, Austria, and a procession which had been forbidden resulted in the killing of thirteen of the oldest and most influential citizens of the town.

Passanante, the International who made the assault on the King of Italy, confesses that he intended to kill the young monarch, and if he had had money enough to buy a revolver he would have succeeded. He says he had no personal feeling against the King or Government, but intended the assassination as a means toward a universal republic.

Cable dispatches announce that war has actually commenced between Great Britain and the Ameer of Cabul, and that the Indian troops are fairly in motion, their objective point being the mountain passes on the northern border of Afghanistan.... Appalling distress and destitution exist among the mechanics and laborers of Sheffield, England, in consequence of the business depression. Hundreds exist in tenements without clothing or furniture, all having been sold or pawned to procure food. They are without fuel, and dependent upon the charity of neighbors.

The Halifax award was paid on the 21st of November. Payment was made by draft for the full amount of $5,500,000, which had been previously placed in the custody of Minister Welsh, at London, the transfer being ordered by cable.

In a debate in the French Chamber of Deputies, the other day, Gambetta accused De Fourton, lately a member of the ministry, of falsehood. A challenge followed, and the pair met at a convenient place near Paris. They were placed at the safe distance of thirty-five paces apart, and exchanged shots. Of course neither was hurt. The affair was then "amicably adjusted," and both parties left the field satisfied.

Colorado Ranch Customs.

Every ranchman is armed with a repeating rifle, a shot-gun and a revolver—although many do not carry their revolvers. I hardly ever carry mine. In the event of a quarrel an unarmed man stands more show for his life, for, no matter how great a desperado may be the man, he never shoots an unarmed man. The question is asked: "Are you heeled?" meaning armed. On your answering to the contrary they will immediately put up their weapons. Stealing here is sure death to the one getting caught at it. Two weeks ago a party of us went up into the mountains prospecting for minerals in a new gulch, and on our way found a man hanging to a tree who had been dead some days, with a paper pinned on his shirt simply stating, "Horse thief." These things strike terror to the thieves. Three nights ago three desperate-looking men aroused me in the night, and said they were looking for a horse-thief and were tired. I invited them to stay all night. They immediately made themselves at home, cooking their own supper, I finally falling asleep, leaving them playing poker, $1 a corner. They departed early the next morning, and, I learned, came up with their man and shot him. It is remarkable to think that a man may shoot his neighbor and nothing be said, but let him steal anything and he must die. It is one of the peculiar ideas of the men on the borders that every man must protect his life, and not the law. But there is a good class of people now settling up this country, slowly but sure, and their Eastern ideas will bring law and order.—Cor. Rochester Herald.

Sometimes the services of a civil engineer are cheap at twice the money. A Henderson county farmer worked four days digging a ditch to drain a bit of low meadow of his own into a big pond on another man's farm. And when the ditch was opened the pond just walked right into the meadow and located about twenty acres of swamp right where the hay used to grow. And the farmer was just the maddest man.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

To Cure Weak Eyes.—Take rose leaves, the more the better, and put them into a little water, then boil; after this strain it into a bottle and cork it tight. You will find this liquid very beneficial in removing redness and weakness from the eyes.

Sprains.—If the sprain is nothing more than a sprain—that is, if no bones are broken or put out—wrap the part in several folds of flannel which has been wrung out of hot water, and cover it with a dry bandage, and rest it for some days or even weeks. Entire rest at first, and moderate rest afterwards, are absolutely necessary after a sprain. If it is in the ankle, the foot should be raised as high as may be comfortable; if in the wrist, it should be carried in a sling.

Offensive Breath.—From six to ten drops of the concentrated solution of chloride of soda, in a wine-glass full of pure spring water, taken immediately after the ablutions of the morning are completed, will sweeten the breath, by disinfecting the stomach, which far from being injured will be benefited by the medicine. If necessary, this may be repeated in the middle of the day. In some cases the odor arising from carious teeth is combined with that of the stomach. If the mouth is well rinsed with a teaspoonful of the solution of the chloride in a tumbler of water, the bad odor of the teeth will be removed.

Oranges and Health.—A distinguished physician has said that his practice would be gone if his patients were to form the habit of eating a couple of oranges before breakfast each day, from February to June, and he adds that the ill-effects from the eating of fruit result from its being done to excess or at improper times. As a rule, people do not eat sufficiently of fruit, the medicinal action of whose acids is cooling and corrective. As for the matter of improper time, authorities agree that pumpkins should not be eaten out of hand later than 11 o'clock at night, and "nice old plums" should be avoided twelve months in the year.

Pneumonia.—There are few diseases in which special treatment adapted to individual cases is more important than in pneumonia; for the measures that would be salutary in one case would be injurious, or even fatal, in another. In the belief, therefore, that such general directions as could be given in the limited scope of this article would be likely to do quite as much harm as good, the few remaining remarks shall refer to the office of nurse rather than to that of doctor: The patient should lie with his shoulders somewhat elevated. In protracted and debilitated cases, his position should be changed occasionally, in order to prevent the settling of the blood in any part of the lungs. Care should be taken to expose the chest and body as little as possible. The air of the sick-room should be of a uniform temperature, and warm, yet purified by sufficient ventilation. In early stages, what little diet the patient can take should be farinaceous drinks, such as gum-water, barley-water, thin gruel, to which may be added a decoction of ripe fruit, or the juice of oranges or fresh grapes, the indigestible portion being carefully rejected. As the fever abates, give tea, with toasted bread or crackers, or a little rice; then Indian mush, milk, broths, lighter meats, eggs, oysters. In this, as in other diseases, nature powerfully aids a sound constitution, and, with good nursing, little medical treatment will very often suffice.

Cure for Colds in the Head.—The London Spectator says: It would seem that the cure for those worst of small nuisances, colds in the head, which Dr. Ferrier suggested in the Lancet, might prove to be a remedy of very great value. It is a snuff—a white powder—composed of the following ingredients: Hydrochlorate of morphia, two grains; acacia powder, two drachms; trisnitrate of bismuth, six drachms—the whole making up a quantity of powder, of which from one-quarter to one-half may safely be taken, if necessary, in the course of twenty-four hours. Dr. Ferrier says that with this snuff he has twice cured himself of very violent colds, once, indeed, by taking trisnitrate of bismuth alone, which is a very powerful remedy for catarrh of the mucous membrane, and is the most important ingredient in this snuff. Dr. Ferrier mentions two others who were cured of violent colds by the same snuff, and to these instances we may add that of the present writer, who, having a very violent cold coming on, with the sensation of weight in the temples and the usual disagreeable feeling in the throat, as well as ordinary catarrh, made trial of Dr. Ferrier's remedy one evening, and got up on the following morning completely free from cold, which has not since recurred. The snuff, instead of increasing the tendency to sneeze, almost immediately begins to diminish it.

British Marine Disasters.

According to the annual English wreck register, no less than 4,164 wrecks, casualties, and collisions are reported as having occurred on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom during the year 1876–7, comprising 5,017 vessels, exceeding the number in 1876–7 by no fewer than 563, and of the total 1,120 are set down as serious casualties. Of course, with 641,099 ships entered inward or cleared outward from the ports of the United Kingdom during the past year, it is inevitable that large numbers of disasters should take place, but the great increase on the previous year is certainly a startling circumstance. The loss of life was necessarily augmented by the increase of disasters, and accordingly one life paid the penalty out of every twenty-two ships wrecked. Of the 4,164 wrecks, casualties and collisions which occurred, no fewer than 847 are set down as being in the latter category, the majority of which are said to have been plainly avoidable.

Left Handedness.

In a paper read before a Dublin scientific association, on "Left-handedness," it was related that no instance had ever been brought forward of a left-handed race or tribe. The oldest pictorial illustrations do not differ in this respect from the habits of to-day. Left-handedness once begun in a family is likely to run in it. It was very common in the tribe of Benjamin. It is a curious fact that left-handed persons have the left foot one-eighth to one-third of an inch longer than the right.

Our Silver Mountains.

One of these mountain ranges, looking west to the snow-capped Sierras, with their zones of black pines, and gazing at the glistening deserts on the east, split and torn with deep canons, pitted with the traces of volcanic disease, alike valueless to herder or farmer, has become famous the world over, and has made the nation rich. Other ranges, still to the east, have won a lesser fame and smaller wealth. Here in this waste and stricken land, and among these mountains, are cities, active populations and vast works; nature gone mad in stony despair that woods and fields and smiling meadows are not; civilization living in spite of nature, and wholly given up day and night to a more insane toil, knowing no Sabbaths, no rest, no night. The exhaust steam from hundreds of engines waved its white banner in sunlight and starlight alike; the respiration of a giant by day, the fluttering ghost of toil by night. These cities, with every appliance of modern science—with hotels, theaters, water-works, schools, gas mains, and every luxury—have not sprung up here because of the beauty or convenience of the situation. There is no river, no sea, to bring commerce and the arts; no springs of health, nor even farms. These towns live and grow on the most illusive and unstable of foundations. They were built on a hope, and live on an expectation. Their hopes have been realized in a measure past dreaming or expression. Their expectations may collapse in a night. The very foundation beneath the houses is shifty and unstable. The gas mains in the street bend and snap underground, for the very mountains groan and travail because of the greed of men. Some day the town will sink into the grave that lies so deep beneath its streets, or the people will flee away to more reasonable lands, leaving hotels, halls and dwellings empty in the wilderness.

All this—these cities, this science and engineery, this gigantic capital spent in constructions more singular, more complicated and more effective than any machinery of a like nature in the world—has but one excuse: the metal hid in the heart of the mountains. These men live out their works and days for a metal at once the most universal, the most singular in its manifestation, and the most useful. These great engines and vast works are for the winning of a metal that swims in every gallon of sea water; that may hang invisible and dissolved in a glass of acid; that becomes black at the merest glance of the sun; that is now black, now white, now a mirror, and then a picture—a fit charm to wind about less stable charms, and then wedded to base metals in menial duties.

Everywhere silver is found associated with the most common things—iron, copper, sulphur, antimony and lead. It is scattered widely over the world, and is mined in Saxony, Bohemia, in Hungary and Transylvania, at Konsberg in Norway, in Spain, in Mexico, along the Cordilleras in South America, and in parts of this country, notably in Nevada, California, Utah, Montana and Colorado.—Charles Barnard, in Harper's Magazine for December.

Electric vs. Gas Light.

It is somewhat remarkable that, although gas shares depreciated greatly and suddenly in England on the announcement that Mr. Edison had effected a startling improvement in electric lighting, few persons of that country had the slightest idea of what the alleged improvement consisted. Leaving out of consideration the practicability of the infinite subdivision of the current, regarding which scientific electricians have well-known views that are not likely to be much affected now, we come to the principal part of the invention. More than a quarter of a century ago a good deal was done by inventors in this and other countries toward securing an electric light by causing a current to pass through a platinum wire, and so raising its temperature as to make it self-luminous. The results fell far short of the expectations of the sanguine experimenters. One obstacle to success was the liability of the wire to fuse. This Mr. Edison claims to have overcome by so applying a small bar that it will expand the instant the wire reaches the fusing point, and intercept the flow of the current through the wire sufficiently to prevent fusing. Actual trial must determine whether the action of this automatic bar regulator will secure a steady light. It would hardly be just to criticise minutely all that Mr. Edison is reported to have said about this and other inventions of his. But enough has been said to show that illuminating gas can be manufactured profitably yet, notwithstanding all that has been done in electric lighting. A few evenings' study of any good textbook on electricity and its applications would enable holders of gas stock, and other enthusiastic persons, to possess their souls in patience, and give them a knowledge of facts which will induce a little wholesome skepticism.—Exchange.

The Wheelbarrow Man's Tramp.

Potter, the phenomenal idiot who has been trundling a wheelbarrow all the way from Albany to San Francisco, reached his journey's end ten days ago, accomplishing the tramp of 3,995 miles in 172 days, exclusive of Sundays. His average daily walk has been about 23¼ miles, which is about 4¼ miles better than the average, which he undertook to make in order to win a wager of $1,000. The wheelbarrow which he has pushed across the continent weighs with the freight about 75 pounds. He has filled four large blank books with the certificates of his presence at various points along the road. Some of these are curious. For instance: "Potter passed through Reno, Nev., 27th of September, 1878. Success to the noble hero that has accomplished so wonderful an enterprise. Such a man should live forever and die in peace and go to heaven." Again: "May all the peace under the canopy of heaven be sent upon you, and every glistening ray of the setting sun prove you a worthy individual in the sight of your Creator."

SABBATH READING.

Trust.

Only believe that thy Father
Is guiding thy weary way—
Guiding thee out of the darkness
To the light of eternal day.

Only believe, though in darkness,
The sun is still shining above,
And the cup of bitterest sorrow
Is mixed with drops of love.

The Law of the Spirit of Life.

[From a Sermon by [illegible] George S. Merriam, of Springfield, Mass.]

The way to find God is to have God within us. It is to unite ourselves to the divinest thing we know—the law of right, the sentiment of love.

If we will thus submit ourselves to the law of the spirit of life, we shall become free indeed. Free first from the law of sin. Perhaps there has never lain upon us much sense of its bondage. If it be so, it is because we have not apprehended those heights of goodness which lie above our attainment. There is no such way to become conscious of our own impurity as to see and know the shining purity of another. If we measure ourselves in any respect by a faithful comparison with the best goodness we have known or imagined—if we test ourselves, not where we are strongest, but where we are weakest, we shall get a keen consciousness of how far we are under what Paul calls the law of sin. Or if, again, we suppose our lives as we know them laid open to the world, or to those whose good opinion we most desire; if all our meannesses, our self-indulgence, our unworthy thoughts, were known without reserve to other eyes—does not the very imagination of it impair our self-contented state? From our failures, our imperfections, our apathy and self-content, which is worst of all, there is no escape.

There is freedom, too, to be achieved from the pettiness of our lives. They never, perhaps, look so pitiful as when they seem made up altogether of little, unnecessary details. Our planting and reaping, building and buying, all the half-mechanical operations that absorb our thought and time—seem sometimes little better than the bustle of a colony of ants. When we look down upon it all from the height of some quiet, meditative hour, are we not at times oppressed with a sense of its triviality and worthlessness? Trivial and worthless it is, except as, amidst it all, we are working out something higher. But to a man whose heart is set on noble ends; one whose great aim is not to get his bread and butter but to be a man; to one who wants not just to make a profit out of his neighbors, but to serve and to help them—these details are no more trivial or degrading than the rough dress and homely tools of a sculptor are unworthy of the marble beauty that is growing under his hands. The high purpose consecrates and transfigures all—the want of purpose degrades all. I have stood in Switzerland, upon the Gorner Grat, looking upon the grandest scene in Europe. On every side a circle of towering heights look down; against the sky rise dazzling snowy summits, celestially pure, celestially tender; the Matterhorn frowns in awful majesty; vast ice-rivers sweep down toward the valley in solemn, silent march. If there be upon earth a spot that of itself has power to hush the soul with noblest emotion, it should be that. Yet there I have seen a company of travelers spend their half-hour in senseless gabble and banter, and the laughter of fools. Amid the squalid surroundings of a New York tenement-house, I have seen a poor Irishwoman living with such fortitude and faith and generosity that it was a comfort and inspiration to meet her. That brave soul ennobled its mean surroundings with a glory which not the Alps and sky could flash in upon a heart made blind and dull by ignoble thoughts.

If there dwells in us the spirit of life we shall be freed from the bondage of doubt. On how many earnest and aspiring lives does doubt throw its chill shadow! The world is crossing the flood that divides the old form of faith from the new. The rising water strikes cold to many a heart. Here and there the waves sweep men off from all moral footing. I know not that for the resolute and thoughtful there is any escape from some suffering in the transition. Could we be always sure that it is only a transition—could we know always that a better country lies waiting us—all might be easily borne. The suffering we may not decline; but safety, utter safety, we may keep through all. Life is always possible to us. Fidelity, purity, self-sacrifice—these may always be ours. Are we baffled in our search for a divine plan in the universe? Let us look nearer home; can we not find the clew to a divine plan in our own lives? Yes—there need never fail to us an immediate token of divinity. There is always, at the lowest, a duty to be done. There is always, at the very lowest, a burden to be bravely borne. There is always some one to be helped. Do we say: But this does not comfort me, does not reassure me? Then let it guide me! It is not essential that I should be always in the sunshine. It is only essential that in sunshine or in darkness my steering should be true. And I am never without a compass, while I see that there is for me a higher and a lower, a right and a wrong, to choose between.

This, at least, holds good when life is at its lowest terms. But, in a larger view, the true victory over doubt lies in a hearty devotion of ourselves to that noblest kind of life which needs no proof and no authority save that of experience to demonstrate its worth. To live bravely and manfully; to live not for self, but for wife, for child, for neighbor, for the community; to open the heart in glad recognition of all beauty; all goodness; to cherish all noble aspiration; to give ourselves up in serene confidence to the mysterious and benign power of the universe; to catch the thousand subtle impulses of divinity that flow in upon the loyal will and the loving heart, this will lift us into a realm where doubt has no power.

So, too, shall we be made pure from the fear of death. Partly, in our day, men are anxiously trying to reason out the problem of life beyond the grave. Partly they are turning away from it as hopeless, and professing to find in the activities of the present life enough to fully satisfy. The profession, I think, is not borne out by the facts of experience. It is impossible for us to be indifferent to the matter. To forecast the future, to live by regard not only to what now is but to what is to come, is the very mark of a rational being. And I think the life must be shallow that cares not what is to be its destiny beyond the little term of earthly years. The heart must be inexperienced that has not felt, beside the grave, the unquenchable yearning to look beyond it. Thought cannot pierce the mystery. Love knows the secret. Holiness knows the secret. When we get into our own life the immortal quality, we shall rest serene.

The soul's freedom is not won in a day. Precious things come slowly. We must be patient, we must be humble. The great lives which in full flower dazzle us, and sometimes discourage us as if on an unattainable height, ripened through years of sun and shade. It was in his long solitude in Arabia that Paul communed with his own heart and drew in the spirit that armed him for triumph. The life of Jesus grew in thirty years of silence before it shone upon the world. None recognizes more frankly than Paul that attainment here is slow, and at its best remains incomplete. "Ourselves," he says, "who have the first fruits of the spirit, groan within ourselves, waiting"—for the fullness of the higher life

My brother, my sister, does any sense of bondage weigh you down? Disappointment, it may be—failure, life's fair promise blighted. It may be a dull and apathetic way of life stirred with a vague yearning toward higher possibilities. It may be the darkness of a lost faith. It may be a bereavement that has emptied life. Whatever it be, the angel of deliverance stands beside you. He is perhaps in very humble garb, unsuspected of you. Some lowly duty awaits you. Some saddened life, unnoticed by your side, asks you to cheer it. Whatever opportunity of duty or of service lies in the path before you is God's own messenger. Meet it like the messenger of a King! So meet every duty, every opportunity. Find them, make them for yourself. Live no longer in solitude but in brotherhood. So shall the very spirit of God dwell in you; so in His service shall you find perfect freedom.

A Bulldozed Husband.

One of the most ludicrous and sensational results of the Congressional election in this State took place here to-day. On election day John Simms promised his wife to vote for O'Hara, the nominee of the Republican party, but he got drunk and voted for his Democratic opponent, Harris. Knowing that if he returned home he would get flogged, he took to the woods, where he remained until to-day, when, being almost starved out, he was forced to return. Simms' wife met him on the street, and, having provided herself with a heavy hickory stick, she administered a severe beating on her lord for failing to vote for the man of her choice. The woman was arrested, not, however, until she had laid about thirty lashes on the back of her husband. The case will be one for the United States courts.—Wilson (N. C.) Cor. Chicago Times.

Remember the Poor.

Gov. Hubbard, of Connecticut, in his Thanksgiving proclamation: "By a contrast which ought to be, and except for our own folly and improvidence would be, a flagrant contradiction, we are in the midst at the same time of unmeasured abundance and of pressing want. The lesson of the day, then, is not only thanksgiving to God, but almsgiving to His poor. Let not those whose homes are full of festivity and whose barns are bursting with plenty, blind their eyes to this most-evident lesson, nor imitate the rich man whose dogs were more charitable than their surfeiting master. Is not human brotherhood something more than a fable? If so, can we hope to render acceptable thanks to Him who bends his pitying ear to the cry of the raven, if we deafen ours on such a day as this to the cry of our own brethren who have need?"

Many mechanics have had their patience sorely tried when pouring lead around a wet or damp joint, to find it explode, blow out or scatter from the effects of steam generated by the heat of the lead. The whole trouble may be stopped by putting a piece of resin the size of a man's thumb into the ladle and allowing it to melt before pouring.

FARM NOTES.

PLANT all hardy fruits.

[illegible]entle and kind unto your colts.

C[illegible] up stones, stumps and rubbish.

HARVEST [illegible] sugar beets and mangels—leave the parsnips and salsify.

MANY farmers will buy seeds because they are cheap, and run the risk of half of them being worthless. In many cases they should know that pure live seeds cannot be raised, gathered and sold for such prices. Thus a bid is offered for dishonest practices, and the buyer is as culpable as the seller.

FU[illegible] pronounced by the A[illegible] the best in the market. Among its merits are: Stiff straw; does not lose any grain in handling; lies so compact that it takes less room in mow or stack than any other; weighs when clean sixty-four pounds per bushel, and makes flour excelled by none.

MR. GEO. T. POWELL, Ghent, N. Y., agricultural editor of the Chatham Courier, dries ten bushels of apples daily in a small building with racks, and heated by a cylinder stove placed horizontally, and the finished fruit looks white and clean enough to eat—which is more than can be said of that dried by sun and dust-bearing wind, and visited by egg-laying insects innumerable.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Practical Farmer says that in the spring of 1877 he planted thirty-five forest trees in his door-yard; nineteen of them standing in ground cultivated for flowers have grown, up to this time, from three to six feet; the remainder, in grass, have scarcely started at all, and "it looks as though it would take them ten years to make as much growth as the others have in two."

[illegible] an old man, and when he came in with a twenty-four-foot bamboo fish-pole and carelessly remarked that that was the kind of cornstalks his garden produced in a good season, we never said a word, but walked into the other room and registered a solemn vow never, never to print any more agricultural items if it led men into such mountainous exaggerations as this.—Exchange.

THERE is no particular reason why a cow that keeps easy is worth any more for that quality. The cow that eats the most, and, as a result, gives the most milk, is the paying animal. It pays to feed all that animals will eat and assimilate. This is the season when bran and meal are given to supplement the shortened pasture. It is well to remember that meal is fattening, while bran is milk-producing. A mixture of the two is excellent for cows that are fattening, while at the same time the owner desires to get a good lot of milk.

IN answer to a correspondent who writes that his 3-year-old colt has some wind-galls or wind-puffs on the hind legs, a little below or in front of the hocks, the National Live-Stock Journal says: "Wind-galls depend on the accumulation of synovia in the tendinous sheaths. By wet, tight linen bandaging, and a few days' rest, they may be reduced in young animals, or when not of long standing. In middle-aged animals, and when they are the result of hard work, they cannot be reduced permanently. Blisters may be required for their removal; but after any mode of treatment they will return whenever the animal goes to severe or fast work."

IT may be useless to mention the matter to the person who has left things "lying around handy" until this time of the year. But we must say again: Pick up a little, and make your farm and surroundings attractive, just once, at any rate, and see how it seems. Keep things in place; sleek up; clean, brush out the fence corners; place the tools under the shed instead of leaving them sown broadcast along the road in front of the barn, or in the fields. If an implement is used up, burn the wood work and sell the old iron before wintering it several years to allow it to decay and fall to pieces before your eyes. A little time spent in keeping things tidy produces a good effect on the children, on visitors, on strangers who pass by, and, above all, on the man who sees to the work.—Rural New-Yorker.

TAKING into consideration all the necessary comforts to the horse, no better stable floor can be constructed than pine plank, having a fall of two inches in the whole length. There should be a slight inclination toward the middle, and on no account should there be a trough or channel behind, to be a source of spavins, crooked joints, thrush, etc. A slight hollow may be made, well perforated and kept open, with advantage. At the head, place a rack (no crib on any account), have a portable feed box, and board the rack to within one foot or fourteen inches of the bottom with matched boards, planed. Let the front of the rack be about eight or ten inches wide at the bottom, and twenty inches or two feet at the top. This is my form of a rack now in use, after trying every other kind, and is by far the best, as is the floor above recommended.—Veterinary Surgeon.

The Gout.

In relation to gout, a clever and amusing writer says: "A man goes to bed happy, and is awakened after a few hours' sleep, usually between 1 and 4 o'clock in the morning, with pain in the ball of the great toe, which increases with a sense of burning and throbbing, and he finds next morning that his toe is swollen, with a deep-red shining skin. Moreover, it is so exquisitely tender that during the height of the attack he cannot bear the weight of the bed-clothes, or the shaking of the bed by footsteps in the room. There are a series of such attacks. Then the swelling abates. In a few days the skin itches and peels off, and there is in the joint only some little remaining tenderness. That is the form of a brisk first attack in a man otherwise healthy. Gout has a partiality for gnawing at a man's great toe." As for the pain, "Screw your joint," said a Frenchman, "in a vise till you can no longer bear the pressure—that is rheumatism; then give the vice another twist—that is gout." Gout, having once seized on its chosen outwork, has a tendency to fight its way upward, first storming the ankles, then making an ugly rush upon the knees, then taking possession of the hands and elbows, and sometimes striking to the stomach, when it generally proves fatal.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

FOR OILING WALNUT FURNITURE.—Raw linseed-oil rubbed with a flannel cloth, then polish with a dry piece of flannel; be careful not to put too much on.

POOR MAN'S PUDDING.—Three cups of flour, one cup of molasses, one cup of milk, one cup of suet, one cup of raisins, one teaspoonful of soda; spice to taste; boil two hours; eat with sauce.

LEMON BUTTER.—Six lemons, twelve eggs, two pounds of sugar, one-quarter pound of butter; grate the rinds, add the juice, beat the eggs; simmer over a slow fire fifteen minutes, stirring all the while.

LEMON CAKE.—Three cups of rolled white sugar, one cup of butter, one cup of sweet milk, five eggs; beat butter and sugar to a cream; dissolve one-half teaspoonful of soda in milk; sift four cups of flour and add by degrees; add juice and rind of one lemon.

STUFFED POTATOES.—Wash good-sized potatoes; bake them in the oven for thirty minutes; take them out, and with a fork carefully remove the insides, preserving the shells whole; season the potatoes with salt, pepper, and butter; fill the shells with it, put them in the oven a few minutes, and serve them steaming hot.

PUNKIES.—Punkies or any insects can be entirely destroyed by closing the apartment infested and with a small bellows used for the purpose blowing one or two ounces of insect powder into the room. Leave it closed half a day, or night, if more convenient; then open and ventilate. It will be "death to insects," but perfectly harmless otherwise.

PICKALILLY.—One-half bushel tomatoes sliced, two heads of cabbage, chopped; also, twenty-five green peppers choped, one pound English mustard-seed, two table-spoons raw mustard mixed through; put the tomatoes, cabbage and peppers in salt twenty-four hours, then add spice to suit the taste; squeeze out the salt; can with vinegar just scalded.

BOTTLING CIDER.—Cider should remain in barrels until February; bottle when the weather is clear; fill the bottles full and leave standing six hours, then put in the corks; in each bottle put a piece of rock candy, size of a pea; lay the bottles on the side; put wax over the corks so as to make air-tight; to keep cider sweet put one ounce of English mustard-seed in the barrel.

HOUSE-CLEANING.—Don't tear the house all up from garret to cellar. Clean one room and put in order before commencing another. Don't take up carpets that will possibly do with a thorough dusting; wring out a mop very dry and rub thoroughly; they will seem most as good as new. Carpets are generally worn and torn more in taking up and putting down than with six months' use in a living room.

SARATOGA POTATOES.—Peel and wash the potatoes and cut them in thin slices. This may be done with the slaw cutter; lay them in cold water until wanted, then take them out and wipe them in a towel and lightly rubbing them; have in a frying pan on the fire sufficient lard to swim the potatoes; when boiling hot drop in a few at a time, and let them brown; then take them out with a fork, so as to drain off the fat; set them in the oven to keep hot; if properly done, they will be crisp and brown.

FLEAS—HOW TO BANISH.—From an article in the Louisville Bulletin we learn that the oil of pennyroyal will certainly drive these pests off; but a cheaper method, where the herb flourishes, is to throw your dogs and cats into a decoction of it once a week. Mow the herb and scatter it in the beds of the pigs once a month. Where the herb cannot be got, the oil may be procured. In that case, saturate strings with it and tie them around the necks of dogs and cats, pour a little on the back and about the ears of hogs, which you can do while they are feeding without touching them. By repeating these applications every twelve or fifteen days the fleas will flee from your quadrupeds, to their relief and improvement, and to your relief and comfort in the house. Strings saturated with the oil of pennyroyal and tied around the neck and tail of horses will drive off lice; the strings should be saturated once a day.

Selling His Body to a Medical Student.

Moses Allen, the colored murderer of Benj. Ivey, ex-Sheriff of Glasscock county, Ga., was hanged in Gibson on the 1st inst. On the 18th ult. he contracted to sell his body to a Mr. King, a medical student of Warrenton, Ga., for $10, King having assumed a debt of his to that amount. The following is the bill of sale verbatim:

GIBSON, GA., Oct. 18, 1878.

Before and After Taking.

One of the "Before Taking" and "After Taking" patent-medicine advertisements was a straight-haired, hollow-cheeked man of 55 years transformed into a plump-cheeked, curly-headed youth of 1[illegible]. Very few medicines will effect such a marvelous change; but the most surprising thing about the medicine is the fact that it didn't cause a $200 diamond pin to sprout on the rejuvenated individual's shirt-front.—Norristown Herald.

HELD TO THE BOND.

How a Boston Youth Brought a Boston Merchant to Terms.

[From the Boston Transcript.]

This recalls an incident which happened in Boston within a few years. A young fellow, fresh as a daisy and full of enthusiasm for work, was employed by a then well-known firm in the dry-goods business. The contract was a simple one, but was a contract. On his part, the youth was to give his services and do what he was told. On its part, the firm was to pay him $100 for the first year's work and teach him the business. The money consideration was insignificant; the knowledge of the business was what the youth was after. He was put down cellar, kept at opening and bailing up boxes, running errands and sweeping the store; in a word he was made to do a porter's work, and his employers no doubt chuckled at the thought that they were getting for $2 a week work that was well worth $15. But, like a sensible fellow, the youth said nothing until the time was up. On the morning of the first anniversary of his coming to the store he was on hand early, and, when the senior partner came in, respectfully asked to be allowed to see him in the counting-room on business. The man of business acceded to the request, and the two entered the back office. "A year ago to-day," said the youth, closing the door, "I entered your service and agreed to give you my time and work. Have I done it to your satisfaction?" "Entirely so," said the merchant, "and I am willing to increase your——" "Excuse me," said the youth, "I have more to say. You agreed to pay me $100 and you have done it. You also agreed to teach me the business, and you have deliberately and knowingly broken your promise. I know nothing about the dry-goods business, and it is your fault. You have robbed me of a year's time. What do you propose to do about it?" The merchant looked at the "boy," but he did not flinch. He had right on his side, and his employer knew it. He, the man who prided himself that his word was as good as his note, had been accused by a beardless boy of having failed to keep his agreement, and knew that the charge was true. He said nothing. "What I want," said the boy, "is an extra $100 as an increase." "You have it," said the merchant. "And besides that," continued the youth, "I want $200 additional to partly make good your broken promise." Again the merchant looked in his eye, but got no comfort. "Well," he said, "it's a good deal to pay a boy the second year, but I will see about it." And he did "see about it," for the next morning the "boy" was a salesman on a $400 salary. It don't pay to rob a boy who knows his rights.

The Wrath of Jason.

Some few months prior to the unfortunate accident in the rolling mill, whereby Uncle Jason was so suddenly and unexpectedly launched into the mysterious beyond, Spikes was at his desk in the mill office, when a great noise and controversy was heard outside, as follows:

"Is you gwin to fill de contrac?"

"Who you call contrap? I done black de shoe."

"I ax, is you gwin to carry out de 'greement? You h'ar me?"

"Go way, ole man, I's got no time to fool wid you. Ef you hab dat oder shoe shine up you has to pay extra."

"Boy, ef you rouse de lion in Jason, he cotch you by dem y'ears an' brush de groun' wid you."

"Who kin?"

"Dat's me; dat's me who kin."

"You kin?"

"Jes h'ar dat W'ginny Simmon talk to Jason ob de blue grass! I ax you, boy, fur de las' time in dis wale of tears, is you gwine to shine de shoe?"

"I done shine de shoe—"

"I ax you once mo' ef you's gwine to comply wid the understandin'? Kase Jason's pizen, an' ef he lay his han' on you it waxinate you so dat you mudder 'low she's no 'lation wid you. Dat's my song."

What reply, if any, was made to the threat and peroration was not audible. A scuffling ensued, followed by a sound similar to that produced by a street-sweeping machine when in motion. And when Spikes looked out he saw Uncle Jason apparently busily engaged in examining the ventilation beneath a pile of pine boards, which stood inside the mill near the door, and heard him utter:

"Ef dat police stan' clar fur fo minit mo' dat pert boy's mudder was a widderless orphin an' de Coromer had a cash job to find out what 'ticular misery spoil de chile, o' my name ain't Jason and I ain't no Baptis'."—Graphic.

Woman's Influence.

Mrs. Augusta J. Evans, the author of "St. Elmo" and other well-known works of fiction, was on the witness stand in the Vanderbilt will trial, in New York, the other day, and in her testimony said: "The Commodore told me that the beautiful consistency of his wife's Christian character had done more to draw him to religion than all the churches he had ever been in or all the sermons that had ever been delivered; he had watched her consistent Christian home life day by day, and, while he was very fond of Dr. Deems, and admired him, and liked to see him around, his wife's Christian character had influenced him far more than any sermons he had ever listened to. In the course of his long life and career, which involved the knowledge of a great variety of character, he had found her the purest and noblest woman he had ever encountered, and she had commanded from him a reverence that no other human being ever had."

Moths.

Every housekeeper in the country knows that moths have been unusually troublesome and destructive the past season. The fact is said to be due to the abnormal mildness of last spring having set the moth-millers about egg-laying a few weeks in advance of the usual time. In ordinary years furs and clothing that are packed away before, or early in, May are safe from the pest, but last spring it is likely that many housekeepers packed away their goods with the eggs already laid therein. But it is not only in goods packed away, but on the carpets and upholstery, that moths have been unusually diligent.

Migrations of Yellow Fever.

Yellow fever, like the cholera, is one of the great migrating diseases. Starting from some point within the tropics, it travels steadily onward from point to point as long as it does not meet freezing weather; and it travels northward by preference—comparatively seldom to the southward of the zone from which it sets out. Thus Brazil has suffered comparatively little from its epidemic visitations, though, as we shall see, the disease planted its germs long ago in Rio de Janeiro, on the extreme southern limit of the tropics. But its favorite course is toward the north. "Upon our Atlantic coasts," says Dr. J. C. Nott, a careful student and observer of its phenomena, "as on the coast of the Mediterranean, it comes from time to time in one of those immense waves that know no bounds and stop at no impediments. The distance to which the disease extends seems to depend much upon the strength of the wave. It first strikes the gulf, and generally goes no farther. Occasionally it will break over the peninsula of Florida and reach Savannah and Charleston. In 1855, after many years of immunity, it struck Norfolk with full force, and only a few ripples, as in 1853, 1856, 1870, have for half a century reached the Delaware river and the Bay of New York." And the same observer, writing eight years ago, adds some words which have a grave significance to-day: "Yellow fever, after a long absence, never makes its reappearance in our Northern cities without a warning from the Gulf of Mexico. It is seen not only for months, but often for several years, in vigorous action in its native habitat before it leaps over its accustomed bounds; but, when once on the tramp, it may travel from Buenos Ayres to Quebec, leaving more graves in its track than Asiatic cholera. There is reason to fear that one of these eruptions is now marshaling its forces."

Let us glance at the course of one of these typical epidemics—at the one, for instance, which started as far away as Rio de Janeiro, twenty-eight years ago, and traveled in six years all the way to New York—a journey of nearly 4,000 miles—in a great circle. A great many years before, so many that the inhabitants of Rio had lost nearly all recollection or tradition of the fact, the yellow fever had visited their city; but now the epidemic broke upon them like lightning from a clear sky. "This outbreak," says Dr. Nott, "commenced in Rio in January, 1850, and traveled night and day for six years, making its expiring effort in New York bay in 1856. I had my eye upon this epidemic from its commencement, watching its steady course and ravages along the Atlantic, Caribbean sea and Gulf of Mexico for several thousand miles. When it struck New Orleans (1853) it was clear to my mind that our own coast was doomed; and, before it reached Mobile, I was so certain it would come that I moved my family into the healthy pine hills, seven miles from the town, where the disease had never been. But, in spite of all my prudence, the disease not only came to Mobile, but followed my family out to Spring Hill, where I lost four of my children in one week."—Dr. T. M. Coan, in Harper's Magazine for December.

New Way to Cook Invented.

Just now, in Paris, you will see the art of great cooking in perfection with the least amount of fuel. In England and America there is an absolute and unnecessary waste of fuel as well as viands by the employment of huge fires. England is more wasteful by reason of being more prejudiced than America in this matter. In one day in England a cook will consume more fuel and produce less good dinners than a French cook will in a month of superb cooking! Count Rumford laid down practical rules by which a dinner for 1,000 persons could be excellently well cooked and served at a cost of 10 cents! Now this process is improved upon, and a dinner for 1,500 persons can be well cooked at a fuel expense of 5 cents! Not by gas—that is a wasteful expense—but by the carbonated refuse of the gas-house, known as coke. This coke is placed in a peculiarly-constructed stove, which permits none of the fumes to pass into any other place than the closed chimney. The coke is generated into a brilliant fire at first by a powerful draught, then toned down, as per the wants of the cook by a mechanical damper. At this point all the odor of the gas has gone, and nothing but a clear fire, minus smell or dust, is ready. This fire in the broad-top stove does duty for several dishes at the same time. You get your dinner hot and well cooked at a cost of less fuel than ever before known. The owner of the patent is about to proceed to America to protect his invention, or I might explain it.—Cor. Baltimore Sun.

He Lost the Money.

The lawyer who indulged in the following pleasantry must have had a keen insight into human nature in general. A client called upon his legal adviser recently, and told him this sad tale:

"You see, I collected all the money I could, and turned everything I had into cash, with a view of giving my creditors as large a dividend as possible. I had a large roll of bills, which I put in my hip pocket, and I lost 'em."

"You lost the money—the whole of it?"

"Every cent of it."

"Well, I believe you, but I don't think I could find another man in Boston who would believe it. The fact is, my friend, if Judge Lowell should decide that your loss was a reality, every bankrupt in Boston would want to borrow your pants."

Husband Wanted.

All the way from Calcutta comes a romantic tale of a strange quest for a husband. A young lady of Goa has posted in the municipal chamber at Margaum an announcement that she is 18 years old, and has an income of 1,500 zerafins; and, furthermore, wishes to marry a man under 30 years of age, who can command 1,000 zerafins, the joint income being about $600; and he must understand the English and Portuguese languages, and the metrical system of accounts; and on a certain day she would pass at noon through the public streets of Margaum with a green umbrella and a handkerchief of the same color in her left hand, after which she would receive suitors with their proposals, and choose one from them possessing the stipulated qualifications.

American Biographies.

For a peculiarly political people, we have unquestionably the most indifferent stories of political leaders. What a gallant and picturesque figure in our politics is Henry Clay; but to what biography shall the young student be referred? How positive, and in the course of events almost sinister, a power was Mr. Calhoun! But there is no tolerable life of him. Going further back, there is still a singular paucity of good memoirs of public men. Mr. Charles Francis Adams' life of his grandfather, the heroic John Adams, is perhaps the best of its kind. Irving's "Washington" is charming, but Irving had no taste for politics, and a glance at Van Buren's "Origin of Parties" shows at once the inadequacy of Irving's account of the political part of Washington's career. Mr. Morse's life of Hamilton is the only one worth consideration. But, admirable as it is as a contribution to the subject, it hardly fulfills the conditions. Randall's "Jefferson" is a laborious and ample work, but it has little other attraction than that of the events themselves. John Jay's memoir, well written by his son, is valuable for its facts, but not interesting as a story or a picture. It will not hold its own with the young American reader against the life of Romilly. Sparks' life of Gouverneur Morris is a collection of material, it is not a memoir.

Madison is wholly without an adequate biography. The bulky volumes of Mr. Rives, so far as they go, supply only valuable information, but tell no story. The stately volumes of John Quincy Adams' "Diary" are a mine, but not a biography. The life of Webster is not yet written. Mr. Parton has given us memoirs of Benjamin Franklin, Andrew Jackson, Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr. The first of these is among the best of all American biographies, and the second is an illustration, in many ways, of the general manner in which political biography should be treated. The other two are very interesting and entertaining, but they seem too partial, and are read with a distrusting protest. Edmund Quincy's life of his father, Josiah Quincy, is a model; and Mr. Cabot Lodge's life of George Cabot is among the very best memoirs, while his magazine sketch of Timothy Pickering is masterly. As yet we have but one volume of Mr. Seward's life; and we have two of Mr. Sumner's, which do not extend to his public career, but which are singularly delightful from their glimpses of the best European society of his youth.

These are a few of the biographies of our public men. But no one can run over the list of our noted political names without confessing that the memoirs are singularly wanting in that fascination which is felt in the story of English statesmen and statesmanship.—"Editor's Easy Chair," in Harper's Magazine for December.

A Mutual Mistake.

A noise in Mr. Lake's house in San Jose, Cal., led him and his dog to believe that a burglar was at work, and they started in different directions to investigate. It was in the night, and, when the man and the beast came together in a hallway, each took the other for the intruder. The dog sprung from under a table, intending to seize Mr. Lake, who, believing that he was attacked by a robber, hastily fired several shots. A light was brought, and the wounded dog, recognizing his master, crawled to his feet and died.

Counterfeits.

The counterfeits of the $5 notes of no less than seven national banks have been so numerous and dangerous that the genuine notes of those banks have been withdrawn from circulation as fast as they could be procured. The names of these banks are:

First National Bank, of Hanover, Pa.
First National Bank, of Aurora, Ill.
First National Bank, of Canton, Ill.
First National Bank, of Chicago, Ill.
Merchants' National Bank, of Chicago, Ill.
First National Bank, of Peru, Ill.
First National Bank, of Paxton, Ill.

Origin of the Chinese Junk.

The curious unshiplike shape of the Chinese junk is accounted for by a tradition which records that, some centuries ago, a deputation of Kwangtung shipbuilders sought audience of the reigning Emperor to exhibit models of foreign vessels, and to solicit permission to alter the native type. The Emperor, enraged at their audacity, kicked off his shoe, telling them to return to Canton and adopt that as their model, and the shoe form of vessels prevails in China to this day.

Killing a Grizzly.

One of the largest grizzly bears ever seen in California was killed near Monterey a short time ago. He weighed over 1,700 pounds, and, from the fact that he was in the habit of killing full-grown cows and dragging them into the brush to be eaten at leisure, the herdsmen of that section felt delicate about attacking him. Finally, poisoned honey was spread in his way, partaking of which, he gave up the ghost.

Under the Surgeon's Knife.

Bayard Taylor, our Minister to Germany, has undergone a severe surgical operation for dropsy. The experiment was successful in relieving the patient and placing him in a convalescent condition. Prof. Wilms, an eminent German surgeon, has the case in charge, and promises the complete and early restoration of the health of the distinguished American.

PAUPERISM in London is something fearful. During the third week of last month 40,123 indoor and 36,946 outdoor applicants for relief received the attention of the authorities, a total of 77,069. This, however, is a slight improvement over the corresponding week of 1877, when 77,938 persons were relieved, and a more marked one over 1876, with its 78,072, and 1875, with its 81,725 cases.

THE committee appointed by the British Association to investigate the causes leading to the Princess Alice disaster report a fact of considerable interest to seamen. They say: "It is found an invariable rule that, during the interval in which a ship is stopping herself by the reversal of her screw, the rudder produces none of its usual effects to turn the ship, but that under these circumstances the effect of the rudder, such as it is, is to turn the ship in the opposite direction from that in which she would turn if the screw were going ahead."

Ten Rules for Young Men.

Always pick up a hot poker by the cold end. Never spend your money when you can get things for nothing. Do not despise a 20-cent cigar or a $2 dinner because another man pays for it. Remember that it costs more to go to a high-priced theater than it does to take a back pew in a free church. Nothing is troublesome to you that other people do for you willingly. Never pay to-day the man you can put off till to-morrow. Never trouble yourself to do for another what he can do just as well for himself. Never buy what you don't want, simply because the man says he is just out of it. Do not poultice your own elbow for the boil on another man's neck. When angry, be sure you can handle your man before you call him a liar.—Burdette.

On last Thursday, Mr. Welsh, the United States Minister, paid over to her Majesty's Government the amount of the fisheries award, by a draft upon Messrs. Morton, Rose & Co., for $5, 500,000. Just five millions more than our government should have been assessed.

Secretary of State Neff will, in his report to the Legislature, recommend some special legislation to recover the title of the James P. Drake farm, three miles west of the city. This was bought by the State and sold to Robert McCaslin. The sale was irregular, and consequently void, but the McCaslins refuse to give up possession, although they have never paid a cent for the farm, which contains 160 acres, and is valued at $14,000. Three Legislatures have worked on the case without avail.

Political partisans, and we suspect they belong to the radical party, started the story a few weeks ago that Senator McDonald, of this State, would be a Democratic condidate for President. In reply to this story, the Senator a few days ago, said to a reporter. "I am not a candidate at either end of the ticket—would not accept a nomination if I could get it, and won't allow my friends to make any such use of my name. I am for Mr. Hendricks, because he is the best man we have in the state, and this State is entitled to the candidate. We have earned it, and will not be backward in asking it of the convention."—Columbia City Post.

The war which commenced last week between the British and the Afghans is the result of jealousy and pride on the part of the British. It seems that the Ameer received a Russian Mission at the Afghan capital, and refused to receive an envoy from the British government, which offended English dignity, and war is the result. There are possibly other causes as usual with England; perhaps Russia is observed in the back-ground, which may prove to be a foe worthy of England's attention.

Johnny Bull has made the attack, and the probabilities are that Russia will stand by Afghanistan and the result will be a general fight in which India will be called upon to take a hand. As yet no serious engagement between the troops has taken place. In the skirmishes the Afghan troops are reported to have shown considerable skill and personal bravery, but were compelled to retire; they say the English will find plenty of work before they reach Jelalabad.

Hayes' Place in History.

Indianapolis Sentinel.

There is no denying the fact that Hayes has a place in history. The same may be said of Cain, the first murderer: of Judas Iscariot, the treacherous apostle, who betrayed the world's Redeemer; of Benedict Arnold, the traitor, and of Wilkes Booth, the assassin; and we might extend the list and fill a gallery that would span the globe with pictures of miscreants who have obtained a place in history. We could catalogue despots and tyrants who, in their day were a terror and a scourge. We could name highwaymen and freebooters who have a place in history; monsters of depravity who suggest all the synonyms of wickedness. And R. B. Hayes, the fraud made and crime stained president, also has a place in history: so that the organs of the radical party and the apologists of political scoundrelism need give themselves no uneasiness upon that score, Nothing that Hayes can do will obliterate his past record. It is fixed as firmly in the chronicles of crime as that of any man who ever lived since the day when the clay that formed the first man was quickened into life by the breath of Jehovah. But for the crimes with which the name of R. B. Hayes is associated he would be of no more consequence to the world than millions who have died uncoffined and unknown. This creature at one period of his life had an opportunity to have made a name worthy of monuments as enduring as time, but he betrayed the truth, and, for office and its perquisites and power, secured for himself a place in history of immortal infamy. When crime stained and perjury begrimmed scoundrels offered him an office rightfully belonging to another, he could have said to the whole troop of thieves, "Get behind me!" and stood forth as proud a specimen of humanity as ever adorned the world, but weak, irresolute venal, perfidious, he clutched the bauble and fell to his place in history. He had greed without conscience, a heart without courage, and a mind that was able to comprehend none of the infamous forces that bore him to power, as they would appear in faithful history, and hence he became a part of a perfidious heme which robbed a free people of r rights and struck a blow at instins which are the glory of the Certainly Hayes has a place in hat Egptian darkness a thousntensified can not obscure, uch blacker than all black- that it will forever hold the darkest pictures of hts of men.

A "solid south" is the continued cry of the radical party. A "solid south" is much desired by the corrupt and thieving administration for two reasons First, it is very necessary that some delusion should be heralded throughout the north as a substitute for the threadbare cry of bloody-shirt, which has been kept up so long by the sacrafice of negro lives at the hands of members of the radical party, with the knowledge and consent of the leaders of that party for the sole and only purpose of radical supremacy in the north; the unmarked graves of thousands of innocent negroes in the south bear witness to the cold blooded murders committed by radical emmissaries from the north, all for the purpose of prejudicing the people of the north against the south, and for a pretext to keep a standing army in the south to intimidate voters and manipulate elections in the interest of the radical leaders, whose only object has been theft and anarchy.

Second, a "solid south,' was desired by the manipulators of the machinery of the radical party for the reason that His Fraudulency—Hayes, advocated a policy toward the south which was not agreeable to his party, and by making no nominations in some of the southern districts, and allowing the elections to go by default so far as the radicals were concerned, then after the election cry fraud, fraud, that Hayes might be induced to change his policy and adopt Grant's tactics to be enforced during the coming national contest in 1880.

There is not a radical leader in the north that would not rejoice to see a "solid south" and "solid north" in preference to a SOLID COUNTRY, prominent radical papers of the north are already indicating "that the Republicans of the Cotton States have gone through the last contest which they will be obliged to go through unassisted," that "it will be considered whether certain states are entitled to cast Electoral votes or elect Congressmen at all," that "if in the great conflict of 1880 the people of the North are compelled to elect a man with an iron hand upon a platform which will declare the first purpose of the Government to be to maintain the rights of citizens, even to the extent of meeting force with force, and cowardly brutality with utter annihilation, the responsibility will belong to the people of the South."

This, then, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, is the plan of battle, announced all along the line. This is the feast to which the American people are invited. This is the notice filed not merely upon the south, but upon forty millions of people. This is the method by which certain republican commanders propose to take the next presidency. We all remember how the last was taken. These announcements are not trifles. When democrats in the United States are threatened not only with "the iron hand," but with absolute "annihilation;" when notice is given that it will be seriously considered whether democratic states will be permitted to vote for president or for members of Congress; when so eminent a republican journal as the New York Times tells the republicans of the south that they will not be compelled to vote again "without assistance;" if this sentiment finds any considerable following, patriotic men may begin to tremble for the Republic.—When states as free and peaceful as Ohio are threatened with disfranchisement if they will not vote a certain ticket; when the people of the country are threatened with "annihilation" for being democrats, it is time to pause and reflect a moment upon the tendency of the time.

It is fortunate that this notice is filed in season. The nuptials of the Money Power and Monarchy on this continent are announced in time to forbid the bans, for that is the marriage that is meant. This fury is not the fervor of republican love for the negro, as is pretended. It is the thirst of the Money Power for absolute control in the land. The "iron hand" is to be moved by an arm of gold. The "force" that is heralded with unprecedented effrontery is the force dictated by the banks. When money could not buy votes enough on the banks of the Tiber, it hired gladiators to stand at the voting places, and the great state that was once mistress of the world was shivered into fragments. There are idiots and lunatics and men who cannot forget in the south, but they are very few. It is not of that the Money Power is afraid, but of the masses of the people in all the states. The bank party sees the hand-writing on the wall, unless it can summon sectional hate, the old and buried negro question, the army, and the most unpatriotic passions to its aid. It would make the Republic itself one stupendous DENIS KEARNEY to accomplish its purposes and save its life. It would ruin the Republic if necessary, for that is what it threatens. It is not the better element of the republican party that the PHILLIPS and the SUMNERS made, and with which the PETER COOPERS voted, and which have done humane things in our history, that are proclaiming the revolution; it is the machinery of that organization that has wholly fallen into the hands of the Money Power. The people have ample warning, and their own welfare and the Republic are in their hands.

—Judge Burns, of the Indianapolis superior court assessed a fine against Warren Tate, the murder of Love, in the sum of ten thousand dollars for contempt of court. The following is the judgment:

"The judgment of the court is that Mr. Tate be fined ten thousand ($10,000) dollars, to be collected out of any property that he may have subject to execution."

This has nothing to do with the penalty that Tate will have to pay for committing the murder, it is only for interfering with a witness and creating a disturbance near the court room. The usual fine for contempt of court seldom exceeds $50.00.

Jayhawker, correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer, in speaking of the management of the Northern Indiana Prison, alludes to the present Board of Directors, as follows:

"The Board of Directors are a beautiful illustration of the rule of bestowing the places upon politicians. They have about the same qualifications for running a prison that they would have to command a man-of-war, or run a synagogue. Being unfit to fill any other position, they are put in here, probably, to show that God never made anything in vain, and that, therefore, they are the men for the places. They draw their salaries and such mileage as they can charge up, and the Warden runs the mill to suit himself."

By the way, the members of the Board of Directors are all republicans.

Notwithstanding the division in the Democratic ranks in New York, the official count shows the radical party to have been 32,404 in the minority at the last election; even in Illinois the radical party is 20,355 in the minority; and yet, the radical press of the country has the effrontery to talk about an endorsement of the radical party by the people of the north in the late elections. At the last Presidential election the radical party was over a quarter of a million in the minority on the popular vote, and to-day if the votes of the several states were aggregated the radical party would be a round million in the minority. If the opponents of radicalism would unite in an effort to redeem the country in 1880, there would not be a state in the Union with a republican majority. On the other hand if the Nationals and Democrats continue to act independently of each other it will stimulate the vast horde of government employees in a final effort to prolong their official lives, and if successful, their next step will be an attempt to establish an aristocracy.

The reception of the marquis of Lorne, the new Governor-General of Canada, with his wife, Princess Louise, took place at Halifax last Monday. It was the occasion of one of the grandest demonstrations ever witnessed in the dominion. The following is one of the oaths administered to the new ruler:

"I, Sir John Douglas Southerland Campbell, commonly called marquis of Lorne, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to her majesty Queen Victoria, and will defend her to the utmost of my power against all conspiracies and attempts whatever which shall be made against her person, crown or dignity; and I will do my utmost endeavors to disclose and make known to her majesty, her heirs, and successors all treasons and traitorous conspiracies which may be formed against her or them; and I do faithfully promise to maintain, support and and defend to the utmost of my power the succession of the crown, which succession, by an act entitled "An act for the further limitation of the crown and better securing the rights and liberties of the subject, is and stands limited to the Princis Sophia, electress of Hanover, and to the heirs of her body, being protestants, hereby utterly renouncing and adjuring any obedience or allegiance unto any other person claiming or pretending a right to the crown of this realm;" and I do declare that no foreign prince, person, prelate, state or potentate, hath or ought to have any jurisdiction, power, superiority, preeminence or authority, ecclesiastical or spiritual, within this realm; and make this declaration upon the true faith of a Christian. So help me God."

Biddy.

Inasmuch as the leaders of the radical party in Indiana are busily engaged through the press of that party, in an effort to array enough democratic members of the next State Legislature against the Hon. D. W. Voorhees to defeat his election to the United States Senate, we regard it as the duty of every democratic paper in the state to "speak out" in plain language that cannot be mistaken, and give the Republican and "Plan" Buchanan combination to understand that there is to be no surrender of the principles upon which the fight was made in Indiana in the last campaign. In this connection the Plymouth Democrat strikes the key note, when it says:

"The proposition of an obscure paper to present the name of Hon. A. P. Edgerton, of Fort Wayne, as a candidate for U. S. Senator against Voorhees meets with no encouragement among the democracy of the state. Mr. Voorhees and Ben. Harrison made the canvass of the state as opposing candidates for that position. Among democrats during the campaign no other candidates were spoken of or thought of, and to discard him now after the gallant fight he made, for a man who has never distinguished himself outside of his own county, would be simply base ingratitude, and would surely be the means of loosing the state to the democracy in 1880. In the democratic caucus there will be some who will present the name of some man whose financial indeas are less objectionable to them than are Mr. Voorhees', but there will be less than half a dozen, who will feel obliged to take this course, and even they will not carry their opposition to the extent of refusing to vote for him after he has received the caucus nomination."

As to the Edgerton proposition, we think there need be but little fear in that direction. Mr. Edgerton would probably be rejected by the democratic caucus for several reasons, among which would be his opinions upon the banking and currency questions, and his being a resident of Allen county.

The people of Indiana decided at the ballot box as to their choice for United States Senator, ~~and it only~~ remains for the representatives of the people in the legislature to carry out the wish of their constituents by electing "the Cicero of the American forum; whose name and fame are coextensive with the boundaries of the American Republic; who has attained eminence in the field of literature and in the highest walks of jurisprudence; who for the invention of argument, sequence of facts, elevation of thought, force of reasoning, harmony of language, novelty and brilliancy of metaphor, beauty of diction, grace and eloquence of exordium, and power and energy of peroration has but few equals and no superior—the Hon. D. W. Voorhees.

—What is the matter in Dubois county? For years she has been the first county in the state to make settlement with the state officers, this fall St. Joseph was the first to settle, but Floyd was the first to report. We have heard it said that no Treasurer could be re-elected in Dubois who failed to be first at the State Treasurer's office to make settlement.

Healthfulness.

A distinguished physician says: "After a careful examination of Dr. Price's Cream Baking powder, I am satisfied that it is a wholesome preparation. I have introduced it among my patients, and have yet to learn where a convalescent patient could not indulge in warm biscuits made with it, and feel the better for it.

A FATHER'S STORY AND THANKSGIVING.

Why, wife, what is it pleases you? What makes you so take on?
You surely must be crazy; or maybe you've heard from John—
But that is hardly likely, as he's been five years away,
And I can scarcely dare to hope you've heard from him to-day.
We never have even heard from him, and yet the day may come
When we can welcome home again our long-absented boy;
And, though there be no fatted calf, we'd try to make him feel
That here, so long as we've to share, he'd never want a meal.
Poor boy! how sad he looked [illegible] day when biddin' you good-by,
And, [illegible] quite cheerfully, a tear stood in his eye.
I [illegible] he would have talked to me, but I was [illegible]
For [illegible] with him— but why I hardly know.
You know that books were ever a great pleasure to our boy;
It always seemed that nothing else could give him so much joy;
But let him get his hands on one, he'd go and hide away
And read along from morn till night, while other boys would play.
And, wife, you know that my old dad had never been to school,
And many times I've heard him say it made a boy a fool
Thus givin' him book-learnin', for they'd only come to harm,
Nor would they be content to stay and work upon the farm.
And I, I guess, must be like him; for, when I saw [illegible]
[illegible] pore over his books all day, instead of helpin' on,
And doin' work about the place, I thought the boy no good,
And so I did not use him [illegible] as I, his father, should.
But, what was worst of all, [illegible] I took away a book
[illegible] had borrowed, and threw it in the [illegible]
And, [illegible] I did, the look he gave me [illegible]
You [illegible] why I wish to see my boy [illegible]
[illegible] at last [illegible] to go
And find a home away from here, and then he told me so;
And I was very willin', for I thought, when once away,
He'd hanker to get back again, and then contented stay.
But years have passed away since then, and we have never heard
A word of good or ill report; and, if my eyes are blurred
My tears at times, it is because I do not feel the same
As once I did toward our boy, for now I take the blame;
For, had I been but kind to him, we still would have him here,
To comfort us and cheer us, now old age is drawing near.
But now, perhaps, it is too late, and he may never come
To gladden us, who long for him, and wait for him at home.
Ah, well! I have been punished, and sometimes I'm nearly wild
When thinking how I treated him, our boy, our only child.
I know it cannot last long, for something tells me so,
Nor would I mind it, could I see our boy before I go.
And you, his mother, have grown old and gray beyond your years;
And, though you try to hide them, yet I often see the tears;
And nothin' seems to please you now as once it used to do.
Oh, would that I had died myself ere trouble came to you!
I saw our parson here to-day. I hope his folks are well.
He came to make a call you say. What news had he to tell?
I know there must be somethin', for you look more pleased to-day
Than I have seen you all these years that John has been away.
He brought a letter, did you say, from him—what! from our John?
Which says that he will soon be home. No wonder you take on!
Thank God! for He has heard my prayer, and filled my soul with joy,
And taken sorrow from my heart by sendin' back our boy.
And now let us kneel down and ask that God His grace may give,
And shower His blessing on our boy as long as he shall live;
And, when to-morrow's dawn has come, and John is here to stay,
We'll thank the Lord who gave to us a true Thanksgiving day.

SWEET MARJORAM.

A Thanksgiving Story.

BY LIZZIE W. CHAMPNEY.

A garden inclosed is my sister, my spouse; thy plants are an orchard of pleasant fruits; camphire with spikenard, spikenard and saffron; calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense; myrrh and aloes, with all the chief spices; * * * which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved.—Solomon's Song iv., 12, 13, 14; vii., 13.

Margery's spice-garden was not exactly like the one planted for Egypt's daughter by the great Jewish Sultan, though the plants were, indeed, an orchard of pleasant fruits, consisting of a hedge-like row of currant bushes and a half-dozen gnarled, stunted trees, that Bina Hutchins said bore the best "squinches" in all the township. The ground not occupied by the fruits was laid out in orderly little beds, filled with "yarbs." Thoroughwort and motherwort, for the infusion of bitter teas, to be drunk religiously in the spring of the year, a penitential ceremonial seemingly handed down from the commemoration of the Passover, by the eating of bitter herbs. Other medicinal plants, more grateful to the palate—spearmint and peppermint, pennyroyal, catnip and hoarhound—grew near by, with arnica for wounds and bruises, lavender for the linen chest, coriander and caraway for the good housewife's cookies, anise and saffron for spasmy babies, rosemary for perfume, thyme and sage for home-made "sassingers," tansy for batter puddings, with such mild aromatics as fennel and dill for the gentle stimulus to mental exertion needed by the ruminating old deacons, as they listened to the words of the good minister, which drifted down upon his hearers as soothingly as poppy-leaves.

As Margery sorted her herbs, that bright October day, passing some of them through coarse wire sieves, rubbing them fine, and packeting them away in neatly-labeled bags, while others, not so dry, were tied in bunches and hung from the brown rafters of the attic, a stranger would have noticed a certain appropriateness between the girl and her surroundings.

Her presence seemed to diffuse just such a faint, pleasant perfume. Both the dried bunches of herbs and her pale cheek reminded you that, though faded now, there had been bloom there once. You felt that not very long ago she had seen June, with sunlight and song, warmth and perfume and life, and, though it had all gone from her as completely as from the withered leaves in the little paper bags, her mission, like theirs, was to do good, to give ease to the suffering, and even a mild spice, a cheerful flavor and perfume, to all that was monotonous and distasteful about her.

Margery was not called an old maid by the school children. There was not a gray thread in all her wealth of auburn hair, she did not dress in antiquated style, or keep a cat, or drink tea, or belong to the sewing society, or show any of the usual characteristics of old maids. The cozy little parlor looked out upon the spice garden from a bay window, which Margery had had built for her geraniums; and the flowers and the open piano—for Margery was a music teacher—gave the room a very pleasant air. Her music kept up with the times, like her dresses. Both were always modern and pretty. She went to all the parties and musicales (and did not go alone, either). She helped to get up all the fairs and festivals and tableaux. Society at Baxter's, the little town where she lived, would have been at a standstill without her. In short, she was not an old maid at all, but only an old young lady. Margery was never slighted, and yet it was probably ten years since she had an offer. She had had her love story, of course; but that was fifteen years ago, and everybody at Baxter's, including Margery herself, would have been very much surprised to have heard that she was going to be married. And yet everybody and Margery were destined to exactly that surprise.

If you had asked the people at Baxter's for Margery's love story, you would probably have received two different versions. Some would have said that it was Jack Bogardus, and some that it was Fred Frothingham; but all would have agreed that she had been "disappointed."

Margery's story, so far as she knew it—for Margery herself did not know all of her story—was this: Jack Bogardus was an orphan and her cousin. He had been adopted by her father, and they had grown up together. But Jack was a willful boy. Margery's father did not understand him, and at last he ran away to California. Margery knew that he was going, and she did not discourage him. It seemed to her that this was really best for all. Jack had promised to come back some day, when he had "made his pile," and claim her for his wife, if she would only wait. Margery had waited, her father had died, and she was left alone. That same year Jack wrote that he had prospered and that he was coming home. The same mail brought her a little box, containing a ring of California gold. It came on Thanksgiving day, and the day had ever since been a sad one for Margery; for, though Jack came back to the village, and others saw him, he did not even call upon her, and he returned to the West the next day, without leaving any message for her. There had been no explanation since. It was still the same cruel mystery that it had been fifteen years ago. She did not even know at the time that he was in town, for she was in great perplexity and trouble.

Fred Forthingham, the son of the wealthiest man at Baxter's, had been one of the first to enlist when the war of the great Rebellion broke out, and it was now the second year of the struggle. On the eve of a battle, not knowing whether he would survive the terrible work of the next day, Fred wrote Margery a letter, telling her that he loved her and asking her, if he lived to come home, to be his wife.

Margery replied, telling him as kindly as she could how impossible it was. This letter Fred never received, for he was wounded in the battle, his father came for him, and he was brought back to Baxter's the day before the arrival of Margery's cousin. The journey threw him into a fever, and when he was laid upon his own bed, with his mother bending over him, he did not know her, but raved deliriously about Margery, calling her by all the sweet names that his disordered mind could supply.

Mrs. Frothingham imagined, from this, that Margery and her son were engaged. The possibility that Fred could love and not be loved in return never entered the head of the doting little woman, and so she wrote to Margery, calling her "my dear daughter," and begging her to come to Fred, for her presence alone could cure him. Margery had no mother or friend to consult, and to her the only thing to be done seemed to be to confide in Mrs. Frothingham, and, taking a little basket of poppy-leaves, to make a pillow for the sufferer, she hurried to the Frothingham mansion. The girl who admitted her told her that Mrs. Frothingham was tired out from watching all night with her son, and had lain down to try to take a little rest, but had left word before doing so that, if Margery came, she was to be shown directly to Mr. Fred's room. Margery drew back at this announcement; but just at that moment the village doctor called to her from the head of the stairs, requesting her to help him administer some medicine to his patient, as he was quite wild. Margery did as the doctor directed, and Fred received his medicine tractably from her hand. A few moments later Mrs. Frothingham came in; the doctor went away, and she stumbled through her explanation, she hardly knew how, and left the fond mother tearful and indignant at her obduracy. It was not until weeks after that she learned that Jack had been in town on the very day when she had been so faithful to him, and had not even called upon her.

This was all that Margery knew. She had waited faithfully for some explanation; had written to him several times; but her letters came back to her through the Dead Letter Office, showing that Jack had never received them, and that his present residence was not known at his former address. She never doubted Jack through it all. She was true, and she felt sure that he was, too. There was some strange mystery between them. It might never be cleared up in this world; but it would be sure to be in heaven, and they would have all eternity to understand one another in.

Margery could not grow old and sour, for there is always youth and sweetness where there is hope.

Margery was sorting her herbs in the sunny drying-room, which the school children called Miss Margery's herbarium, when she was called to the door by Bina Hutchins. Bina drove a provision cart, supplied in part at the shire town, five miles away, and supplying in its circuit as many villages.

"Mornin', Miss Margey," said the old man, cheerily. "I'm round taking my orders for turkeys for Thanksgiving. Nigh about disposed of the whole flock now. Miss Frothingham bought Suleiman Pasha; they took Achmet Pasha at the hotel; I sold Ismail Pasha and Mukhtar Pasha at the Corners; and the restaurant keeper at the junction spoke for Mehemet Ali last summer, when he saw him struttin' about in our pastur'. I feel as if I owed a sight to you, Miss Margery, for naming them turkeys for me.

"The heft of the people in this section are interested in the war—leastways they pertend to be; and when I showed 'em the names o' them turkeys on my order-book, there was een a'most a scrimmage to see who'd get his name down opposite the high-soundingest of 'em. Dickson, the restaurant keeper, hes it printed on the posters he'll hang in the station on Thanksgiving day: 'Mehemet Ali beheaded this morning. This great Turk to be raffled for at our free lunch.' And Miss Frothingham told me she was going to put her turkey's name into all her invitations. She showed me one of the menoos that that young lady who is stayin' there painted for her on white satin. She's printed Suleiman Pasha in what she calls Turkey red, with guns and moons and little cupidses, in turbans and baggy trousers all around the border. They do say Fred Frothingham's going to marry her. She's some sort of relation to his fust wife. I say, Miss Margery, it seems kinder curus to me there shud be so many Generals in Turkey by the name of Pasha. The only way I kin account fur it is that it must have been the name of the last Sultan. They say that the Sultans have wives enough to fill a female seminary, and that the Sultan's crack regiment is made of his own sons. I don't know how I should have managed about naming my turkeys if it hadn't a-been for the Pasha family. A whole brood of turkeys came after you sent me that list of names, an' I called 'em Constantinople Pasha, an' Bagdad Pasha, an' Bosphorus Pasha, an' one on 'em Jerky-nek-off Pasha, though my wife said that was kind of mixin' things, fur it seemed to her that Jerky-nek-off sounded more Rooshan than Turkey.

"I did very well with the whole flock exceptin' the Sultan, the very biggest and gamest feller of all. 'Ll weigh twenty-eight pounds easy, an' tail-feathers enough to make half a dozen handsome fans. I prided myself on the Sultan, but I'm going to lose money on him. You see the ladies of the Methodist church at B'thesdy Springs hed come to the conclusion that the tabernacle, though it was a good enough place for the summer boarders to git religion in, was too windy and chilly a place to get up any sort of religious warmin' during the winter: an' they voted to have a fair about Thanksgiving time to raise money to build a chapel. Well, after they'd engaged the Sultan of me, an' advertised him in all the papers as one of the attractions, what'd they do but conclude they couldn't afford to take him unless I'd donate him. The idee! When I'd been fattening him up all summer expressly for them, an' declined him to Miss Frothingham and Mr. Dickson, who'd either on 'em have given a good price for him! And the most aggravating thing about it is that Elder Dusenbury has sold 'em his 6-year-old lame gobbler, and that every one that tackles him will think it's the Sultan, and my turkeys will lose their reputation.

"I declare now, Miss Margery, the idee just strikes me that the Sultan is just the turkey for you. It would please me fust rate for you to have the best bird in my lot. You must wear out a sight of wing a-dusting, you're so neat; and the Sultan's are strong enough to last a year. I'll throw off a shillin', seeing it's you, and take half out in dicker. One thing I came round fur was to get all the sweet majorum you can spare. There's allus a call for it about this season."

Margery had stood, while the old man was talking, beneath the little porch, whose pillars had been lifted out of the ground by the strong old vines that twisted about them in such snaky contortions. An amused smile had flickered on her face as she listened. "But, Bina," she expostulated, "the Sultan is entirely too large for a Thanksgiving dinner for only poor little me."

"I didn't know but you might have company," suggested Bina. "The old people from the Town House haven't had a regular Thanksgiving dinner since the one you gave them."

"Mrs. Dusenbury told me," replied Margery, "that whatever is left from the church festival is to be sent there, so that they are provided for this year. However, I will take the Sultan. You may shut him up in the dog-kennel. We haven't kept a dog since Cousin Jack went away. And you may have my whole stock of sweet marjoram; for I shall not kill the Sultan this year, and perhaps I shall give him away." And Bina drove away with the sweet marjoram, leaving Margery peering admiringly into the Sultan's prison.

All this time Jack was coming nearer and nearer, to help her celebrate Thanksgiving, for Jack had his story, too.

He had been unfortunate ever since his return to California. Everything had gone wrong. And he did not care, for wealth was nothing to him without Margery. He had come back that autumn years ago to claim her. As he stepped from the cars, the first person whom he met was the village doctor, who shook hands with him pleasantly and offered him a ride.

"What is the news, doctor?" was Jack's first question.

"Everything is about as usual," replied the physician. "Let me see. Fred Frothingham was a friend of yours. Was he not? He has come back from the war, wounded; but I guess we will pull him through. The sweet face of his little nurse would make any man well, I should think, even if had not the luck to be engaged to her, which Fred has."

"What, Fred engaged?" asked Jack, "And to whom?"

"Why, to your Cousin Margery, to be sure. I thought you would know of it."

"Doctor, are you sure of this?" asked Jack, a little unsteadily.

"Of course I am. Mrs. Frothingham told me; and I have even more positive proof, for I have just left the house, and Miss Margery was nursing the young man."

After that Jack stayed in Baxter's only long enough to see, from the door of the little shop opposite, Margery taking leave of Mrs. Frothingham, at the head of the great flight of stone steps. Then he shut his sore heart up within an iron will, and went back to California.

The years that followed were a long, dreary desert in his life. Perhaps God permits us to live through such years of blankness and weariness to show us by contrast the exceeding preciousness of the joy He has in store for us. And so Jack lived until the autumn of which we have been speaking. Then all his misfortunes seemed to culminate. He could nowhere find employment, and he was very poor. As a last resort, he accepted the position of bartender in a saloon. He was new to the business, and the proprietor proceeded to give him some instructions. The veteran in drinks first concocted a mint-julep, after some infallible recipe of his own.

"There!" said he. "Try that, young man, and own up that you never tasted anything like it in your life."

"I would rather you would taste and see if it is right, sir," replied Jack. A proposition readily complied with by the compounder of intoxicating beverages, and followed by a frightful scene of choking and expectoration. "There is something wrong about the mint," he sputtered; and then, examining the pail of green sprays upon his counter, he exclaimed: "Blessed if that stupid market-woman hasn't left me sweet marjoram, instead of spearmint!"

The word sweet marjoram recalled to Jack the dear girl for whom it always seemed to him that the little plant must have been named. What would she have thought of his present occupation? And then and there he resigned his position as bartender, obtaining from his would-be employer the little bouquet of sweet marjoram and pressing it between the leaves of his neglected Bible. But now he had nothing to look to for subsistence, and he strolled disconsolately toward the depot, wondering what would be the next scene in the strange drama. The train from the mountains was just in, and, springing from it, Jack was surprised to see his old friend, Fred Frothingham. The two young men greeted each other pleasantly. Fred said that he had been spending the summer in California, and had invested in a fruit farm, which he hoped to visit once in two years, and that he was now in search of some one to keep it for him.

"I am the very man you want," cried Jack, impulsively. And then, as a sudden thought struck him, he asked: "Shall you bring your wife with you, when you come, Fred?"

"My wife died five years ago," replied Fred, gravely.

Jack staggered as though he had been struck. "Margery dead!" he exclaimed.

"Margery!" reiterated the other, in surprise. "My wife was Rose Bateman. I would not tell every one, Jack; but your Cousin Margery refused me, and after I met Rose I was not sorry for it."

And so it was settled that Jack should keep the fruit farm for his friend. "There is a very pretty cottage on it," said Fred, "and, with all those pears and grapes, you will soon be a rich man." He was surprised that Jack was not willing to enter upon his duties at once, but the young man insisted on purchasing a ticket to Baxter's with the advance money which Fred gave him.

And this was how it happened that there was a Thanksgiving dinner that year at Margery's, and that the Sultan left his prison in the kennel, and was decapitated on the same evening with his Generals of the oft-repeated name of Pasha.

"Dear me!" said Margery, in dismay, as she dressed the turkey, "and to think that, among all my herbs, I haven't a sprig of sweet marjoram for the stuffing."

"But I have," replied Jack, as he brought forward his Bible, with the little sprays pressed between its leaves. The tears stood in Margery's eyes as he told their story, and I do not think one of the precious leaves would have been used in the Sultan's stuffing had she not thought that nothing was too good for her wedding dinner.

Fred Frothingham was at the wedding. "And now you can understand," said Jack to him, "why I was so anxious to come East. Even in a land flowing with milk and honey one may long for cold water, and all your orchard of pleasant fruits could not make me forget a little garden of herbs."

"And you wanted to transplant one of its flowers to the Pacific coast?" queried Fred.

"What flower?" asked Margery, unconsciously.

A peal of laughter ran around the table, and Jack passed up his plate (for Margery had insisted on carving the Sultan herself), with the demure request, "My dear, if you please, I will take Sweet Marjoram."

Efficient Lightning Conductors.

At the recent meeting of the British Association, Dr. Richard Anderson, of the Society of Telegraphic Engineers, read a paper on lightning conductors, which contained some sound advice as to the prevention of casualties in thunder-storms. "First of all," he said, "it is desirable that public recommendation should be made, by local and other authorities, to place lightning conductors on all exposed or high-lying buildings, whether public or private, as well as on those standing near woods and on moist ground. It might be well worth the trifling expense to place simple conductors also against trees in parks, under which there are benches, or where persons are likely to gather during a thunder-storm, they forming a prolific source of fatal accidents. Above all, no church, chapel, school, prison, or other large public building, ought to be without one or more lightning conductors. But, if it is necessary to multiply greatly lightning conductors, it is equally so that they should be planned, erected, and also periodically tested by competent persons, with scientific as well as practical knowledge of the work. The testing should take place at regular intervals, perhaps best in the spring, before the advent of the summer thunder-storms, and it should likewise be made whenever a building has been undergoing repairs which may have damaged the conductors. A well-organized system of inspection of lightning conductors would be most inexpensive. The galvanometer used for the purpose has been latterly much improved in Germany, and small portable instruments, of the size of a diminutive carpet-bag, are now made, which leave nothing to be desired in the shape both of effectiveness and durability. Already such a system of inspection and testing of conductors exists in Paris and several other French towns."

Fishing Extraordinary.

I must tell you about white fishing at Sault Sainte Marie. While our boat stopped, I went down to the beach where a dozen Indians live, who are the most wonderful fishermen that I know of. For 25 cents I was given a special show. Seating myself in a canoe, one Indian took his position seated in the stern, and another stood in the bow. The one in the stern used a paddle to keep the boat's head up stream, while the other used a pole to steady the boat. He had a dip-net about four feet in diameter, with a handle twelve or fifteen feet long. This was hung over the projection of the cut-water, while the handle trailed back in the water. Thus equipped, we sailed out into the rapids, which are half a mile in length and one mile wide. At the foot of the rapids the fishing is done. The water boils and tumbles like the swiftest rift on the Delaware, and is generally half white with breaking foam. With his pole, the Indian in the bow holds the canoe, or lets it float steadily sidewise, now up a little, then down, but always under perfect control, and always dancing with the rush of water. He watches the water constantly, which varies in depth from eight to nine feet. Suddenly with a quick motion he shoves the end of the pole under the bow piece, grasping the net at the same time with the other hand, and, never taking his eye from the water, plunges it in, perhaps ten feet away, and forces it to the bottom, or, as the canoe sags back with the current, lets it drop a few feet, and then with a peculiar twist raises it to the surface, and, with a toss like turning a flapjack, drops a five-pound whitefish into the canoe. This was repeated time and again, right in the swiftest water, and seldom only one fish was caught, but once six that would weigh eighteen pounds. Often I could not see bottom, and one was caught in eight or ten feet of water. I could see no fish until they were brought to the surface. It was the only kind of fishing that I ever saw that I did not think I could learn to do. It is said no white man ever did learn. The Indian I was with took 300 in one day. We were out an hour and took about thirty.—Letter to Deposit (N. Y.) Courier.

A Curious Story.

The Washington (D. C.) Sunday Herald prints the following account of the death of Maj. Gen. Reno, which it vouches for as coming from a trustworthy source:

"The night before the memorable battle of South Mountain, the Twenty-third Ohio Volunteers, Col. R. B. Hayes, were encamped in a field in which there were a number of wheat stacks. The men were tired, and utilized the wheat in making their beds, to the destruction, necessarily, of the wheat. Gen. Reno, passing that way in his rounds, discovered what they had done, and upbraided them in no measured terms for their conduct in destroying private property, using language that it would be idle now to repeat; and it was while he was thus engaged that a Colonel, who is now President of the United States, came up, attracted by the loud tone, and, announcing himself as the Colonel of the regiment, demanded what was the meaning of the language used. Gen. Reno, in terms more forcible than polite, —— him and his —— regiment, and declared that he held him responsible for the conduct of his men. The next day, when the line was advancing on the enemy, Gen. Reno passed through the Twenty-third Ohio, on his way to the front. Only light skirmishing was going on at the time. The General had just left the flank of the regiment, when one of the men of the Twenty-third Ohio fired and killed him. At the time he was shot he was at least three-quarters of a mile from the enemy's line. Col. Skiles, who was at the battle of South Mountain as Captain in the Twenty-third Ohio Volunteers, and was afterward Major of the Eighty-eighth Ohio, and at present is trading at Fort Clark, Texas, tells the above remarkable story, which comes from an officer of the army to whom Skiles related it some time ago."

Brother and Sister to Be Hanged.

In Liberty county, Ga., on the night of the 12th ult., one Sam Gauldin went to the house of Simon Osgood, who lives in Liberty county, to inquire about a debt which Gauldin owed Osgood, and which Osgood had given to a constable to collect. There was a dispute, and Simon Osgood, who is an old man, with three of his sons and a grown daughter, seized Gauldin and beat him terribly with sticks, fence rails and a hoe. He died the next day. Two of the sons, Henry and Raymond, are grown men; the other, James, is a youth of 13 years. The girl, Ellen, is about 19. Henry escaped, but all the others were arrested, and on Wednesday and Thursday were tried. The old man, Simon, was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter, and sentenced to twenty years in the penitentiary; Raymond and Ellen were convicted of murder, and sentenced to be hanged on Thursday, the 19th of December, and James, convicted of involuntary manslaughter, was sentenced to one year in the penitentiary.—*Savannah (Ga.) A YOUNG lady of a neighboring town awoke from a terrible dream one night last week. She had been dreaming that a young man with a soft beard was pressing his face against hers. When she awoke she found it was only a cat. Then wasn't she mad?

Outwitting a Cannibal.

One of the wealthiest settlers in New Caledonia is a gentleman from Australia—Mr. Brown—who went there some ten or twelve years ago with but a small capital, and has become enormously rich by raising cattle for the markets of Noumea. Mr. Brown was on his way through the bush, from one of his outlying cattle stations to another, when he lost his way entirely, wandered about till near nightfall, and then came upon a large native village. Here he was hospitably entertained, well fed and most deferentially treated by the great chief whose village it was—the Chief Atai, I think, whom some persons regard as the chief mover and leader of this year's revolt against the French. Atai was all courtesy to his white guest, and, when night had fully come, conducted him himself in state to the hut set apart for his night's repose.

Fortunately, Mr. Brown was acquainted with the customs of the country, and, among them, knew the common method of putting an end to travelers, preparatory to feasting upon them. It is as follows: The traveler is kindly received; nothing occurs to shake his confidence in his host; he is allotted a cabin to himself to sleep in. The native huts have usually but one opening, which serves as a door and window both. When the traveler is supposed to be well settled in his cabin, this one entrance is set on fire. Being thatched and made altogether of light wood, it burns very readily, and the traveler is cooked as well as killed. Then the feast begins.

Being acquainted with these details of New Caledonian life, Mr. Brown knew the cabin to which the venerable Atai so courteously led him might probably become for him both a tomb and a cooking-stove unless his wits could save him. He entered the cabin of the chief, meeting courtesy with courtesy, till they were both fairly within. Then Brown, in the prime of life and athletic, Atai old and infirm, the Englishman knew that he was more than a match for the savage. He closed the door within the hut, planted his back firmly against it, and, sitting thus with his hand on his revolver, and his other weapons ostentatiously displayed, continued his conversation with the chief. The situation remained unchanged throughout the night. A terrible night it was, no doubt, for the Englishman, and almost as bad for the old chief, who, again and again, requested permission to withdraw, Mr. Brown as frequently declaring he could not part with him—he should not feel safe except in his company. When daylight was fully come, Mr. Brown felt assured that Atai would not venture to allow his people openly to attack an individual so well known in the settlements as himself, and, both issuing forth together from the hut, he gladly accepted the escort of a native guide, and was safely conducted to the French settlements, where his adventure was the theme of considerable interest.—*Cor. A Sensational Dog.

Considerable excitement was aroused at a performance last Sunday evening in the Grand Opera House, Milwaukee, by the extraordinary behavior of one of the principal members of the company. The piece was Miss Lina Tetterhorn's sensational drama, "Tina, the Milk-Vender," which has been rendered with some success in English. This time it was given in its original German. In the principal scene a large dog is introduced, hauling the milk-wagon of Hartina, the heroine of the play. This dog understands English thoroughly, but, having had only the advantage of a single rehearsal in German, he became somewhat mixed as to his business—not understanding the language, and, of course, mistaking his cue. When the comedian comes on and says "Hartina, are you here?" it is the dog's cue to stand still until Hartina and her lover embrace and then sing a duet. Then he follows Hartina around the stage with the milk-cart, and so on. On this occasion, when the words "Hartina, bist du hier?" were uttered, the dog made a jump for the comedian, who took fright and ran off the stage. The dog followed, barking furiously, and scattering the milk-pails all over the stage. Hartina screamed and took refuge among the opposite wings. The dog presently reappeared, and, spying the prompter seated in his half-moon in front of the footlights, he made a plunge for him. The prompter dropped his book and dived through the trap-door. The dog, now thoroughly aroused, went after him, followed by the milk-wagon and what was left of the cans. Amid the yells of the audience an effort was made to rescue the unhappy and affrighted prompter. Seizing the tail-board of the cart, some of the people on the stage gave a strong pull, and a pull altogether, when up came the wagon, and then the dog, and finally the prompter—the latter in a helpless condition, with the fangs of the infuriated animal firmly fastened to that part of his garment which was the last to disappear from sight. A muzzle was procured, and the dog was led from the stage, yelping at the prompter, and looking daggers in the direction of the comedian. Order was eventually restored, and the piece proceeded.—Chicago Tribune.

How a Sedentary Life Affects Women.

The Popular Science Monthly remarks that many of the ills and diseases prevalent among women in our day are no doubt traceable to the sedentary mode of life so common among them. The progress of the industrial art has done away with much of the household drudgery to which women were formerly subjected, and the result is in too many cases want of sufficient occupation for needed bodily exercise. It says: "The fruits of this state of things are strikingly shown in certain observations made by the late Dr. Robertson, a Manchester surgeon, who, in his practice as a specialist for women's diseases, found that in women who themselves performed all their household work there was no trace of certain complaints, that these complaints begin to make their appearance in women with one servant, become more pronounced with women who have two servants, or worse still with those who have three servants, and so on. He showed statistically that the deaths from childbirth were four times greater in the cases of women with four servants than those with none. On the other hand, we observed a statement the other day that, since the suspension of labor in the mills of New England, on account of the panic, many of the female operatives have sought employment as domestics, and, as a consequence, there is much more sickness among them than there was previously. This would seem to show that housework is not as healthy as labor in cotton and woolen mills.—Troy Times.

Rules and Reasons.

The Boston Transcript gives the following nine commandments to those who write now and then to the press:

1. Write upon one side of the leaf only. Why? Because it is often necessary to cut the pages into "takes" for the compositors, and this cannot be done when both sides are written upon.

2. Write clearly and distinctly, being particularly careful in the matter of proper names and words from foreign languages. Why? Because you have no right to ask either editor or compositor to waste his time puzzling out the results of your selfish carelessness.

3. Don't write in a microscopic hand. Why? Because the compositor has to read it across his case at a distance of near two feet. Also, because the editor often wants to make additions and other changes.

4. Don't begin at the very top of the first page. Why? Because if you have written a head for your article the editor will probably want to change it, and if you have not—which is the better way—he must write one. Besides, he wants room in which to write his instructions to the printer as to the type to be used, where and when the proof is to be sent, etc.

5. Never roll your manuscript. Why? Because it maddens and exasperates every one who touches it—editor, compositor and proof-reader.

6. Be brief. Why? Because people don't read long stories. The number of readers which any two articles have is inversely proportioned to the square of their respective lengths. That is, a half-column article is read by four times as many people as one of double that length.

7. Have the fear of the waste-basket constantly and steadily before your eyes. Why? Because it will save you a vast amount of useless labor, to say nothing of paper and postage.

8. Always write your full name and address plainly at the end of your letter. Why? Because it will often happen that the editor will want to communicate with you, and because he needs to know the writer's name as a guarantee of good faith. If you use a pseudonym or initials, write your own name and address below it. It will never be divulged.

9. "These precepts in thy memory keep," and, for fear you might forget them, cut them out and put them where you can readily run through them when tempted to spill innocent ink.

A Bull-Fight in England.

A terrible fight with a bull took place recently at Mr. Glover's farm near Chorley. A collier, named Frith, was drinking with one of Mr. Glover's sons, when the latter bet half a crown that Frith dare not fetch his father's bull from the field to the shippen. Frith proceeded to fulfill his task, and, as a measure of precaution, took with him a hay-fork. As soon as Frith approached the bull it attacked him furiously, and he defended himself by thrusting the prongs of the fork into the animal's nostrils. This made the bull more furious, and, releasing itself, it made another dash at Frith, and caught him with its horns in the lower part of the body, tossing him in the air. A terrible gash was inflicted on the poor fellow, a large piece of flesh being torn away. As soon as Frith alighted on the ground the bull knelt on him, and the men watching were afraid to interfere until they set a large dog on the infuriated bull, which seized it by the nose, causing the vicious animal to get up. Poor Frith was then rescued, and presented a shocking appearance. A doctor was called in, and, although the sufferer is in a precarious state, hopes are entertained that he may recover.—Manchester (Eng.) Guardian.

Ireland's Future.

Edward O'Meagher Condon called upon the President and thanked him for his good offices in securing his release from an English prison. The President was pleased to see him and inquired after his family. After Condon's call at the White House he went to the State Department and called upon Secretary Evarts. After that he spent the day in looking about Washington. In speaking of the Fenian movement he says: "Its prospects are bright. The complications in Europe are favorable for it, and the time is ripe for some general, determined movement. Ireland has been degraded and her people made to suffer. This state of things cannot last. Moral suasion has been tried over and over again, and failed. Physical force must now be the means employed."

"What of Ireland's future?"

"I firmly believe that the time is not far distant when Ireland will ask to be annexed to the United States and become a part of this Government. England is afraid that should a thing of this kind happen, and the Irish people make another strike for their rights, the United States will take the part of Ireland and uphold her in the struggle."—Washington Cor. Chicago Times.

A Terrible Warning.

George Phillips was found dead in bed at Cincinnati, the other night. The inquest developed the fact that his death was caused by large quantities of whisky in the stomach. The post mortem revealed the presence of a half-gallon of whisky in the stomach and floating on top four large oysters. The oysters formed a valve which prevented the whisky from coming up when he attempted to vomit, hence his death.

AT Stoneham, Quebec, a large she-bear was caught in a trap, and her affectionate cubs nearly flayed her alive by plucking at her with their teeth in their endeavors to get her away.

Humming-Birds at the Opera.

Italians have a quick ear for music—altogether too quick for foreigners who go to the opera at Milan or Naples. After a new opera one hears passage after passage hummed on every side as he leaves the theater, and during the performance those who have good ears have the habit of keeping up with all the singers. A Dutch botanist, who was very fond of music, chanced to have one of these humming-birds sitting next to him at the opera in Milan. How to make him cease his humming he knew not. It was a delicate thing. At last he had a plan. As soon as the tenor entered and began his grand scene the botanist began to fidget, and exclaimed now and then, "What a nuisance!" "What's a nuisance?" said the hummer, looking daggers at the Dutchman. "That tenor," quietly answered his companion. "He has such a loud voice that he quite prevents my hearing you!" The hummer was silent for the rest of the evening.

Sauce Fit for Both.

A friend of ours has a little boy, who, on account of his mother being an invalid, has been under the especial care of his nurse. During the summer, however, his mother went away for the season, taking the little boy and his grandmother. Being unused to receiving orders from his mother, he at one time rebelled, and she was obliged to punish him. To this he demurred, affirming that only the nurse had a right to punish him, and going to his grandmother he complained that his mother had struck him. "That was right," said she, "if you were naughty; she is your mother, and has a right to whip you, if you don't behave." The little fellow, sobbing, asked: "Have mothers a right to strike their children?" "Certainly," she replied. "Are you her mother?" he asked. "To be sure I am." "Well, then," cried he, "hit her!"—Bangor (Me.) Whig.

Unsatisfied.

Though Caius Marius had lived to be 70 years of age, and was the first Roman who had been seven times Consul, and had made himself a family and wealth enough for several Kings, he still bewailed his fortune, and complained of dying before he had attained the fullness and completion of his desires.—Plutarch.

The Primary Cause of a Distant Symptom.

Nervousness is rarely a disease in itself inherent, but is the lineal offspring of dyspepsia, in a majority of cases. The nervous disturbance is at first trifling, but ultimately its parent so undermines the general health as to produce consequences very threatening to that great nervous center, the brain. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the most powerful medicinal opponent of the ravages of indigestion, and protects the nervous system from them. The tremors, the unnatural anxiety, the headaches, the sleeplessness and loss of appetite which characterize digestive irregularity and weakness, and which are almost invariably accompanied by an uncertain condition of the bowels and inactivity of the liver, are all eradicated by this matchless corrective, and, when nervousness does not proceed from the cause designated, it affords most grateful relief.

A Reliable Life Insurance Policy.

We take pleasure in commending to our readers a thoroughly safe and reliable life insurance agency, whose funds or assets are inexhaustible. It is a stock company operating under the joint title—Health. Life Policies are issued in the form of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Purgative Pellets (which, if taken as directed, insure the system against disease) upon payment of a very small fee. All the principal druggists are constituted agents.

"I have been very much troubled with Heart Disease for the last seven or eight years, not being able to do any laborious work for two years. I have been constantly troubled with severe pains about my heart, passing no day without experiencing pain. Dr. E. G. Moore, of Concord, and other physicians, called my difficulty Rheumatism of the Heart. Have been greatly troubled to get my breath at times, and had severe sinking spells accompanying difficulty of breathing, so that I have been in great danger of immediate death. Have used but two bottles of the HEART REGULATOR, and, though not considering myself cured, can say that I do a day's work without any difficulty, and think eventually I shall become almost entirely well. I have induced others to try the HEART REGULATOR, and would gratefully recommend it to all.

JEREMIAH SMITH, Concord, N. H."

Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

CAREFULLY avoid the use of rasping cathartics. They weaken the bowels and leave them worse off than before. Use, instead, that salutary, non-irritating aperient and anti-bilious medicine, DR. MOTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS, which will not only achieve the desired object, relaxation of the bowels, without causing pain or weakening them, but promote digestion and assimilation and depurate the blood. The pills are sold by all druggists.

FOR upward of 30 years Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children with never-failing success. It corrects acidity of the stomach, relieves wind colic, regulates the bowels, cures dysentery and diarrhea, whether arising from teething or other causes. An old and well-tried remedy. 25 cts. a bottle.

IT costs but one cent to send a postal card to the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co., Boston, New York, or Chicago, who will return, postage paid, their catalogues and circulars, with much information about organs. No one should buy an organ without seeing these.

HAVE you ague in the face and is it badly swollen? Have you severe pains in the chest, back or side? Have you cramps or pains in the limbs, or rheumatism in any form? If so, get Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. It will give instant relief and finally cure you.

BROWN'S Bronchial Troches, for Pulmonary and Asthmatic Disorders, have proved their efficacy by a test of many years, and have received testimonials from eminent men who have used them. 25 cents a box.

GOLD MEDAL

has been awarded at the Paris Exposition of 1878 to

J. & P. COATS

for their best Six-Cord Spool Cotton, confirming the estimate placed upon their goods at all the World's Expositions, from that at London, 1862, to the Centennial Exposition of 1876, where they took a diploma for "SUPERIOR STRENGTH AND EXCELLENT QUALITY."

A Second Class Prize of a Silver Medal was taken by the Willimantic Linen Company, which claims to be the special champion of American industry, and which has extensively advertised a Grand Prize at Paris.

NO GRAND PRIZES were awarded for Spool Cotton at PARIS.

Messrs. J. & P. Coats have established in Pawtucket, R. I., the largest Spool Cotton Mills in the United States. Every process of manufacture, from the raw cotton to the finished spool, is conducted there. Their American-made Spool Cotton took the award at the Centennial, and while they have never claimed special merit for their American-made Spool Cotton over that manufactured in their Scotch Mills, we have the satisfaction of announcing that they have so identified themselves with this country that AMERICA, as represented by J. & P. COATS, is still AHEAD IN SPOOL COTTON.

Adages and Apothegms.

A good heart is worth gold.

—Make a virtue of necessity.

—Where sorrow is, relief would be.

—Frame your manners to the time.

—Treason is but trusted like the fox.

—There's small choice in rotten apples.

—He doth sin that doth belie the dead.

—The poorest service is repaid with thanks.

—No profit grows where is no pleasure ta'en.

—The poor abuses of the time want countenance.

—Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere.

—Nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal.

—He that is giddy thinks the world turns round.

—Men, by doing nothing, soon learn to do mischief.

—Wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it.

—In everything the purpose must weigh with the folly.

—There be good fellows in the world, an' a man could light on them.

—He is unworthy to be a magistrate, who is not better than his subjects.

—Is it not strange that desire should so many years outlive performance?

—Slander lives upon succession: forever housed where it once gets possession.

—If all the year were playing holidays, to sport would be as tedious as work.

—'Tis not the many oaths that make the truth but the plain single vow that is vow'd true.

A Novel Alphabet.

A was a traitor hung by the hair.—Samuel, xviii., 9.

Remember About Churches.

[Reynolds' Herald.]

That they never forget to take up a collection.

That short sermons are always the most effective.

That every one tries to be the last one out when services are over.

That no preacher ever neglected to tell the story of the prodigal son.

That the woman with a new bonnet and the young man with a high collar always occupy front seats.

That the "squirt" with a pretty girl has to walk the whole length of an aisle before he can get a seat.

That the smart bad boy always gets red in the face when his father or his sisters get up to tell their experience.

That the man who starts the hymns on the old fashioned plan thinks all the Psalms should be sung to the same tune

That the "man of the world" who helps sing the doxology imagines he is taking an active interest in his soul's salvation.

That some people take more pride in saying that they 'haven't been to church in two years," than others do in declaring they "haven't missed a Sunday for seven years."

That the young man who hasn't had a cent in the past two months goes through every pocket while the contribution basket is going around, and then asks the man in the next seat if he can change a V.

A Convenient Land Measure.

To aid farmers to arrive at accuracy in estimating the amount of land in different fields under cultivation, the following table is given:

Five yards wide by 968 long contains one acre.

Ten yards wide by 484 long contains one acre.

Twenty yards wide by 242 long contains one acre.

Two hundred and twenty feet wide by 181½ long contains one acre

The Gems of all Odors.

Dr. Price's unique perfumes surpass in durability and natural flowery freshness those made in this or any other country. Persons who think perfumes poor unless they come from abroad, should try Dr. Price's Handkerchief Odors. They are really exquisite.

Chicago has three lady lawyers, but they will never be called in to alter other women's wills.

What kind of a bottle is the most appropriate for holding Bass ale? A Bass vial.—Thirsty Torch.

Why is a meddlesome man like a boat man when rowing? Because he is continually "putting in his oar."

When a man's upper story is without tenants, you will hear his mouth announce the fact.—Whitehall Times.

Two-sided ribbons are very fashionable. They would make suitable neckties for politicians who are on the fence.

A circus clown has been discovered so astonishingly active that he can tumble to his own jokes.—Stamford advocate.

"I tear the tattered end-sign down," shouted the awning repairer as he ripped off the littered side piece of a dilapidated canvass.

A Pamphlet Free.

The Murray Hill Publishing company 129 East 28th St., New York City, will send by mail a large pamphlet entitled Evidence of Dr Foote's Success as a writer and practitioner of medicine, and a catalogue of all their publications—reading enough for several weeks—if you will but enclose one letter stamp to their address.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

TUTT'S PILLS!
A NOTED DIVINE SAYS
THEY ARE WORTH THEIR WEIGHT in GOLD
READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.
REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will with certainty relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these pills, of itself indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
Celebrated American
WORM SPECIFIC OR VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and lead-en-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a gnawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy, not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,
will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

DR. C. McLANE'S

are not recommended as a remedy "for all the ills that flesh is heir to," but in affections of the liver, and in all Bilious Complaints, Dyspepsia and Sick Headache, or diseases of that character, they stand without a rival.

AGUE AND FEVER.

No better cathartic can be used preparatory to, or after taking Quinine.

As a simple purgative they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Each box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

Each wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Insist upon having the genuine Dr. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

FROM COLORADO.

Mountains and Mines.

The New City of Silver Cliff.

SILVER CLIFF, COLORADO, Nov. 21, '78.

DEAR COURIER:—Here I am, nine thousand feet above the level of the sea, or to be exact, 8,763 feet of altitude. I arrived here on Monday the 17th of November, and found the air as balmy and the sun as warm and bright as a summer's day, though snow lay to the depth of a foot in the valley. Arriving at Canon City, I took a drink at the splendid soda spring near by, went to the mouth of Grand Canon, and looked upon its grandeur, and prepared for the journey up the mountains. At 8 o'clock the next morning a six horse stage coach took us aboard, and our journey for thirty miles up the mountains began. Its a grand ride around peaks and spurs, and the road was splendid. I got a seat on the outside along side the driver, a coveted place, and it was beter than a circus to see Yuba Bill handle the reins over his prancing horses. Half way up a new relay of horses was provided, and away we went around deep defiles with snow capped mountains always in view. Pike's Peak, seventy-five miles away to the left, completely enveloped in the "beautiful," looks as though you could reach it in an hour. The air is now so light that I am puffing as though hard at work. Up through the Canon, out upon little valleys, over divides, on we go until the summit is reached, and what a sight. Range after range of peaks and craggy spurs, as far as the eye can reach, stand out bold and picturesque in their grandeur. One poor fellow with us, in the last stage of consumption, is too feeble to move, and his breath comes quick and rapid. He came here for relief, but alas he may be too late. This air will not bring the dead to life, though it's a grand place for those who come in time.

We reach Rosita in time for supper, seven miles from the Cliff. The next morning we start for the great mining camp in Wet Mountain Valley. In two hours we enter the principal street, and find it crowded with busy humanity. On the fifteenth of last September the first house was built, and when I entered it I found rows of business houses on both sides of Cliff street for half a mile, all temporary structures, and many more in course of erection. Saw and hammer were doing their work in every direction, and a more busy scene cannot be imagined. Close by are the Cliffs, some 200 feet high, and in the side of these the workmen are delving, throwing out great heaps of rock. I went up to examine them, and there learned that these stones which, to a novice, or "tender-foot," as they call them here, seemed utterly valueless, were worth from $150 to $200 per ton. Don't it make one open their eyes. Mountain sides of granite, yielding such rich stores. The proprietor picked up a small piece under his feet and showed me the silver as it existed, and there ain't a dozen men in your town who would have detected it.

But the new town is the marvel of wonder. Over 300 houses occupied, others partially completed in two months, with lumber scarce, and thirty miles away down the mountain sides to the railroad. Had there been a good supply of lumber, twice the number would have been built. The accommodations for man are yet quite limited. I slept in a room with eight rudely constructed beds and considered it a lucky chance. There are five hotels going but they are packed, both dining room and kitchen at night. The night before I arrived two men were shot in a saloon, one of which has since died. The fellow who did the shooting skipped the town, and now a vigilance committe is organized. While there are a number of hard cases in the town, I find a majority are industrious, honorable people, who attend to their own business. I have been everywhere and have been treated kindly and politely, and like the stir and enterprise of the place.

The city is handsomely located in a most beautiful valley two miles wide and forty long, and is said to be perfectly lovely in the summer time. Snow does not lie very long here as the sun is quite warm in the day time, and melts the snow on the south side of the ranges soon after it falls. Stock live here through the winter on the pasturage, and one can often see them hundreds of feet up the mountain sides grazing away and in good condition. Prospectors are out every day working away with encouraging results. One fellow struck his pick into a bank a few weeks ago, found ore, and can now take $100,000 for his claim. One mine sends ten tons of ore per day to the crushers, yielding from $140 to $200 per ton. Workmen are developing other finds that promise as well, while many are searching for new ones. Several claims were "jumped" here but they don't hold long. The discoverer generally gains the day, though force is used sometimes. Town lots at this place were "jumped" last week. The rule is when you locate a lot you must commence building or other parties can come along and "jump" or take them. But this is only the case at the start. Revolvers are sometimes brought into requisition to hold claims. And now what shall I say to those of my friends who want a new field of labor. Of course money can be used to advantage here, and if this camp proves permanent, a good thing can be made with small capital. Good lots can be bought from $50 to $200, that may in a year be worth three times that, if the mines hold out. Should other good strikes be found in this locality during the coming spring and summer, this place will run up to ten or twelve thousand population, and all early settlers will be benefited. Should the winter be severe there will not be much work done in the mines until spring, though it is impossible to tell when to strike these mining towns. Carpenters and laborers of all kinds find ready employment at good wages when everything is booming, but it may play out in a short time. There are several towns now in the State which at one time had several thousand population that now have not that many hundreds, owing to the mines proving shallow. Old prospectors have faith in this point, and there is every reason to believe that other big finds will follow. If so, then those already here will be the gainers. I propose to risk it anyhow, as my venture requires no capital, and all I can loose is my health. I do not believe it is near so uncertain as an election in DeKalb county, and I know I would rather take my chances at prospecting than run for Clerk.

—Instead of bridesmaids, the fashion in France now prescribes two tinny pages, who are chosen from the prettiest of the boy relatives of the bride or bridegroom. They are dressed in velvet of the bride's favorite color. As a recent wedding the [illegible] dress worn was of saphire velvet, with white silk stockings and velvet shoes with diamond buckles. A bouquet composed of a rosebud, an orange blossom, and a branch of myrtle is attached to the left side. They perform the usual role of the bridesmaid, carry the bride's missal bouquet, and gloves, and, in addition, meet her and assist her to and from the carriage steps.

—Walter Wilcox, the five-year-old who started alone on a journey from New Orleans to Oakland, Cal., had at last accounts, safely reached Sacramento. He was provided at the outset with a through ticket and a letter explaining that his parents having died of yellow fever, he was on his way to his grandmother in Oakland.—The little traveler was commended to the care of conductors and Free Masons along the route, and has received kind attention. In Chicago he was petted by women and his comfort has been fully attended to.

—A workman in a Troy mill was guiding a red-hot rod between two rollers. He stumbled forward, and the rod entered his mouth, passed out through his cheek, and coiled round and round his body. He was frightfully burned, yet will recover.

—Two convicted thieves were arraigned for sentence in a court in Boxford, Mass. One had stolen hens, and the other, a town treasurer, had stolen public money, but the former's term was made eight years, and the latter's only six.

—The "American Young Folks,' published by Hudson & Ewing, at Topeka, Kansas, comes to us for December beautifully illustrated and filled with entertaining and useful reading. It is really a common sense paper that parents need not hesitate to place in the hands of their children. It contains 16 pages and is sent one year to any address for 50c. The publishers offer to send a sample copy free.

Common Sense.

It is simply in keeping with common sense to say that a specialists who give his undivided attention to the treatment of a certain class of diseases ought to succeed where practitioners in general practice may fail. Dr. E. B. Foote, of 120 Lexington Avenue, New York City, has given his exclusive attention to the treatment of Chronic Diseases for 25 years, during which time he has cured thousands whose faces he has never seen. If you will send to him for his searching list of questions you will see how this has been done in part. Consultations in person or by male free.—Dr. Foot's works, Plain Home Talk, embracing Medical Common Sense, Science in Story, etc., are publications well know to the reading public. Taking all the Doctor's publications together it is not too much to say that millions of copies have been sold.

—Man is the victim of discontent. He either looks for happiness in his recollections of the past, or seeks it in the brilliant visions which his fancy has created of futurity; whereas the the present should be the moment of enjoyment and preparation of the future.

THE SUN FOR 1879.

THE SUN will be printed every day during the year to come. Its purpose and method will be the same as in the past: To present all the news in a readable shape, and to tell the truth though the heavens fall.

THE SUN has been, is, and will continue to be independent of everybody and everything save the truth and its own convictions of duty. That is the only policy which an honest newspaper need have. That is the policy which has won for this newspaper the confidence and friendship of a wider constituency than was ever enjoyed by any other American Journal.

THE SUN is the newspaper for the people. It is not for the rich man against the poor man, but it seeks to do equal justice to all interests in the community. It is not the organ of any person, class, sect or party. There need be no mystery about its loves and hates. It is for the honest man against the rogue every time It is for the honest democrat as against the dishonest republican, and for the honest republican as against the dishonest democrat. It does not take its cue from the utterance of any politician or political organization. It gives its support unreservedly when men or measures are in agreement with the Constitution and with the principles upon which this Republic was founded for the people. Whenever the Constitution and constitutional principles are violated—as in the outrageous conspiracy of 1876, by which a man not elected was placed in the President's office, where he still remains—it speaks out for right. That is THE SUN's idea of independence. In this respect there will be no change in its programme for 1879.

THE SUN has fairly earned the hearty hatred of rascals, frauds and humbugs of all sorts and sizes. It hopes to deserve that hatred not less in the year 1879, than in 1878, 1877 or any other year gone by. THE SUN will continue to shine on the wicked with unmitigated brightness.

While lessons of the past should be constantly kept before the people, THE SUN does no propose to make itself in 1879 a magazine of ancient history. It is printed for the men and women of to-day, whose concern is chiefly of to day. It has both the disposition and the ability to afford its readers the promptest, fullest and most accurate intelligence of whatever in the wide world is worth attention. To this end the resources belonging to well-established prosperity will be liberally employed.

The present disjointed condition of parties in this country, and the uncertainty of the future, lend an extraordinary significance to the events of the coming year. The discussions of press, the debates and acts of Congress, and the movements of the leaders in every section of the Republic will have a direct bearing on the Presidential election of 1880—an event which must be regarded with the most anxious interest by every patriotic American whatever his political ideas or allegiance. To these elements may be added the probability that the democrats will control both houses of Congress, the increasing feebleness of the fraudulent administration, and the spread and strengthing everywhere of a healthy abhorance of fraud in any form. To present with accuracy and clearness the exact situation in each of its varying phases and to expound according to its well known methods, the principles that should guide us through the labyrinth, will be an impotant part of THE SUN's work for 1879.

We have the means of making THE SUN as a political, a literary and a general news aper, more interesting and more useful than ever before; and we mean to apply them freely.

Our rates of subscription remain unchanged. For the DAILY SUN, a four page sheet of twenty eight columns, the price by mail post paid, is 55c a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight page sheet of fifty-six columns, is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year post paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages fifty-six columns, is $1.00 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10.00 we will send an extra copy free. Address,

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Col. Mapleson, the well-known Italian opera manager, has been arrested in New York for cruelty to children, in having girls under 16 years old in his ballet.

THE WEST.

The regular weekly robbery of the Deadwood and Cheyenne coach occurred last week near Fort Fetterman, only two road agents taking part in the job.

The dramatic company of Manager McVicker, of Chicago, for the present season is one of the best he has ever had. Several old favorites have been retained, and from the East he has added several actors of marked ability. His programme for the season will be a strong and interesting one, embracing a number of dramas new to Chicago. The present week "Rosedale," one of the most delightful of modern dramas, is the attraction.

Warren Tate, of Indianapolis, shot and killed one Love, with whom he was engaged in a lawsuit. The deed was committed in the corridor of the Circuit Court, while the court was in session trying the case. The Judge fined Tate $10,000 for contempt of court.

THE SOUTH.

Maj. Elias Rector, one of the oldest and most prominent citizens of Arkansas, is dead.

Cameron's extensive tobacco factory at Petersburg, Va., has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $200,000.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary Sherman estimates that the amount of permanent annual appropriations needed for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, will be $145,930,438; appropriations other than permanent, $129,107,812; total, $275,137,250. This is a reduction of $5,551,545 from the estimates of 1879.

The following are said to be the essential points in Secretary Sherman's resumption programme:

1. United States notes will be redeemed at the New York sub-treasury in gold or silver coin, at the option of the holder of notes, without limitation as to amount.

2. Legal-tender notes of a special issue of large denominations will be delivered in place of gold certificates, and there will be no further issue of gold-certificates.

3. Holders of notes who prefer gold instead of silver will obtain gold, and the treasury will not force upon the holder of notes the kind of legal-tender coin that is not desired.

4. Legal-tenders, even without the enactment of any law affirmatively authorizing it, will be everywhere received for customs dues.

5. Silver dollars will be received for legal tenders or national-bank notes in multiples of $1,000 at any sub-treasury or national bank which is a United States depository, the expense or transportation to be paid by the mint.

Supervising Architect Hill, recently indicted by the United States Grand Jury at Chicago for conspiracy to defraud the Government in connection with the construction of the Custom House in that city, was arrested in Washington last week and held to bail in $5,000. Mueller and Mills, the men who furnished the stone for the building, were jointly indicted with Hill.

GENERAL.

The Marquis of Lorne, the future Governor General of Canada, landed at Halifax, in the steamer Sarmatian, on the 24th of November, and was received with appropriate ceremonies.

A court of inquiry will meet in Chicago next month for the purpose of investigating the conduct of Maj. Reno in the affair of the Little Big Horn, where Custer and his command were slaughtered.... A Chilian corvette having seized an American ship for loading guano on the coast of Patagonia, in violation of the sovereign rights claimed by Chili over that country and its only known commercial product, a diplomatic disturbance, if not something worse, is expected.

The English channel, so prolific of horrors, has just been the scene of another terrible marine tragedy. The steamship Pomerania, a German-American steamer plying between New York and Hamburg, and bound for the latter port, when off Folkestone, at midnight, during the prevalence of a dense fog, came in collision with a bark and sank in ten minutes. There were 220 persons on board, over fifty of whom were lost, including the second and third officers.

POLITICAL.

Following is the official vote of Illinois at the late election: Superintendent of Public Instruction—Slade, Republican, 206,559; Etter, Democrat, 171,355; Hall, National, 65,507; Kate L. Hopkins, Prohibition, 2,293. State Treasurer—Smith, Republican, 215,262; Cronkrite, Democrat, 170,111; Bates, National, 65,623; Gorin, Prohibition, 2,192. The Drainage amendment to the constitution received 205,780 votes, and is therefore adopted.

The official vote for Governor in Kansas is as follows: St. John, Republican, 72,338; Goodin, Democrat, 36,785; Mitchell, Greenbacker, 26,933.

George S. Houston has been elected United States Senator from Alabama, in place of Spencer. Houston was for eighteen successive years, before the war, a Representative in the lower house of Congress.

FOREIGN.

The first collision between the British forces and the Afghanistans occurred on the 21st of November. The fight was for the possession of Fort Ali Musjid, which commanded the Khyber pass. The Afghans held out manfully, but, being threatened in the rear by a flanking force, they were compelled to evacuate the fort and fall back toward Daka, at the other end of the pass. The British loss was about 300 killed and wounded. The enemy abandoned many cannons and large quantities of military supplies.

It is said that eight Russian divisions, amounting to 120,000 men, will be sent into Bulgaria before the end of the year.

Advices from India confirm the reports that the British invading columns will not move far into Afghanistan at present, but will soon go into winter quarters.... A Madrid dispatch says that arrests continue in Barcelona, Saragossa and elsewhere of persons implicated in Federal intrigues.

The hands in 120 cotton mills, to the number of 12,000, are on a strike in Oldham, England.... It is reported that the German capital is to be declared in a state of siege, under the provisions of the Socialist law.

A cable dispatch reports that Turkish Redifs and Circassians sacked 1,200 houses in the Meinik district, in Macedonia, and massacred the inhabitants without distinction of age or sex.

While the Hungarian Prime Minister was entertaining Count Andrassy at Pesth, the other night, a bomb charged with dynamite was exploded in an alley near by. The windows of the palace were badly shattered, but no one was hurt.... England is taking vigorous measures to suppress the Transvaal (South Africa) rebellion.... During a panic on a ferryboat in the Mersey, at Liverpool, fifteen passengers jumped overboard and were drowned.... The British forces continue their advance into Afghanistan, notwithstanding the hostile attitude of Russia. The latter power holds that the British advance is a menace to Central Asia, and will give active support to the Ameer in the event of England occupying any points in Afghanistan from which Russian dominion in Asia might be threatened.

Diphtheria and Its Cure.

Mr. P. Lawrence, of West Chazy, N. Y., writes as follows to the Plattsburg Republican:

Allow me to say a few words of the greatest importance to the public, through your journal, in regard to the terrible disease diphtheria, which is raging with great destruction of lives throughout the county. It has raged here to a fearful extent, quite a large number of cases proving fatal.

There is a family here by the name of Light, who moved here from Rochester this season. Mrs. Light said to some of the neighbors that previous to moving here she had an attack of diphtheria and cured herself by the use of kerosene oil as a gargle, swallowing some; but the remedy was so simple that our citizens didn't think anything of it until five of Joseph Jelley's children were taken down with the diphtheria. Their throats became swollen and cankered terribly. Mrs. Jelley sent after her neighbor, Mrs. Milliette, who had lately lost a son by the disease, to ascertain whether it was really diphtheria or not. Mrs. Milliette pronounced it diphtheria in a very dangerous form. Mrs. Jelley said she would use Mrs. Light's remedy—kerosene oil—which she gave her children as a gargle, also had them swallow some. The children recovered rapidly, and in a few days were out on the street.

Another neighbor by the name of Lusia, railroad trackmaster at this place, had three children taken with diphtheria, and cured them with kerosene oil.

William Emery had four children taken down, and gave kerosene oil and they recovered.

John Reynolds, of Ingraham, had a daughter and niece cured by kerosene oil after they were given up for death by the doctor.

George Gillette had three children taken with the same disease very bad, and they were cured with kerosene.

What is most astonishing is that not a single case where they used kerosene oil has proved fatal. The remedy is simple and certainly cheap, and always at hand in all families throughout the land.

Painless Operations.

The new antiseptic method of surgery which has but recently been introduced into this country has been twice successfully tried at the Alexian Brothers' Hospital, Chicago, during the past two weeks. In each case a leg was amputated, and the patient rapidly recovered, experiencing no pain whatever from the use of the surgical instruments. The method of operation is as follows: The surface of the limb to be amputated is first sponged with a solution of one part carbolic acid to forty of water, into the wound. This makes the operation perfectly painless, and does away with the necessity for using chloroform or ether. The wound is then dressed with oiled silk, saturated with sulphate of lead, which indicates the presence of sulphate of hydrogen by turning black, and shows whether the wound is suppurating. Six layers of medicated gauze are then placed over the wound, and the whole is covered with Mackintosh cloth.

Burglars and Defaulters.

The amount of loss inflicted on our banks by burglars is really small when compared with that due to internal fraud. There has been, indeed, during my own memory, a series of defalcations in the banks of this city which would make a burglar's mouth water, since in but one case was there any punishment. Here are a few figures:

American Exchange Bank, paying teller	$ 90,000
Fulton Bank, cashier's son	65,000
Ocean Bank, paying teller	30,000
Grocers' Bank, assistant cashier	60,000
Tradesman's Bank, bookkeeper	40,000
Merchants' Exchange Bank, cashier	600,000
City Bank, bookkeeper	400,000

The entire capital of the Atlantic Bank ($300,000) was embezzled by its cashier, and this was the only instance in which a sentence was incurred. The Bank of the State of New York lost $500,000 by the fraud of its officers, who retained the plunder with perfect impunity.—New York letter.

Stolen Jewels.

In 1792 the crown jewels of France, shown in the Exposition, were stolen. Two of the men concerned in the theft were captured, but the jewels could not be found. At the time these two men were placed in prison one Lamieville was also there, but presently escaped. Soon afterward he called upon a jailer, who had been kind to him while in prison, and told him that he had overheard the two jewel robbers talking, and learned that they had hid the gems; and, sure enough, at the place designated they were found. Lamieville was subsequently made a military officer. In the reign of Louis XVIII. these jewels were valued at $4,200,000.

A girl in St. Joseph, Mo., went to a drug store to buy arsenic with which to kill herself. The clerk happened to know that she had quarreled with her lover, and he guessed her purpose. He gave her corn starch instead of arsenic, and hurried out to tell her lover. The lover repented having grieved the girl, went to her house, found her lying on a sofa waiting in vain to die of a dose of corn starch, and made up with her.

L. M. Ohley, while passing through a crowd near the New York Postoffice, felt a tug at his diamond stud, and found that a silken cord had been attached and the spiral wire had been nearly straightened out. He traced the cord to a well-dressed man, who begged a thousand pardons and moved off rapidly.

OUR PUNISHMENTS FOR CRIME.

[Horatio Seymour in December Harper.]

While Governor of this State I learned that the suffering for crime, as a rule, fell not upon the offender but upon his family. When I look over our penal law, their titles, to my mind, read between their lines: "Acts to punish wives and children of those who violate their terms." I was constantly appealed to to pardon convicts for these reasons, and in some cases by the wives of those who made the complaints upon which the wrong-doer was convicted. When this was told to them, their answer was that, while that was true, yet when the husbands were in jail, where they were fed and warmed, their wives and children were left to starve and freeze for want of support.

There is no perfect way of dealing with crime, but there is no worse way than the system of this State. Some years ago, a leading lawyer of New York traveled through Egypt. He met the chief of a wandering tribe of the desert, and, among other things, he told this wild ruler of our laws, and the ways we dealt with crime. He was heard with astonishment, and for the first time he himself was struck with their absurdities. After his return he used to say that he was never so thoroughly ashamed of his country as when he was telling his simple-minded auditor what laws we had upon these subjects, and how they were enforced.

While we may not frame perfect systems, much can be done to make a better state of things—to simplify justice, and to break up the tendency to disorderly conduct and to vagrancy. We cannot hope to make any marked improvement in our jails. Each county must have one, and its population will determine the character of its place of confinement. Those in charge of them will be frequently changed, and, save in the large cities, the number and character of the inmates will not admit of classification, etc.

The first change should be one that will allow our Judges to impose punishments other than sending the offenders to these common schools of vice.

As nothing can be worse than our present laws, there can be no harm in trying new plans. We must have jails, as there are cases when the safety of society makes it necessary to lock men up. But, as a rule, other restraints can be used which will check, not teach, crime. Our laws allow only two punishments to be inflicted for minor offenses—fines or imprisonment—and these must be imposed without regard to age, sex, condition or circumstances. The law demands these, it matters not what moral or material mischief they may do. As a rule, fines inflict distress on families and friends, while jails are a gateway to a course of wickedness which leads to the State prisons. For these reasons no punishments are inflicted until the offenders have grown into hardened criminals who excite no sympathy. There is no power to deal in a right way with the first step in crime, with acts of mingled error and wrong-doing. It has been my duty to look into a great number of such cases, and I have given much thought and study to our statutes with regard to them. Next to moral and religious influences, we must rely upon the wisdom of our laws with regard to youthful offenders. It is comparatively an easy matter to deal with grave crimes.

The first step toward reform is to give magistrates a right, within certain limits, to direct such punishments as they shall see are best fitted to reform wrong-doers. They have all the facts before them, and best know what is just and right in each case. This will not give them undue powers, but it will take away pretexts for not doing their duty. Now they must fine, or imprison, or discharge. In many cases either of these courses is unsuitable, and many wrong-doers go free, for to enforce law would only make things worse.

This state of things is full of evil. If magistrates could bind them out to do work, or direct the minors to be chastised by parents or guardians or suitable persons, many would be saved from the moral leprosy which infects our jails. Such or like punishments would be inflicted, and there would be no excuse for letting offenders escape.

Magistrates should have, in addition to their present powers, the same right of control over vagrants, disorderly persons and habitual offenders which parents or guardians have over their children or wards. The fact that they belong to these classes should be judicially decided after a certain number of convictions. When they are thus enrolled in these classes, they should have no right to vote at any election. As our laws now stand, notorious offenders, who do no honest work, who can only live in immoral ways, are held to be innocent persons, when they are arrested, until the formal, technical and sometimes expensive proofs are furnished that they are guilty of practices which there is a moral certainty they indulge in. This is right when they are accused of grave crimes. But there is no hardship in putting such persons into that state of wardship in which the law places all persons who are under the age of 21 years, or who are afflicted with disordered minds. Should disorderly morals be more leniently dealt with than disordered intellects?

There is no danger in giving magistrates the power over habitual offenders which parents and guardians have over minors—that of making them work, of binding them out, and of locking them up; and, in the case of children, having them chastised rather than sent to jails. There is no reason to fear that this punishment will be used too often or too harshly. It would rarely be applied, but should not be made illegal, as i would give magistrates great control, and would do much to put an end to the bravado and swagger of disorderly boys which are so much admired by their weak or youthful companions.

New Men in Congress.

The New York Herald counts 148 Democrats elected to Congress, and says: "Of the 148 Democrats elected 53 are new men. Of the 183 Republicans elected 54 are new men. This excludes men who have served in previous Congresses, such as Gen. Hawley in Connecticut. The eight Greenbackers are all new men, and the Forty-sixth Congress will have, therefore, 115 new members out of a total of 293. Twenty-one of the 53 new Democrats are from Northern States."

The Problem of the Grog-shop.

Has not the temperance movement in this country been too exclusively a moral appeal? Has it not forgotten too much the nature and the circumstances of the evil? Temperance addresses are largely descriptions of the effects of drunkenness. They are tragi-comedies, in which the speaker seeks to make his audience laugh at the antics of the drunkard, and cry over the broken heart and ruined home of his wife and family. This strain is varied with thundering denunciations of "the moderate drinker," compared with whose insidious infamy the immoderate drinker who totally imbrutes himself is an object of pity rather than of reprobation, and with these are mingled chemical and sanitary statistics. The appeal, however, is moral, and the remedy usually proposed is absolute prohibition. The friends of "license," however stringently regulated, are regarded as mere Laodiceans, or worse. But this mere moral appeal to renounce drunkenness because it produces crime and unhappiness and disease is too arid. It forgets the persons to whom it is addressed, and the conditions of their life. Consequently there are the excitement and fury of a revival, vast temporary enthusiasm, and swift backsliding.

For what is drunkenness? It is in its origin the perversion of a natural taste for social enjoyment, and it is most prevalent among those who have the least opportunity for such enjoyment. When it has fixed itself upon its victim, it is largely dependent upon physical conditions. The usual temperance appeal to him is by the mere main strength of his moral will to break up the habit. His home is bare and desolate, and the preacher urges him to prefer it to the cozy and warm and social "saloon." His system, enfeebled by excess, craves the stimulant, and the exhortation is simply not to take it. He needs especially every kind of support and assistance and diversion, and he is told to help himself. This is a relief which forgets the nature of the disease. That of itself suggests the remedy. The drunkard seeks social enjoyment illicitly. Supply it to him lawfully, show him that he can gratify his natural tastes without shame to himself or harm to his family or society. Give to the weak system, which craves "a little something," a little something that will cheer and not inebriate. The drunkard knows the misery that drunkenness produces, for he is its victim. He does not wish to hear of that. The incipient drunkard knows it also. What they want is something to take the place of drunkenness, something that will help them to help themselves. If all the money that is yearly given to support talking upon the subject were devoted to doing something in the way suggested, the "liquor interest" would be confronted with something that it would fear. "Holly-Tree" inns upon a great and general scale, "public coffee-houses" like those in Liverpool, neighborhood clubs which would develop and illustrate the neighborly sympathy which is not now suspected, and the supposed absence of which is most mischievous—all these and similar enterprises would be a temperance movement which would aid the moral appeal and the sanitary argument with those social sympathies and supports which are indispensable to the prosperity of the work.—"Editor's Easy Chair," in Harper's Magazine for December.

Eaten by Cannibals.

Intelligence has been received from the Island of New Britain of the massacre of native Wesleyan mission agents, who were set upon and murdered, and their bodies eaten by the mountain tribes. The Wesleyan Church in Australia directs and supports evangelistic operations in the Friendly islands, the new colony of Fiji, Samoa, the lone island of Rotumah, and the group of islands of which New Britain and New Ireland are the largest. The mission is under the charge of the Rev. George Brown, who resides himself on one of the Duke of York group of islands. Eight of the teachers had expressed their wish and determination to visit the interior tribes of New Britain. They divided into two bands, in order to cross the islands at different parts. Four of them started from Blanche bay, and the other four made the northern side of the island their point of departure. The Blanche bay party returned next day to their point of departure. The other four teachers also reached the plateau in safety, interviewed the natives and were entertained for the night in one of the towns. A chief named Talili, who lived on the low land, but who had influence in the interior, sent a message to the town in which the unfortunate teachers were lodged for the night, beseeching the tribe to kill them. When the doomed men left the village the next morning the people followed, and, calling upon all whom they met working in the plantations by the way to join them in the deed of blood, at length fell upon the unarmed, unsuspicious teachers and slew them in savage fashion. The bodies were cut up, and the pieces sent here and there to the different towns, where they were cooked and eaten with cannibal ceremony and delight. The object of thus distributing the bodies was to implicate a large number of towns in the massacre—a customary device of savages. The Rev. Mr. Brown, on hearing of the massacre, adopted very severe reprisals, the character of which on the part of a missionary have been variously commented on by the Australian press. An expedition was at once organized, and the result of the reprisals was that at least fifty, possibly more, of the cannibals were killed, and many of the towns and plantations were destroyed.—Melbourne Argus.

An anti-equestrian society has been formed in Alabama by people who believe that horses were not made to carry riders, and that to bestride them is an act of cruelty.

Ventilation of Bedrooms.

The London Lancet has some comments on this topic which may be read with as much profit here as in England. It says: "If a man were deliberately to shut himself for some six or eight hours daily in a stuffy room, with closed doors and windows—the doors not being opened even to change the air during the period of incarceration—and were then to complain of headache and debility, he would be justly told that his own want of intelligent foresight was the cause of his suffering. Nevertheless, this is what the great mass of people do every night of their lives with no thought of their imprudence. There are few bedrooms in which it is perfectly safe to pass the night without something more than ordinary precautions to secure an inflow of fresh air. Every sleeping apartment should, of course, have a fire-place with an open chimney, and in cold weather it is well if the grate contains a small fire, at least enough to create an upward current and carry off the vitiated atmosphere of the room. In all such cases, however, when a fire is used, it is necessary to see that the air drawn into the room comes from the outside of the house. By an easy mistake it is possible to place the occupant of a bedroom with a fire in a closed house in a direct current of foul air drawn from all parts of the establishment. Summer and winter, with or without the use of fires, it is well to have a free ingress for pure air. This should be the ventilator's first concern. Foul air will find an exit if pure air is admitted in sufficient quantity, but it is not certain pure air will be drawn if the impure air is drawn away. So far as sleeping-rooms are concerned, it is wise to let in air from without. The aim must be to accomplish the object without causing a great fall of temperature or a draught. The windows may be drawn down an inch or two at the top with advantage, and a fold of muslin will form a "ventilator" to take off the feeling of draught. This, with an open fireplace, will generally suffice, and produce no unpleasant consequences, even when the weather is cold. It is, however, essential that the air outside should be pure. Little is likely to be gained by letting in a fog or even a town mist.

Punch's Advice to Travelers.

On entering a railway carriage kick any parcels you may find in your way, and, if possible, seat yourself upon a bonnet-box.

If ladies are present insist upon lighting a short pipe, and close or open the windows at your own sweet will, and with regard to no one's comfort but your own.

On board the steamboat make yourself a nuisance to your fellow-travelers by indulging in silly practical jokes and smoking bad tobacco.

On arriving at a hotel force your way out of the omnibus before any one else, and in your selection of a room be as unobliging to your fellow-travelers as possible.

Lounge about the hall smoking your favorite pipe, and stare at every lady who enters or leaves the place. If you find a lady away from her father, husband or brother, grin at her.

On your return to the hotel late at night shout at the top of your voice to your companions, to the great disturbance of those who have retired to rest before you.

If you are fond of fun, alter all the bolts at the doors and change the numbers and hours of the "waking-up slate."

If you have to catch an early train in the morning, be careful to arouse, by your noisy conduct, all the other inmates of the hotel.

Touch everything in the museums and picture galleries, and declare in broken French, bad German or imitation Italian (according to the country) that the South Kensington treasures beat all the foreign collections hollow.

In fact, behave like a selfish, underbred, ill-conditioned cad for a month or six weeks, and then return to England to lose your individuality in some small city office, or post of a menial character, until the time arrives for your annual outing next year.

Seeing Under Water.

Vision under water is attended with some peculiar consequences—the result of what is termed "internal" reflection. An eye placed under perfectly still water, as, for instance, the eye of a diver, will see external objects only through a circular aperture, as it were, of 96 degrees, 55 minutes and 22 seconds in diameter overhead. But all objects down to the horizon will be visible in this space—those near the horizon being much distorted and contracted in dimensions, especially in height. Beyond the limits of this circle will be seen the bottom of the water, and all subaqueous objects reflected and as vividly depicted as by direct vision; and, in addition, the circular space above mentioned will appear surrounded with a rainbow of faint but delicate colors. In the eyes of fishes, the humors being nearly of the refractive density of the medium in which they live, the action of bringing the rays to a focus on the retina is almost entirely performed by the crystalline lens, which is nearly spherical, and of small radius in comparison with the whole diameter of the eye.

Her Name.

She was baptized Anna Eliza, and often she sighed that her name was not Maud Ethel or something of that fine sort. "What's the matter with Anna Eliza?" asked her plain, matter-of-fact mother one day. "The matter is," replied the dissatisfied daughter, "that so long as I bear my present name I might as well carry my heart on my sleeve. Everybody discovers my secrets; my inmost thoughts are seen at a glance by all with whom I come in contact." "What on earth do you mean?" inquired the astonished mother. "I mean precisely what I say," answered the daughter between her sobs. "Every friend and acquaintance I have finds it easy to Annalize me." The mother's heart was not touched, but judging from the way she reached for her slipper, the girl was.—Albany Journal.

The Causes of Death.

Over 31,000 deaths, carrying off about 2 per cent. of the population, occurred in Massachusetts last year; and, as the climate and conditions of life in that Commonwealth are in the main the same as those of all the older Northern States, we can get much valuable information by the study of the causes of those deaths.

Of the whole number, more than a third, or 11,170, of the deaths, were those of children under 5 years of age. Less than a tenth part of the total, or only 2,967, died between the ages of 20 and 30, and from 30 onward the deaths numbered 17,205, or something more than a half of the whole. During 1877 there were 41,850 births in the State, but during the same time 6,343 infants under 1 year were swept away by death. To each 1,000 living, the annual death rate under 5 years was over 61, and it did not rise even as high as half that until the age of 70 was passed, when it reached 68, and, then, of course, rapidly increased.

These figures, like the statistics of mortality everywhere, go to show that on the average very young lives are far more in danger than any others, except the very old. The green fruit falls to the ground because it is unable to withstand the blasts or is blighted, and the old fruit drops because it is overripe.

Seventy per cent. of the deaths were cause by twenty different diseases, but the greatest fatality followed the inroads of those old enemies of life, consumption, diphtheria, pneumonia, cholera infantum, old age, and heart disease. The rest of the twenty causes, arranged in the order of their destructiveness, were paralysis, typhoid fever, cancer, dysentery, convulsions, croup, apoplexy, scarlatina, tubercular meningitis, bronchitis, enteritis, diarrhea, Bright's disease, and drowning. Consumption was the great cause of death, as it has been in our climate within the memory of man. More than a sixth of the whole number of deaths for the year were due to that disease. In every county of the State it stood first among the causes of mortality. Diphtheria carried off less than half as many victims, though it was the next most prolific cause of death; and pneumonia, cholera infantum, and heart disease together, though they were all so destructive, were responsible for only about as many deaths as consumption alone.

It is interesting to observe that the deaths from old age—1,586, or about one-twentieth of the whole—stood next in number to those from consumption in three of the Massachusetts counties, and those all the less-densely populated seacoast counties—Barnstable, which includes Cape Cod, Dukes, and Nantucket, comprising the islands of those names, and Plymouth, of national fame. In the hill counties of Berkshire and Franklin, the order was, first, consumption; second, diphtheria; third, old age; and first, consumption; second, pneumonia; third, old age, respectively.—New York Sun.

A Silver Half-Dollar's Return.

Some twenty-five years ago, David P. Texter, residing on the Massillon road, had in his possession a silver half-dollar, made in the year 1828, and, that being his natal year, he cut his name on it and thought to retain it as a relic. After several years, however, he paid it out one day, by mistake, along with some other money, and for twenty years it took its course. Last Saturday he sent his little daughter to Massillon on an errand, and upon her return home she gave him some change, and with it was the identical half-dollar with his name cut on it.—Canton (Ohio) Repository.

The gas-well at Murraysville, Westmoreland county, Pa., turns out to be the largest in the State, the flow being estimated at 300,000 cubic feet a day. The roaring of the gas can be heard for miles, and people are flocking from all parts, while speculators are busy leasing all the lands available.

Sweet cider, even if just from the press, is condemned by the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society.

FARM NOTES.

PLANTS do not require nearly so much watering in the winter as in the summer. They should never be watered until the surface of the soil is dry. If watered too much, the soil becomes sour and heavy, and the plant diseased.

THERE are many farmers who have extra good butter cows, and do not know it. They have poor pastures in summer and no shelter, and indifferent feed in winter. In the house they have no conveniences for making butter, the milk is set where there are no arrangements for keeping it cool in summer, and in the living room, exposed to the odors of the kitchen, in winter, and neither the quantity nor the quality are any index of what a cow can do.

THE Western Stock Journal says: "There should be some fall pigs; they are easily kept through the winter, and will make cheap pork on clover next summer. It is safe to say there will not be many pigs if they are allowed to eat and sleep with the older hogs. Placed in a separate yard, kept from straw stacks, and fed on potatoes, pumpkins, corn and oat meal, cooked, they thrive amazingly; even better than in hot weather."

THE best fodder corn is that grown thickly in drills—so thickly that no ears are developed. Let the ground be rich; let the cultivation be thorough; cut up, when the tassels are dropping their pollen; let it wilt on the ground; tie in small bundles and set in small stacks, binding firmly at the top, and also half-way down. Then let it stand as late as possible before carrying to the barn. If the crop is planted early it may be cut up so early as to get perfectly dry, if it has no ears.—Farmer and Fruit-Grower.

THE hog-cholera-cure men are about, as numerous as the lightning-rod men used to be. Our readers are cautioned against investing, notwithstanding the apparently demonstrative evidence of the venders. The so-called hog cholera is not one disease responsive to one kind of treatment, any more than all the ills that human flesh is heir to are. These patent nostrums are, therefore, frauds, intended only to benefit the pockets of the makers just as cure-alls must in the very nature of the case be. —Journal of Agriculture.

COWS now do better if stabled at night, provided they are well fed, than they would if allowed to remain in the field or yards. There is but little substance to grass after heavy frosts. Calves should receive much attention. They should have a little meal given them in their milk for some time. If they become poor in the fall and winter, it will be very difficult to make up the growth lost. Calves intended for the market when 1 or 2 years old should be "crowded" from the time they are taken from the cow. The idea is to make a yearling as large and of as much value as an ordinary 2-year-old. Those designed to be left on the farm as cows should be kept only in fair condition. They do not then get their growth so young, yet they make better butter producers. To my mind it costs as much to winter a calf the first year as the second. It is as impossible to get them through in good condition, free from vermin, their growth unchecked, without grain of some description, as it is to have hens that will lay well through cold weather with one feed of cold grain a day.—Rural New-Yorker.

TO KEEP CELLARS FROM FREEZING. —The following method for obtaining this desirable object is given in the Scientific American: The experiment was tried by a gentleman with the cellar of an outhouse, in which on several occasions vegetables had frozen, although the cellar was fortified against frost by a process known to farmers as "banking." The walls and ceiling were pasted over with four or five thicknesses of old newspapers, a curtain of the same material being also pasted over the small, low windows at the top of the cellar. The papers were pasted to the bare joist overhead, leaving an air space between them and floor. He reports that the papers carried his roots through the winter, though the cellar was left unbanked, and he is confident they have made the cellar frost-proof. We do not counsel the special use of old newspapers for this purpose. It is just as well or better to use coarse brown paper. Whatever paper is employed, it will be necessary to sweep down the walls thoroughly, and to use a very strong size to hold the paper down into all the depressions of the wall.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

THE nicest mat for common use is made of No. 4 six-thread Dexter's crochet cotton.

SCATTER dry powdered borax for all kinds of insects. This has been proved by years of experience.

TO RID A HOUSE OF "PUNKIES."—If two or three bottles of ammonia, left unstoppered, are put in prominent places in a room they will soon leave. No insects whatever can tolerate it.

IF all steel or tin ware is well rubbed with lard and then with common unslaked lime before being put away, it will never rust. This is also the best plan to remove rust.

DAMP FLOORS.—It should be a fixed rule that floors, particularly those of sleeping-rooms, are to be scrubbed only dry days, and where the health of the inmates is delicate the drying should be quickened by lighting a fire in the room.

RECIPE FOR LIME-WATER.—Lime water is made by adding two ounces of slaked lime to one gallon of pure water and well shaking it for a few minutes. It must be left to stand for twelve hours, and the water may then be drawn off for use by means of a syphon.

A WORD TO THE COOK.—Pickled or salt meat requires longer boiling than that which is fresh. Meat, in order to be tender, should not boil too rapidly. It should be put into cold water and heated gradually. Mutton should be soaked for a couple of hours in cold water previous to boiling.

TO MAKE MATS FOR THE TABLE.—Take small sticks of black walnut and pine; plane them down to one-sixteenth of an inch in thickness and one-half inch in width. Place them alternately, and glue to a piece of heavy cloth. They can be cut round, square, diamond-shaped, or any other pretty way, and, when varnished, make quite a pretty ornamental mat.

BROWN COFFEE.—To eight ounces of butter add one pound and a quarter of moist sugar and a quarter of a pound of molasses; boil those ingredients together until they are sufficiently cooked. This may be tested by dropping a little of the liquid into cold water; if it harden quickly, the coffee is made. Butter some plates, pour the liquid into them, and before it cools drop in a few drops of essence of lemon, or any other flavoring that may be approved.

PLANTS packed away in cellars that are quite dark, or nearly so, will require very little water; once a week will be sufficient, and be very careful to give but little. The gas found in the cellars of some houses will be found to injure these plants, and should be guarded against. Our experience with plants in a sleeping-room is such as to lead us to say that they will not be of the least discomfort, or in any way injure the person occupying the room.

MOTH PREVENTIVES.—Brush and clean woolens and furs thoroughly, put them in tight paper bags and paste them perfectly tight. To make sure, it is better to place a second bag over the first. To prevent the paper bag from being torn, it is better to put it in a box or trunk. Clothes should not be allowed to lie about, but should be carefully put away when no longer in daily use. Camphor is very good to place in drawers. Fold up clothes, sprinkling dry camphor between the folds, and then sew them up in common bed-ticking. It is necessary, to be sure, that moths have not laid eggs in the things before they are packed.

AIR THE BEDDING.—The desire of an energetic housekeeper to have her work completed at an early hour in the morning often causes her to leave one of the important items of neatness undone. The most effectual purifying of beds and bedclothes cannot take place if a seasonable time is not allowed for the free circulation of pure air to remove all impurities which have collected during the hours of slumber. At least two or three hours should be allowed for the complete removal of atoms of insensible perspiration which are absorbed by the bed. Every day this airing should be done, and occasionally bedding constantly used should be carried into the open air, and when practical left exposed to the sun and wind for half a day.

A Bashful Young Man.

Mr. Alfred Ethelridge is bashful; he does not deny it. He wishes he wasn't, sometimes, but wishing doesn't seem to help him much. Everybody in Burlington likes him, except the father of a young lady out on Pond street. With an instinctive knowledge of this old gentleman's feelings, Alfred had forborne to aggravate them, and kept out of the father's way as much as possible, atoning for this apparent neglect by seeing the daughter twice as often. The other afternoon Alfred went up the steps and rang the bell. The door opened, and——

Alfred Ethelridge had never felt quite so lost for language in his life. Presently he stood on one foot and remarked:

"Good afternoon!"

"Gooftnooh," grunted papa, which is, by interpretation, also good afternoon.

"Is—ah—is—er—er—Miss Lollipop—is your daughter at home?" asked Alfred, standing on the other foot.

"Yes, sir," said papa, rather more shortly than Alfred thought was absolutely necessary. Then nobody said anything for a long time. Presently Alfred Ethelridge stood on both feet and asked:

"Is she in?"

"Yes, sir," said papa, not budging a step from his position in the door, and looking as though he was dealing with a book agent instead of one of the nicest young men in Burlington. Then Alfred Ethelridge stood on the right foot and said:

"Does she—can she receive company?"

"Yes, sir," papa said, savagely, not at all melted by the pleading intonation of Alfred's voice, which everybody else thought was so irresistibly sweet. Then Alfred Ethelridge stood on his left foot and said:

"Is she at home."

"Yes sir," papa said, kind of coldly.

Alfred Ethelridge looked down the street and sighed; then he looked up at papa and shivered. Then he stood on his right foot and said:

"Is she in?"

"Yes, sir," papa said, grimly, and never taking his eyes off the young man's uneasy face.

Alfred Ethelridge sighed and looked up the street; then he stood on his left foot and looked at papa's knees, and said, timidly and in tremulous tones:

"Can she see me?"

"Yes, sir," papa said, but he never moved, and he never looked pleasant. He only stood still and repeated a second time, "Yes, sir."

Alfred Etheiridge began to feel ill. He looked up and down the street, and finally pinned his wandering gaze to the bald spot on the top of papa's head; then he said:

"Will you please tell her that Mr. Alfred Ethelridge called?"

"Yes, sir," said papa, and he didn't say any more. And somehow or other Alfred Ethelridge kind of sort of got down off the porch and went kind of out of the gate like. He discontinued his visits there, and explained to a friend that the old man didn't say anything that wasn't all right and cordial enough, but the manner of him was rather formal.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

GREAT LABOR-SAVING INVENTION.

Geo. W. Peck's Self-Raking, Stem-Winding, Breech-Loading, Lock-Stitch, Stern-Wheel, Seven-Octave, Non-Explosive, Base-Burner, Automatic Urchin-Chastiser, and Combined Hair-Comb, Editorial Protector, Hash-Cutter, Beefsteak-Pounder, Assistant Educator, Etc.

This is an age of invention, and there is no knowing what a day may bring forth. Prominent educators have for years racked their brains and consumed midnight oil to devise some method whereby the youthful student, the urchin with thick-soled pantaloons, could be chastised as the gravity of his offense might demand, without inflicting a more severe punishment upon the lady teacher's hand than upon the child. Previous to the invention of this machine, principals of schools have wept to see their assistants go around with their arms in a sling from the effects of punishing scholars. In many instances excellent teachers, who loved their calling, have been compelled to resign their positions, and get married, because they had too much on their hands. The matter has been discussed at the various institutes, and it had been almost decided to adopt capital punishment, instead of the time-honored taking across the knee, when the inventor of this machine stepped in, and, by the simple device above illustrated, has saved the lives of many valuable young ones. The heart of the inventor was touched at seeing a frail schoolma'am, with her right hand swelled up to the size of a canvas ham, from agitating a boy who had wickedly placed a piece of clapboard inside of his trowserloons, when he knew that the teacher was on the war path after him. He was a bad boy, and will probably fetch up in Congress. The teacher was weeping, and saying she would be cussed if she didn't run that boy through a threshing machine before she got through with him. The idea at once struck the inventor that a machine could be constructed that would tan the jacket, as it were, of the young Modoc, and you see the result of careful thought and study in the machine before you.

AS A SPANKING MACHINE.

What a change. Instead of dreading the task of punishing scholars, and shivering at the prospect of blistered hands, the teacher can enjoy the performance, and look forward to the hour for doing up the day's spanking with a feeling of pleasure and gladness, and the frown formerly stereotyped on the face of the average schoolma'am gives place to an angelic smile. She seats herself at the instrument, with a dime novel in her hand, after placing the condemned urchins in a row within reach of the hoisting apparatus, or ice-tongs; she smiles, touches the snatch-brake with her foot, and the doomed urchin is launched into—if not eternity, he will think so before that hand lets up on him. With a smile playing over her features she works her tiny hoof and the avenging hand descends, the boy says his "now I lay me," and the old machine works as though endowed with life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. [Care should be taken not to work the machine too rapidly at first, as it may make it hot—for the boy. Or it might telescope his spinal meningitis, with fatal results. Any teacher can work it all right after perchance killing a few scholars of the cheaper kind.] It will only take a moment of treading to make any ordinary boy sorry he enlisted, when he can be dropped and the next can be snatched. A whole school can be spanked in fifteen minutes if the teacher is anything of a treader. We make different-sized machines, suitable for the primary department, the intermediate, the High School, the Normal School and the State University.

AS A SELF-RAKER.

The ease with which this machine can be changed from one thing to another will convince the reader that it is almost human. It will remind one of a politician, every time it changes. To change it from a spanking machine to a self-raker, all you have to do is to unscrew the "hand," remove it and screw on a fine comb, change ends with the boy, and proceed to search for things that live, and move, and have a being, and bite boys' heads. This will tend to relieve mother of much searching investigation, as the school teacher can, by simply using her foot, keep the heads of all the children free from the festive bug, that at times makes life a burden.

AS AN EDITORIAL PROTECTOR.

Every editor in the land will thank us, on his bended knees, for this invention, as it solves a problem that has disturbed the minds of the knights of the scissors for many generations, viz.: How to exterminate the exchange fiend, the man who steals exchanges when you are busy writing. The editor can have a machine sitting in his office. In place of the hand of Providence, we screw on a cast-iron fist, weighing 700 pounds. If you desire to simply maim the fiend for life, you work the treadle mildly, and merely mash his eye out, and italicize his nose and break his jaw-bone. But if he is an old offender, and you want to make an example of him, you keep treading, and the pile driver will come down on him like a President on a Postmaster, and break every bone in his body, and flatten him as thin as one of Colfax's vindications.

AS A HASH CUTTER.

To transform the machine into a hash cutter, it is only necessary to unjoint the hand, and put in its place an ordinary chopping-knife, and set the machine to running. (Of course it is understood that the boy should be removed and a piece of beef hoisted in its place, unless you are fond of boy hash.) We have testimonials from some of the best hotels in the State, where our machine has been used as a hash cutter, and they all unite in pronouncing it the most successful aid to the dissemination of meat that has lost its charm for quarders that they ever saw. Only one accident has occurred thus far. At a Madison hotel, the proprietor had been chastising one of the dining-room girls with the machine, and stepped out to see a man, leaving the girl hoisted on the ice tongs. The cook took the machine to cut some meat for hash, and forgot to take the girl down, and she was cut finer than mustard-seed. One of the boarders was the first to discover the tragedy. He got a piece of earring on his plate, and immediately gave the alarm, but it was too late. The funeral was largely attended. These accidents need not occur, if the manipulator of the machine uses ordinary caution.

There is no end to the different uses to which the machine can be put. Anything that requires a strong horizontal motion, can be done better by machinery, and this machine will fill a want long felt. But it is as an urchin chastiser that its principal merit lies, and in which its owner expects to amass a fortune. It is not only in the school-room that the machine can be utilized, but in the family. Any family that has thirty-five or forty children can make a machine pay for itself in a year, and the work can be done much more satisfactorily. Where families are smaller, several can club together and own one in partnership, and some one can be appointed to chastise a whole neighborhood. The invention of this machine opens a field for the unemployed by which they can make a good living. Those female book agents can buy a machine and mount it on a wheelbarrow, and go about from house to house, doing jobs that any mother would be glad to pay a quarter to get off her hands.—George W. Peck in Milwaukee Sun.

A Dog and a Pig.

There is a dog at Taupo and also a young pig, and these two afford a curious example of animal sagacity and confidence in the bona fides of each other. These two animals live at the native pah on the opposite side of Tapuaeharuru, and the dog discovered some happy hunting grounds on the other side, and informed the pig. The pig, being only 2 months old, informed the dog that he could not swim across the river, which, at that spot, debouches from the lake, but that in time he hoped to share adventures with his canine friend. The dog settled the difficulty. He went in to the river, standing up to his neck in water, and crouched down; the pig got on his back, clasping his neck with his forelegs. The dog then swam across, thus carrying his chum over. Regularly every morning the two would in this way go across and forage around Tapuaeharuru, returning to the pah at night; and, if the dog was ready to go home before the pig, he would wait till his friend came down to be ferried over. The truth of this story is vouched for by several who have watched the movements of the pair for some weeks past. —New Zealand paper.

Cleopatra's Needle.

Northern climates are ill-adapted for the preservation of stone monuments, at the best; and when there is added to the inclemencies of the weather the action of a corrosive atmosphere, like that of London, the hardest stone stands small chance of preserving its integrity for any great length of years. The Egyptian column, Cleopatra's Needle, is scarcely in position on the banks of the Thames when the question of its preservation engages the attention of the Metropolitan Board of Works. At a recent meeting, the engineer and consulting chemist of the board reported that the surface of the Needle was in a condition that made it liable to be rapidly disintegrated by the action of the London atmosphere and by frost. It was recommended that a trial be made of a "stone solution," to harden the surface and make it impervious to the weather; but, on the assertion by members of the board that the same solution had been used without success on the House of Parliament, the matter was referred to a committee for further inquiry.—Scientific American.

The Small Boy.

Every day we have evidence that the small boy has no soul. The other day a crowd gathered around a farmer whose wagon-load of butter and eggs was fast in a mud-hole, and, while some suggested that he pull his horse gee, and others that he pull him haw, the ever-present small boy yelled, "It's no use, mister. Yer old hoss ain't stout enough. Take him out an' hitch in a roll of yer butter."—Oil City Derrick.

An American Tiger Slayer.

D'Harnancourt, the great professional tiger slayer, who is employed by Great Britain, through the Government of Singapore, to exercise his specialty, is a native of the United States, though of French extraction. His father, having been taken prisoner while with Napoleon in the Moscow campaign, was sent to Siberia, whence he escaped, and came to this country. The son was born on the plains of the far West and early became a hunter, ranging in search of game over an immense territory. Desirous to see the world, he went to sea; was wrecked off Formosa, and badly treated by the natives of that island. An English Captain induced him to visit Singapore, where he got his engagement, his price being £10 per head for tigers. D'Harnancourt is saving money to go to Algeria, where he will be under French authority, and where he can kill lions instead of tigers, as he covets the fame of a lion-slayer, and is desirous to rival Girard. He is a reckless hunter, and inclined to intemperance.

LONDON converts her public bath-houses into gymnasiums for the winter, under the provisions of an act of Parliament passed at the last session.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY,

CONDUCTED BY J. G. HOLLAND.

The Handsomest Illustrated Magazine in the World.

The American edition of this periodical is now

MORE THAN 70,000 MONTHLY,

And it has a larger circulation in England than any other American magazine. Every number contains about one hundred and fifty pages, and from fifty to seventy-five original wood-cut illustrations.

Announcements for 1878-9.

Among the attractions for the coming year are the following:

"HAWORTH'S," a serial novel, by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, author of "That Lass o' Lowrie's." The scene of Mrs. Burnett's new novel is laid in Lancashire; the hero is a young inventor of American birth. "Haworth's" is the longest story Mrs. Burnett has yet written. It will run through twelve numbers of the Monthly, beginning with November, 1878, and will be profusely illustrated.

FALCONBERG, a serial novel, by H. H. Boyesen, author of "Gunnar," "The Man Who Lost His Name," etc. In this romance, the author graphically describes the peculiarities of Norse immigrant life in a Western settlement.

A STORY OF NEW ORLEANS, by George W. Cable, to be begun on the conclusion of "Falconberg." This story will exhibit the state of society in Creole Louisiana about the years 1803-1-5, the time of the Cession, and a period bearing a remarkable likeness to the present Reconstruction period.

PORTRAITS OF AMERICAN POETS. This series (begun in August with the portrait of Bryant) will be continued, that of Longfellow appearing in November. These portraits are drawn from life by Wyatt Eaton and engraved by T. Cole. They will be printed separately on tinted paper, as frontispieces of four different numbers. Illustrated sketches of the lives of the poets will accompany these portraits.

STUDIES IN THE SIERRAS, a series of papers (mostly illustrated) by John Muir, the California naturalist. The most graphic and picturesque, and, at the same time, exact and trustworthy studies of "The California Alps" that have yet been made. The series will sketch the California Passes, Lakes, Wind Storms and Forests.

A NEW VIEW OF BRAZIL.—Mr. Herbert H. Smith, of Cornell University, a companion of the late Prof. Hartt, is now in Brazil, with Mr. J. Wells Champney (the artist who accompanied Mr. Edward King in his tour through "The Great South"), preparing for SCRIBNER a series of papers on the present condition—the cities, rivers and resources of the great empire of South America.

THE "JOHNNY REB" PAPERS, by an "ex-Confederate" soldier, will be among the raciest contributions to SCRIBNER during the coming year. They are written and illustrated by Mr. Allen C. Redwood, of Baltimore. The first of the series, "Johnny Reb at Play," appears in the November number.

THE LEADING EUROPEAN UNIVERSITIES. We are now having prepared, for SCRIBNER, articles on the leading Universities of Europe. They will be written by an American College Professor, Mr. H. H. Boyesen, of Cornell (author of "Falconberg," &c.), and will include sketches of the leading men in each of the most important Universities of Great Britain and the Continent.

Among the additional series of papers to appear may be mentioned those on "How Shall We Spell" (two papers by Prof. Lounsbury), "The New South," "Lawn-Planting for Small Places" (by SAMUEL PARSONS, of Flushing), "Canada of To-day," "American Art and Artists," "American Archæology," "Modern Inventors;" also, Papers of Travel, History, Physical Science, Studies in Literature, Political and Social Science, Stories, Poems; "Topics of the Time," by Dr. J. G. Holland; record of New Inventions and Mechanical Improvements; Papers on Education, Decoration, &c.; Book Reviews; fresh bits of Wit and Humor, &c., &c., &c.

Terms, $4.00 a year in advance; 35 cents a number.

Subscriptions received by the publishers of this paper, and by all booksellers and postmasters. Persons wishing to subscribe direct with the publishers should write name, postoffice, county and State, in full, and send with remittance in check, P. O. money order or registered letter, to

St. Nicholas,

SCRIBNER'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR GIRLS AND BOYS.

An Ideal Children's Magazine.

Messrs. SCRIBNER & Co., in 1873, began the publication of ST. NICHOLAS, an Illustrated Magazine for Girls and Boys, with Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge as editor. Five years have passed since the first number was issued, and the magazine has won the highest position. It has a monthly circulation of OVER 50,000 COPIES.

It is published simultaneously in London and New York, and the transatlantic recognition is almost as general and hearty as the American. Although the progress of the magazine has been a steady advance, it has not reached its editor's ideas of best, because her ideal continually outruns it, and the magazine as swiftly follows after. To-day ST. NICHOLAS stands

ALONE IN THE WORLD OF BOOKS.

The New York Tribune has said of it: "ST. NICHOLAS has reached a higher platform, and commands for its service wider resources in art and letters than any of its predecessors or contemporaries." The London Literary World says: "There is no magazine for the young that can be said to equal this choice production of Scribner's press."

Good Things for 1878-9.

The arrangements for literary and art contributions for the new volume—the sixth—are complete, drawing from already favorite sources, as well as from promising new ones. Mr. Frank R. Stockton's new serial story for boys,

"A Jolly Fellowship,"

Will run through the twelve monthly parts—beginning with the number for November, 1878, the first of the volume—and will be illustrated by James E. Kelly. The story is one of travel and adventure in Florida and the Bahamas. For the girls, a continued tale,

"Half a Dozen Housekeepers,"

By Katharine D. Smith, with illustrations by Frederick Dielman, begins in the same number; and a fresh serial by Susan Coolidge, entitled "Eyebright," with plenty of pictures, will be commenced early in the volume. There will also be a continued fairy tale called

"BUMPTY DUDGET'S TOWER,"

Written by Julian Hawthorne, and illustrated by Alfred Fredericks. About the other familiar features of ST. NICHOLAS, the editor preserves a good-humored silence, content, perhaps, to let her five volumes already issued prophesy concerning the sixth, in respect to short stories, pictures, poems, humor, instructive sketches, and the lure and lore of "Jack-in-the-Pulpit," the "Very Little Folks" department, and the "Letter-box" and "Riddle-box."

Terms, $3.00 a year; 25 cents a Number.

Subscriptions received by the Publisher of this Paper, and by all Booksellers and Postmasters. Persons wishing to subscribe direct with the publishers should write name, Postoffice, County and State, in full, and send with remittance in check, P. O. money order, or registered letter to

TWO PARTIES of medical students in Vermont went out after the same corpse. The first to arrive on the ground ambushed themselves and let the second party exhume the corpse, then rushed upon them with wild shouts of "Body-snatchers!" and "Arrest them!" and when their rivals had fled carried off the corpse delicti at their leisure.

AUBURN, INDIANA, DEC. 5th, 1878

THEODORE REED, - - Editor.

The New York Tribune (republican) admits that the radical party is in the minority in Maine, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin, and has but a slender and insignificant majority in Iowa over the democratic and greenback vote combined. It says: "Taking those votes in each state which appear to indicate most correctly the division of parties, we find that 3,173,000 votes in the nine states named were divided as follows: Republican, 1,475,000; democratic, 1,247,000; greenback, 451,000. The democratic and greenback vote together exceeds the republican vote in each of the states, and by 224,000 in the aggregate. It is certain that the entire democratic and greenback vote can never be united, but the democrats could lose over 100,000 hard money men in the union, or about one in twelve of their whole number, and still have a majority of votes, and secure enough electors to ensure their success in the presidential election quite certain."

And so it is with all the leading radical journals of the country that are frank enough to acknowledge the situation. They are compelled to "take water" on the "solid north" business, and now their only hope is, "Grant and a strong government"—a one man power—a MONARCHY.

Grant for King.

The following from London, England explains itself:

LONDON, Nov. 29.—It appears that there is some foundation for the report that Gen. Grant has been proposed as a candidate for the throne of Bulgaria.

Under the provisions of the first and second articles of the treaty of Berlin, Bulgaria is constituted an automatic tributary Principality under the suzerainty of the Sultan, with a Christian Government and national militia. The Prince is to be elected by the population, and their choice is to be approved and confirmed by the Porte and by England, France, Germany, Russia, Austria and Italy. No member of any reigning European dynasty is eleigible to the post, and this provision of the treaty has greatly limited the number of eligible candidates.

The far-spread and brilliant reputation of Gen. Grant as a soldier and ruler, it is said, has led the Bulgarian nobles, who are now debating among themselves the question of a ruler and the details of a new constitution, to look upon him as the most desireable Prince. It is urged that he will be most eminently fitted for this post. Under the provisions of the treaty of Berlin perfect equality in political and religious rights is to be extended to all the inhabitants of Bulgaria, and is thought a wholly impartial forigner, like Gen. Grant, can best secure the execution of the laws designed to secure this equality. No formal proposition on the part of the Bulgarian notabilities has yet been made to Gen. Grant, and if it it made it is thought the General will decline the honor.

By a little remodeling by an expert radical reporter, the following would have made a capital blood-and-thunder bull-dozing paragraph from the south; especially if it had occurred just before the elections

PORT GIBSON, Miss., Nov. 27.—Dr. Buck, sheriff of Claiborne county, having received information before daylight this morning that Harrison Page, a negro desporado, who assassinated the chancery clerk of this county two years ago, was at his house, three miles from town, went out with his deputies to arrest Page. One of the deputies, Robert Lum, was shot and instantly killed from a window. The sheriff, on forcing the door, was shot in the bowels, face and arm, and is in a dying condition. Thomas Harwood, another deputy, was knocked into an old cistern and left for dead, though he has since revived and is not seriously hurt. A posse left town immediately, and Chas. Wellman, one of the posse, while riding near Page's house, was shot through the face, arm, leg and hand. He is still alive. The assassin escaped, though some of his accomplices were killed.

In Maine	12 800
Connecticut	8 000
New York	45 000
Pennsylvania	77 000
New Jersey	12 000
Ohio	35 000
Indiana	52 000
Illinois	40 000
Michigan	45 000
Wisconsin	10 000
Majority against republicans	333 800

Does this indicate a solid North? Has radicalism been indorsed by the voters of the North?

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

—J. B. White, Dan Earhart and Jake White are off on a hunt in the south woods.

—Henry Baker, of Concord, returned from his Michigan hunt Sunday morning. Hank, a six week's hunt ought to have resulted in your killing at least one or two small animals.

—Jake Dermott has 8 fat hogs, and says before he will sell for the prices he will eat the whole of them himself. Better to sell than to undertake the job yourself.

—Solomon Shilling shipped from this station four car loads of hogs Tuesday last. Sol. likes to have the name of bell weather whether the business pays or not.

—Be it known by every one interested that St. Joe, though for a long time without preaching, has at last succeeded in procuring the services of a United Brethren minister, and hereafter will have preaching the second and last Sabbaths in each month.

—We understand an effort will be made the coming summer to build a church. Quite a number of our well-to-do citizens will pay liberally.

—We hear considerable grumbling among the subscribers to the COURIER, that it is of late one day later than usual. Can the editor tell us where the fault is, or is there a fault at all. Several times of late the packages for Newville and Spencerville have come to this office to be sent to their destination, but the papers for this place failed to put in an appearance. Are they all mailed at once? [Yes. Ed.]

—During the month just past we have shipped from this place 23 car loads of wheat, 3 cars of apples, 6 cars of hogs and 10 car loads of lumber. Prices for wheat have averaged 86 to 90c.; oats, 18 to 20c.; hogs, $2.25 to $2.50. Coulter & Batchelor, of Hicksville, and E. Case, of Spencerville, buy the grain while Uncle Sol. gathers in the swine.

—A chap hailing from Garrett, said to be the proprietor of a paper in that city of mud, imbibed rather too much Spencerville benzine Sunday night, and the consequence was before reaching St. Joe his clothes showed that he had made connection with some of Concord's mud. The obliging agent at this place took him under his fatherly protection and got him on the 11 o'clock train. Where he would have brought up, had it not been for Charley, it is hard to tell. A. A. A.

BRUTAL BUTCHERY IN ALLEN CO.

[Fort Wayne News.]

Another cold-blooded, deliberate murder has been committed in our county. On Saturday last, William Crance, a professional hunter and trapper, a man of notoriously evil propensities, who lives at Sheldon, on the southern boundary of the county, and Jonah Corson, a farmer, residing about three miles north of Sheldon, met after a turkey shooting match in the neighborhood, and engaged in card playing. It was at this meeting that the difficulty between these two men began. Crance accused Corson of having stolen one of his turkeys; this Corson indignantly denied. Crimination and recrimination followed. Words led to blows. A free fight took place, and Crance received an artistic and highly polished thrashing. When the fracus had subsided, Crance left the place, swearing vengeance against Corson. Corson and his companions remained for some time longer at the drinking place, and, just as the shades of evening began to fall, he, in company with a young man John C. Hart, started homeward on the railroad track. They had reached a point half a mile north of Sheldon, when Crance overtook them on the track and demanded his turkey. Corson replied that he had no turkey belonging to Crance, and was about to proceed onward, when Crance drew his gun to his shoulder and discharged the contents of both barrels into the face of the unfortunate farmer, killing him instantly and horribly mutilating his features. Poor Corson fell with his body across the track, his head resting upon one rail, and his legs across the other. The murderer at once fled from the scene, a vision of the bloody face of his victim only following. Sheriff Munson was immediately notified, who with a deputy proceeded to Sheldon where they learned that Crance was armed and had threatened to shoot the first man who attempted his arrest. They tracked him to the saw mills near the railroad. Mr. Munson first explored the northern mill and finding nothing, was about to enter the second mill, when Crance broke from his shelter and fled, carrying his gun in his hand. He fled at a rapid gait, hotly pursued by Munson and Cosgrove, until he had reached the home of one King, about one fourth of a mile east of Sheldon. Here he dodged his pursuers about some outhouses for a while; but finally secured a position for defense. Half reclining, with his head against the rails of a fence, he waited, with levelled gun the coming of the officers. Sheriff Munson discovered him, and advancing rapidly, while the deadly weapon was pointed full at his breast, all the while cautioning the murder not to move at peril of his life, he suddenly sprang upon Crance, and in an instant had his knee upon the murderer's throat At the same moment, deputy Cosgrove seized the gun and after a short struggle the weapon was secured, and the villian hand-cuffed.

A Good One on Reub.

A communication from "A Farmer," published in the Syracuse Gazette asks whether the report of the Auditor of Kosciusko county, "now being circulated in pamphlet form is paid for out of the county treasury or not," and whether "that wonderful map cost anything extra." The "Farmer" says; "I would not say anything disrespectful of a mechanic, but it looks as if some blacksmith had tried to hammer out a job of some kind and had failed and called it a map, and impressions had been taken from it."

Elocutionary Entertainment.

A grand entertainment at the M. E. church, Auburn, on Friday evening, December 13th, by Miss Vineyard, of Toledo, O. All who have heard Miss Vineyard, pronounce her public entertainments a grand success. It is to be hoped that all our people will turn out and enjoy this rare intellectual treat, as the attendance fee is placed at the small sum of 25 cents for adults, and 15 cents for children. Many will doubtless remember the brief and charming display of her oratorial powers at the residence of Dr. Ford sometime since, at a session of the Presbyterian social. No reserved seats. Door open at 7 o'clock, entertainment at 7:45. 2w

NO YOU DON'T!

DOT LEEDLE UNIDED STADES MARSHAL VAS NOD GUIDE GWICK ENUF RITE AVAY.

James Still Languishes.

The "Colonel" and her gang put in another appearance last Tuesday and attempted to "play it smart," and secure the release of James V. Hazzard from jail. The scheme was well planned but the actors failed in the execution of it. The particulars as near as we could gather them are about as follows. It appears that Mrs. Gear and her accomplices came here with a bond for release, signed by Hon. E. Henderson, of Anderson, Ind. The bond was presented to Sheriff Leas who refused to accept it, on the grounds that Henderson was unknown to him, and, while it contained an affidavit as to the makers responsibility at the date of the bond, which was a week old when presented, the sheriff did not regard that as sufficient proof that the maker of the bond was worth a dollar at the time it was presented, therefore he demanded more evidence. Had the bond been accepted as expected, then is when the accomplices were expected to get in their work, as they were aware that other warrants were in the hands of an officer and would be served immediately upon the release of Hazzard on bail, and in order to defeat this, it is suspected that one of the parties engaged in an attempt to kidnap Hazzard, was a United States Marshal in disguise, who was ready to take charge of the prisoner on some pretext as soon as released by the sheriff, and hurry him out of town, which would have been the last of "Jeems" in this vicinity. But "the best laid schemes of mice and men" sometimes fail, and the parties to the plot become ashamed of their undertaking and sneak away at the first opportunity as they did in this case. Parties who lay claim to honor and respectability should bear in mind that any attempt at chicanery in the interest of the Hazzards recalls the old proverb in the minds of the Auburn people, that 'birds of a feather, flock together.'

JOY FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Music! Music!

We are at last enabled to announce that a grand musical convention will be held here during the holidays, under the direction of Prof. S. W. Straub, of Chicago. Work will begin at two P. M., Christmas, and will close on Saturday night with a grand concert. In this part of Indiana, the name of Prof Straub is a sufficient guaranty that the work to be done will be strictly first-class. The Convention and Concert will be held in the new Presbyterian church Tickets admitting to Convention and Concert, $1 50. Boarding place at the lowest possible rates are already provided for all who may come. For circulars, giving full information in regard to the work to be done, address,

THE TWO ROSES.

My love, my May, and I, one day,
  Enchanted with the weather,
Walked through the shade of woodland glade
  In bliss, because together.
Said sweetheart May, "Look, love, I pray!"
  I looked, and saw her bending
A rose-bush o'er, her beauty more
  Than earthly radiance lending
Unto the flower, whose hue the power
  Of heaven was spent in blending.

Two roses grew, but only two,
  In solitary splendor,
Upon the bush—I made a rush
  To pluck and then to render
Them unto whom their earthly bloom
  Could offer no comparing;
But "Stay, oh stay!" said sweetheart May,
  "Nor pluck them; for by sparing
They two will blow till winter's snow,
  Your love and mine declaring!"

My love, my May, and I, one day,
  While winter winds were blowing,
Came to the place where once in grace
  Two flowers we loved were growing;
But gone was one, and low upon
  The mossy rock was lying;
The other, filled with dew distilled
  From Evening's vase, was sighing,
As though it wept the friend who slept,
  And murmured at his dying.

"An evil sign, dear sweetheart mine,"
  I said; "what is its meaning?
It may portend, what Heaven forfend
  It does not, that the gleaning
Of death is nigh, when you or I
  Must here be left a sighing."
And, as I spoke, my voice it broke
  In sobs—and, almost crying—blush to say—I looked at May
  To list her sweet replying.

My love, my May, what did she say?
  She said: "My dear, these flowers
Were bruised by fate, when separate,
  For one, by all the powers
Of nature torn, now lies forlorn
  Upon the sod expiring;
The other, left of friend bereft,
  Of life is quickly tiring.
The lesson's plain—then why remain
  A two, when, by aspiring
To marriage, we a one shall be,
  Each other's hopes inspiring?"

* * * * * * *

'Tis passing strange, a wondrous change
  Has come upon the flower,
Once all alone—for there have grown
  And bloomed—a heaven-sent dower—
Three blossoms fair, of beauty rare,
  Anear the parent stem;
'Twas just to-day, I went with May,
  And, calmly looking on them,
"A prophecy!" said I, and she—
  She blushed, and sighed, "Ahem!"

AFTER MORENGO.

A Most Remarkable Affair.

BY L. H. CUMMINS.

Early one morning in the month of June, I started from the camp, mounted on one of the toughest California mustangs that ever climbed a mountain trail. I was the leader of a party engaged by the stage agent to ferret out and bring within the grasp of justice, if possible, a notorious gang of road agents. We all entered into the spirit of the enterprise with a will, for we had been longing for some kind of adventure, as fully a month had passed since the "dry season" had set in, and, on account of the scarcity of water, we were obliged to abandon our claims until the winter rains. So it was with joy we embraced the opportunity that now presented itself for consuming at least a portion of the long, tedious interval. We had been engaged in this most agreeable work for some weeks without many favorable results; and, on the morning referred to, I decided to try my luck unaccompanied by the other members of the party. So I started out a day in advance; and, in the afternoon, at the time mentioned, was winding my way along a narrow trail—having left the stage-road far behind—and, from the fresh imprints in the trail, I was convinced it had been traversed but a short time before. I had never, at any previous time, penetrated so far into this forest of chaparral and incipient oaks; it was the densest I had ever seen, and the trail that led into it was the most tortuous and serpentine I had ever traveled. But, as I had never before struck a trail that did not lead to some place, I concluded that this one led somewhere also. This conclusion was soon verified, when a sudden turn brought me into a natural clearing, of some 500 or 600 yards in circumference, in the center of which stood a house and a barn. Now, thought I, my efforts have been rewarded with success; here is the rendezvous of the notorious Morengo gang. At that moment my mustang, whose best feelings were evidently aroused by the sight of the barn, gave vent to a very spirited and prolonged whinny. I had not sufficient time to turn and get under cover of the chaparral before a dog—a most savage and ferocious-looking brute—made his appearance, and, taking in the situation, was making a very straight line in my direction, when, to my great relief, and not less to my surprise, the door of the house flew open and a lady appeared, whose quick order:

"Tiger, Tiger! come back here, sir;" accompanied at the same time with an emphatic stamp of her foot, brought the enraged animal cowering back.

"Won't you come in, sir?" she said, addressing me; "you must be very much fatigued." And, in almost the same breath, cried: "Ah Toy, Ah Toy! come and put the gentleman's horse away."

I immediately dismounted, and handed my horse over to the guileless and inoffensive-looking Mongolian who responded to the lady's call.

"Walk right in, sir," she said. I entered and thanked her for her kindness.

"You will please excuse me a moment, sir," she said, gazing down at her soiled apron. "I hardly expected any one to-day," she continued, displaying just the least confusion while contemplating what she doubtless thought her unpresentable appearance.

She withdrew into an adjoining room, and I took advantage of her absence by surveying the one in which I was sitting. It was furnished in a manner uncommon to that section of the country. Everywhere there were evidences of the delicate taste possessed by its fair mistress. The floor was carpeted; the walls were covered with white muslin; there were upholstered chairs and a sofa; on a small table in the center of the room was a pile of books; and in one corner was an open secretary.

How remarkable, thought I, to find such a house and so lovely a creature—for such she was—presiding over it in this isolated spot. But my thoughts were soon disturbed by the reappearance of the principal object of my wonder.

"Pardon me, please, for leaving you so long alone," she said, as she settled into a chair and smoothed down the waves of the rich dress which she had donned in her absence, and added: "You must have traveled a long distance to-day."

"Yes," said I, "I have come all the way from C——ville."

"Why, you must be quite exhausted," said she; and, at the same time rising and going to a door, "Ah Toy, Ah Toy!" she cried; "get some dinner for the gentleman."

All my protestations were of no avail.

While awaiting the preparation of dinner we conversed freely, and I discovered that she possessed, beside her personal charms, rare attractions of the mind, for she was well read and intelligent. I learned from her that her father was a miner, whose claim lay in the immediate vicinity, and that he would be home in the evening.

Dinner was soon in readiness, and I partook heartily, while my fair hostess presided over the table; and, under the influence of the wine that she set before me, I grew more and more communicative.

"What could have brought you into such an out-of-the-way place as this?" she asked, after the table had been cleared. I had evaded similar questions to this, but none so directly put. Yet, thought I, why should I not tell her the object of my trip? What harm could her knowing it do? And it might be the means of my gaining valuable information; and the subtle influence which those dark, sparkling eyes exercised over me inspired me with confidence in their possessor, and, lowering my voice, I began:

"Have you ever heard of Morengo's band?"

The dark eyes flashed with excitement as she answered:

"What, the stage-robbers?"

"Yes," said I; "then you have heard of them?"

"Yes, indeed," she replied, "I have heard a great deal of them;" then added, archly, "I hope you are not one of their number."

"On the other hand," said I, "I am after them."

"Indeed!" she exclaimed, with increasing interest; and then, looking around in a frightened manner, asked: "But you don't think they live anywhere around here, do you?"

"I am convinced," I replied, lowering my voice still more, "that they do live in this neighborhood."

Her alarm increased.

"Why," she exclaimed, "I have been living here for several years, with no other protection during the day than Tiger."

I assured her that I really thought it must be an abandoned set of wretches who would harm a lady—and especially her.

She appeared to take no notice of this little compliment, and I continued: "On the other hand, I understand, they are a very gallant band of rascals, and scarcely ever require ladies to surrender their valuables when they attack a stage." This seemed to reassure her. "But," I went on, "you can doubtless better understand this when I inform you that it is a question which is the leader of the band, Morengo or his daughter Juanita."

"Oh!" she exclaimed, "now you have aroused my curiosity. How romantic! Tell me all about her, please; it is such a rare thing that we hear of romance in this isolated region."

Her graceful form inclined in her eagerness to catch every word I uttered, and her cheek flushed with pleasure and excitement as I told her all I knew and had heard about the remarkable woman, whose daring deeds exceeded those of any of her father's followers, and that it was affirmed that the most successful raids of the band were planned by her, and she always assisted in their execution.

Thus employed in pleasant conversation the moments slipped away into hours, and every moment that passed I felt myself becoming more hopelessly entangled in the meshes that the lovely woman before me was all unconsciously weaving and throwing around me.

As each successive hour passed I made up my mind to leave before another had, but as often failed in my resolution. The sun was now low and I essayed to depart, but was met with the words: "Why, you surely won't go until papa comes home; I am sure he would be glad to meet you."

"You really must excuse me," said I; "it is not in justice to the rest of the party——"

"What party?" she broke in.

"Why," I replied, remembering that I had not told her, "I am only one of a party of some ten or twelve."

"Ah, yes," said she, eying me closely, "I see. And all searching for Morengo?"

"Yes," I replied, "but I am a day in advance of them; and, as I said, it would really be unjust for me to remain idle here while they are pursuing their laborious search."

"Then they will be here to-morrow?" she asked.

"Yes," said I; "their intention was to follow the trail which brought me here."

"Well," said she, "you must stay until papa comes. I shall have to set table for tea." And, before I could interpose a word, she was away. As she left the room I thought how many charms she was the possessor of; intelligent, beautiful, romantic, vivacious; of æsthetic tastes, I was convinced; and then looking round my eyes lit upon the books piled upon the table. I had a curiosity to see them more closely, so I walked over and on examining them found they were the works of authors of renown, and, as I opened one after another, I saw upon the fly leaf of a book of poems several stanzas, traced in a most perfect hand. They attracted my attention, and I read them, and while I still held the book in my hand my fair hostess re-entered and approached the table by which I stood.

"Pardon me, please," I began, "for examining your library uninvited; but may I ask who the author is of these beautiful stanzas?"

The color that rose to her cheek verified the conclusion I had arrived at, but she merely said: "Oh, no one in particular," and added quickly, "papa has just come; he will be in in a moment."

She had scarcely finished speaking when a tall, dark man with heavy brows, a full black beard and flowing black hair, entered the room, and, after the formalities of an introduction were over, we sat down, and, as his daughter withdrew from the room, in a subdued tone he commenced:

"Violet informs me that you are after Morengo."

Violet! She bore the name of my favorite flower; and, oh! how well it fitted her, thought I.

"Yes, sir," I replied; "and any information you could give me would be greatly appreciated. Am I on the right track?"

"Yes," he answered, "I think you are."

I listened intently.

"But you should have left the trail," he continued, "some three miles back. There is a little clearing there. Didn't you see it as you came along?"

"Yes," I replied, "I remember it."

"Well, sir," he continued, "I have a suspicion, which I never have yet communicated to any living being, not even to my daughter, and that is that somewhere about that clearing Morengo and his men live."

"But," said I, in surprise, "are you not afraid of your lives, living in such close proximity to such a desperate band?"

"Did you ever hear," he replied, significantly, "of Morengo attacking a house?"

No, I never had.

"And let him dare to attack this house," he continued, with considerable spirit; "that girl of mine and I could give them a pretty rough deal, I reckon."

"Why," I exclaimed, "what could she do?"

"Do!" he replied. "Well, now, she can swing a rifle just as lively as the next bushwhacker."

I was astonished.

"And I never saw a horse so fast," he added, with apparent pride, "that she couldn't lariat on the keen jump."

It is unnecessary to say I was amazed. A lady, thought I, who possesses so many and such varied accomplishments—whose sweet voice I could now hear in the adjoining room as she hummed a familiar song while busying herself about her duties—was a wonder indeed.

The door opened and supper was announced in readiness.

After supper was over and the table vacated I again essayed to leave, when the father met me with the words:

"Oh, you must stay over night. Your party will be along in the morning, my daughter informs me, and you can join them then."

It was just getting dark, and I insisted on going, although my heart did not; so my horse was ordered, and, as I took the proffered hand of the fair creature who had in such a short time filched my heart from me, I gave it a pressure which brought the crimson dye to her fair cheek; and the father, seizing my hand with a vise-like grasp, repeated the warm invitation of his daughter to come again, which I assured them I should.

The moon was shining brightly as I rode slowly, and, thought I, what can equal the hospitality of a Californian? And as I was about to leave the clearing I took one last look at the house where my divinity dwelt, and was surprised at seeing a form approaching me. Could it be she? I stopped and waited. Sure enough, it was she. I dismounted, and, as the fair creature drew near, she said:

"I forgot to caution you. It is a very dangerous road you have to travel, and especially at night."

I looked into the dark eyes before me. Could it be possible that I had awakened the same feelings in her heart that she had in mine?

"Do not give yourself a moment's alarm about my welfare," I replied. "I have traveled roads a thousand times more dangerous than this trail."

"Oh," said she, "I do not apprehend any danger, but, you know, a word of warning is sometimes better than an ounce of steel." And then added, archly: "Look out for Juanita Morengo!"

I laughed, and told her that I had never yet met a woman whom I thought could worst or take me at a disadvantage. With a merry little laugh she extended her hand, and, at the same time, handed me a note, requesting me to take it to C——ville; "and promise me," she added, as she looked me full in the eyes, "that you will not look at it till you arrive there. I think I can trust you." I promised by all that was holy that I would not violate her trust, and at the same time deposited the note in a pocket of my saddle-bags. I then raised to my lips the little hand that had laid so confidingly in mine and imprinted a kiss upon it, and was soon on my way again.

I had proceeded thus about two miles, and as I neared the clearing, which was now my objective point, I unwillingly expelled the pleasant thoughts from my mind and became more cautious. I entered the clearing by a sharp turn of the trail, and hearing a slight rustle in the undergrowth close by I stopped my horse and listened. All was silent. I had proceeded but a little farther when I suddenly heard a whizzing sound similar to that made by a whip in cutting through the air, and at the same instant I felt my arms pinioned to my side as though a rope were wrapped around my body. Quick as a flash of lightning the thought struck me: "A lariat—I am lassoed," and at the same time made a desperate struggle to seize the knife which I carried in my belt to sever the strands of the lariat that encircled me, but in an instant I was unhorsed and lying prostrate on the ground. I saw a masked face above me, and a white hand pressing something to my mouth and nostrils which had a decided odor of chloroform.

The sun was high when I picked myself up and gazed in wonder around. Slowly, and one by one I recalled the incidents of the preceding day, but could not understand how I had arrived at this spot, for indeed C——ville was in plain sight, and my mustang was picketed near by. My arms pained me a little, and that called to mind the lariat that had been wrapped around them, and then I remembered being pulled from my horse and robbed—as I supposed. But, strange though it appeared, my horse, my revolvers, and the several slugs which were in my pocket, were all intact. I approached my horse to mount, but to my surprise and horror my saddle-bags were gone.

That night, as I was sitting sorrowfully in my cabin, there came a knock at my door, and upon opening it one of the party entered.

"Hallo," he exclaimed, "heard you got lariated last night." He then went on and told me what the party had accomplished, and to my amazement I found that they had been to exactly the same place I had. He described minutely the trail, the house, the barn, and everything on the premises, "but," said he, "there wasn't a soul there."

"What," I exclaimed, "no one there!"

"No," he replied; then very significantly: "They must have got wind that we was comin', for things looked mighty like as if they'd just cleared out."

I felt sick.

"Who do you suppose lived there?" I asked, with a sinking heart.

"Why, Morengo, of course," was the confident answer.

"What proof did you find?" I asked, quickly, grasping at a straw of hope.

"Well," said he, "we found about a dozen mail-bags, and as many broken express boxes in the barn. Isn't that proof enough?"

I thought I was dreaming; I could not speak.

Another knock at the door roused me somewhat, and another of the party entered and said the agent would like to see me. I hastened to the stage-office, where the remainder of the party were assembled. Not a word of greeting did I receive from one of them as I entered. The agent was the first to speak.

"I believe you said you lost your saddle-bags yesterday?"

"Yes," I replied.

"Well, the boys found a pair about three miles this side of Morengo's. Are these yours?" he asked, holding them up.

I seized them, and plunged my hands into the pockets. The note was gone.

Then said the agent, while his and the eyes of the whole party were fixed upon me:

"Is this yours?" holding up an unsealed note.

"Yes," said I, and, in a rage, demanded: "Who opened this note?"

"Nobody," said one of the party; "twa'n't sealed."

I unfolded it quickly and read these words, traced in the same matchless hand that the stanzas I had read the previous day were:

"Compliments of Juanita Morengo."

As the agent saw the different expressions of my face, he said:

"This is very remarkable!"

I gazed blankly at the sheet; again were the incidents of the previous day recalled; I remembered with a vivid distinctness the father's remark of his daughter's proficiency in the use of the lariat; I remembered the soft, white hand that had touched my face as I inhaled the fumes of the opiate; I thought of the deserted house, the mail bags, the express boxes. My eyes grew dim; my knees shook; my heart seemed to be forcing itself up into my throat; I was suffocating. It was all plain now. Yet, as I staggered out into the open air, I repeated the words the agent had uttered:

"Yes—it—is—very—remarkable."

A Thief Shrewdly Caught.

Dishonest people often show a great deal of cunning—and they have use for a great deal. But very few of them master all the secrets of detection, so as to perfectly shield themselves long in their bad trade.

"Where did you get them tomatoes?" asked an old Long Island farmer of a neighbor, whose real estate yields not a tomato vine. His basket was full of very fine, ripe specimens, which he thought he recognized. It was not the first time suspicion of his neighbor's honesty had arisen in his mind.

"Where did you get 'em?" he asked again.

"Bought 'em."

"Ah! Let's look at your hands."

With his basket on his arm, he held out both hands for examination "What do you want to look at my hands for? There ain't nothing on to 'em."

The old farmer was washing his own hands at the same time in a tin basin of rain-water, with a wooden bowl of soft brown soap before him.

"No, there ain't nothing on 'em that you can see; but look a-here! Set down your basket and wash 'em. It's werry coolin', and your face and hands look hot."

So saying, he emptied the basin and filled it with cold water, pointed to the soap-dish, and relieved the bearer of his basket. The first immersion and friction of the hands in the water caused the fluid to turn green. It grew greener every second, and at length turned an intense dark green.

"Here, Jim," said the farmer to his tow-headed son, "take in this basket and empty it, and bring it out agin."

Then, turning to his honest neighbor, he said: "You hooked them tomatoes from my patch half an hour ago. Three or four of the top ones I knew in a minute. Here's your basket!"

If any country reader of the foregoing would test this discovery of a theft, let him pick one or two tomatoes next season, separating the vines with naked hand, and then wash it. There is a mysterious something about the plant, perfectly colorless, that remains on the hands until water removes it.

A fine illustration of the effect of a guilty deed, always. One never comes out of it with clean hands, however fair an appearance he may put on.

A Bridegroom's Folly.

A Belgian bridegroom was about to start for Paris on his wedding tour, when his bride informed him that she thought of concealing about her several thousand francs' worth of lace, hoping by its sale to defray the cost of the journey. The bridegroom was afraid of the searchers on the frontier, and to humor him the bride promised to give up the plan, but secreted the lace just the same. As they approached the frontier the husband reflected that if his wife were not searched his fears would be mocked at as groundless and his prestige would be impaired. Accordingly he took a favorable opportunity to whisper to an official that by searching yonder lady he might find some lace. The official winked and the bride was led into the female searchers' room, from which soon issued sobs and screams, and presently the official said to the horrified husband: "Thank you, sir; the capture is a good one. The lady will be taken to prison, and half the fine will go to you."

Benefits of Farinaceous Diet.

Liebig's theory that liquor-drinkin is not compatible with farinaceous diet seems to have been corroborated by an English scientific man, who has been trying the experiment on twenty-seven liquor-drinking persons. A striking instance of reform was shown in the case of a man of 60, who had been intemperate for thirty-five years, and was in the habit of taking a spree about once a week. His constitution was so shattered that he had great difficulty in obtaining insurance on his life. After an attack of delirium tremens, which nearly proved fatal, he was induced to live upon farinaceous food, which in seven months entirely removed his desire for liquor, and he became perfectly sober. He lost flesh at the beginning of the experiment, but regained it after two or three months. Among the articles of food mentioned as specially antagonistic to alcohol are lentils, dried beans, haricot beans, and macaroni, all of which should be well boiled and seasoned with plenty of butter or olive oil. Ordinary garden vegetables are said to be provocative of temperance, but much less than farinaceous diet. The carbonaceous starch contained in macaroni, beans and oil seems to render unnecessary, and, therefore, repulsive, the carbon resident in alcohol. This remedy is so very simple that it ought to be tested by men who have so often tried to break themselves of intemperate habits. Drinking to excess is unquestionably a curse in every American city, and farinaceous food has never hurt anybody. Whatever harm it does to alcohol is clear gain.

The Indian and the Lawyer.

In the city of Halifax there dwelt a lawyer, crafty, subtle as a fox. An Indian of the Miami tribe, named Simon, owed him some money. The lawyer had waited long. His patience at last gave out, and he threatened the Indian with lawsuit, process, and executions. The poor red man got scared, and brought the money to his creditor. The Indian waited, expecting the lawyer would write a receipt. "What are you waiting for?" asked the lawyer. "Receipt," said the Indian. "A receipt," said the lawyer, "a receipt; what do you know about a receipt? Can you understand the nature of a receipt? Tell me the use of one and I will give it to you." The Indian looked at him a moment, and then said: "S'pose maybe me die; me go to heben; me find the gate locked; me see 'Postle Peter; he say, 'Simon, what you want?' me say, 'Want to get in;' he say, 'You pay Mr. J. dat money?' What me say? Me hab no receipt; have to hunt all ober hell to find you?" He got his receipt.

Afghan Names.

Every new war in the East brings forward a new batch of linguistic and geographical particulars to be learned. The public, having finished the Turkish lesson, is now ready for the Afghanistan. Here is the first installment. Nine of ten accidentals pronounce Cabul as if it were written—which, indeed, it sometimes is—Cabool. In India, on the contrary, they say "Cawbyl," with the accent on the first syllable, making the word rhyme very nearly to "bawble." In most Indian and Central Asian names, indeed, Anglo-Indians give "a" a very broad, open sound. Thus Herat is Heraut, and Nepal (as it is officially spelled) is Nepaul. One hears both Afghan-is-tan and Afghani*stan*. The latter pronunciation is, undoubtedly, the better. "Stan" is a general termination for Central Asian names, and signifies "country." Thus we have Turkestan, Kurdistan, Beloochistan, etc. To place the accent on is in Afghanistan, is to syllabify incorrectly.

A Just Punishment.

Early in the fifteenth century, a band of Highland robbers, headed by one Macdonald of Rosse, having taken two cows from a poor woman, she vowed that she would wear no shoes till she had complained to the King. The savages, in ridicule of her oath, nailed horse-shoes to the soles of her feet. When her wounds were healed, she proceeded to the royal presence, told her story, and showed her scars. The just monarch instantly dispatched an armed force to secure Macdonald, who was brought to Perth, along with twelve of his associates. The King caused them to be shod in the same manner as they did by the poor woman, and, after they had been for three days exhibited through the streets of the town as a public spectacle, Macdonald was beheaded, and his companions hung.

The Difference.

Not long ago, as an elderly couple were out walking, a lady on the opposide of the street tripped and fell down. The old gentleman rushed across the street, raised his hat, and offered to assist her in every possible way. His wife followed him across at a slow pace, and, witnessing his devotion to the stranger, she got mad and shook her fist at him. "It's all right—it's all right," he whispered. "Yes, I know it is," she hotly exclaimed; "here an unknown woman stubs her toe, and you plow across the street to eat her up with kindness. The other day when I fell down stairs you stood and laughed and chuckled and tickled your ribs, and wanted to know if I was practicing for a circus?"

FROM the statement just issued by the Federal Bureau of Statistics, it appears that 108 persons were murdered in Switzerland last year. As the population is under 3,000,000, it is evident that the abolition of capital punishment has not tended to render the crime of homicide less frequent in that country.

SABBATH READING.

Thanksgiving Hymn.

ed of the rolling year! To Thee
 Our song shall rise, whose bounty pours,
In many a goodly gift, with free
 And liberal hand, our autumn stores;
No firstlings of our flock we slay,
 No soaring clouds of incense rise,
But on Thy hallowed shrine we lay
 Our hearts in grateful sacrifice.

Borne on Thy breath, the lap of spring
 Was heaped with many a blooming flower;
And smiling summer joyed to bring
 The sunshine and the gentle shower;
And autumn's rich luxuriance now,
 The ripening seed, the bursting shell,
The golden sheaf and laden bough,
 The fullness of Thy bounty tell.

No menial throng, in princely dome,
 Here wait a titled lord's behest;
But many a fair and peaceful home
 Hath won Thy peaceful dove a guest;
No groves of palm our fields adorn,
 No myrtle shades or orange bowers,
But rustling meads of golden corn,
 And fields of waving grain, are ours.

Safe in Thy care the landscape o'er
 Our flocks and herds securely stray;
No tyrant master claims our store,
 No ruthless robber rends away;
No fierce volcano's withering shower,
 No fell simoon, with poisonous breath;
No burning suns, with baleful power,
 Awake the fiery plagues of death.

And here shall rise our song to Thee,
 Where lengthened vale and pastures lie,
And streams go singing wild and free,
 Beneath a blue and smiling sky;
Where never was reared a mortal throne,
 Where crowned oppressors never trod,
Here, at the throne of Heaven alone,
 Shall man in reverence bow to God.

Doubt.

SERMON BY PROF. DAVID SWING, OF CHICAGO.

* * * We are all the offspring of doubt.

Thus "doubt," instead of being an impiety or a form of Antichrist, is often only the effort of a new era to find the deeper and the better meaning of its popular religion. The Prof. Smith who is under indictment for heresy on account of the article on the Bible which he composed for an encyclopedia is full of doubts, but also of true Christian piety, and the Canon Farrar, who has been attempting to find a doctrine about hell which will at once harmonize with reason and with Christ, contains spirituality to an unusual degree; and the Dean Stanley, whose eloquence of thought and language is famous, can equal Smith and Farrar in doubting the Christian formulas of the past. In the mere fact that there are "doubters" in the church, one may find no cause for alarm, for this quality of the human mind has followed humanity in all its many wanderings. The doubting ones immediately on Christ's coming reappeared and stood around Him, just as they had stood by the altars of Greece in the form of Socrates, or by the altars of Rome in the form of Cato and Tully. They followed the Roman Catholic church and modified it; they broke off a branch and planted it and grew Protestantism; another branch and grew Methodism; they separated the church from the state in some lands; they have separated the Bible from the exact sciences; they are even hanging over the old pictures of eternal torments to find, if possible, a truer outline of that life or death into which infinite equity shall at last cast the wicked. Instead of being a vice, doubt has often been a most calm and a most holy meditation. Men call it a "cloud," and those who walk in it confess it to be a cloud. Those fixed in ideas and in established sects turn pale or grow angry at it as portending destruction, but oftentimes this "cloud" has burst in a shower of blessings and has been followed by a sunshine falling in a new sweetness on "fields arrayed in living green."

It may indeed be necessary for any given sect to ask a "doubter" to withdraw from its organization, because each church is built for the spread of certain definite ideas; and, if a member of the body desires to spread contradictory ideas, he certainly should feel that he must sow these notions in some other field. A church is much like a firm formed for a social purpose. If a member of the firm is found withdrawing his capital from the business of the firm and is giving his thought and money to some house located elsewhere, or some other rival business, the papers of partnership should be given up by this recreant one. It must be thus with churches. They must not be guilty of suicide. But, while this general truth is clear, it will often be a matter of question both with the "doubter" and his associates whether his "doubts" are grave enough to justify a withdrawal from a brotherhood full of usefulness and of mutual happiness. The necessary withdrawal of a thousand men from as many sects would not warrant the inference that the Christian world was falling to ruin under the blows of this skepticism. The only inference must be that churches formed for a definite purpose may exclude the men who disregard the purpose. A church that requires a dress of drab should ask him to withdraw who dresses in black or white. Aside, therefore, from the duty or privilege of sects a religious skepticism may go on, and, instead of being an injury to Christianity, it may be only the invisible arms of God carrying the world away from a good creed to a creed far better. An old continent may be sinking for the purpose of pressing upward out of the waters a new world.

This is confessed to be the age of "doubt." The words "some doubted" will certainly apply to our era. But, this confessed, what do we witness? Do we witness any religious ruin or decay? We seem to witness a pulpit and a membership as devout, as pious, as was the world when it held that God made the universe in six days and that the Bible was verbally inspired. There are great verities in Christianity, and the times which most question some of the old particulars are the very times which can best appreciate the sublimest doctrines of the gospels. An age is not religious according to the quality of its doctrines and the mental and spiritual power brought to bear upon those ideas of better quality. The ages of Henry VIII. and of Louis XIV. surpassed our century in the bulk of their confessions of faith, but not any great doctrines stood out before their mind and heart. Those Kings possessed no adequate idea of Jesus Christ. The letter of things filled up their little intellects and yet smaller hearts.

In the higher courts of law, that lawyer and that Judge are esteemed greatest who can best grasp the essential meaning of a law, or a will, or a piece of evidence. And hence the words "substantially true" are in law so valuable, so great, that they are much worn with constant use. They suffer like the shrines of the greatest saints, where the pavement is worn away by the feet of the numberless pilgrims who repair thither to kiss the sacred marble and breathe a prayer. Saints of little merit are not so injured by human affection. The words "true in substance," "substantially true," are the shrine toward which the religious thought of our era tends in its pilgrimage, and it will wear the marble away, and even the lips of this saint, in its devotion. The "cloud of doubt" will perhaps be followed by a day when a mighty multitude will declare that the story of Christ, the story of heaven and hell, are substantially true—that these doctrines cannot be modified in such a way as to offer to virtue any discouragement, or to sin any hope. There is, indeed, a form of unbelief that is ruinous. It is not the doubt of a religious soul, but the proud denial of all Christian and religious tenets. Of this I am not speaking, but rather of that kind of intellect which gathered around Christ and mingled their doubts with love. The two disciples who journeyed toward Emmaus after the crucifixion, in whose mind was the perfect memory of Jesus, who had seen the crucifixion, and who were now walking along only five miles from the spot where the cross had stood, gave way to unbelief, and said they had hoped that Christ had come to be a King. This is the class which now fills the land. Their doubts are not radical as those of the two disciples, but, like theirs, they are full of affection and piety. These will be the first to catch the truth when it shall come, or, at least, the ones to love it most deeply when it shall have been revealed. The mind which has no distrust is too dull to catch any early trace of heaven's misty dawn.

Let us review hastily the reflections awakened by the old words that "some doubted." The "doubt" will always attend the human race, because the future life is not a demonstrated reality; but out of doubt will come a perpetual study and a marching of the host from the less true to the more true; it will cut down the first wilderness, not to make a desert, but to open up rich fields of fruits and grains; it will lessen the quantity of notions to be believed, but it will improve the quality of what shall survive its analysis; it will take humanity up in its kind arms, and bear it away from the letter to place it up amid the "substantially true" of the two Testaments; it will combine righteousness and affection with its tears, and then what it lacks in seeing it will make up in patient waiting. It expects no perfect vision here. It has no hope of seeing the universe from the low valley of man's life; it will wait until death shall bear the soul to a height that shall redouble a thousand times the breadth of the horizon beneath the once-clouded feet.

Not here! not here! not where the sparkling waters
 Fade into mo king sands as we draw near;
Where in the wilderness each footstep falters
 I shall be satisfied—but, oh! not here.

Unnatural Showers.

Tradition tells many stories of showers which were not showers of rain. It is stated by an old writer that in Lapland and Finland, about a century ago, mice of a particular kind were known to fall from the sky; and that such an event was sure to be followed by a good year for foxes. A shower of frogs fell near Toulouse, in 1804. A prodigious number of black insects, about one inch in length, descended in a snow-storm at Pakroff, Russia, in 1827. On one occasion, in Norway, the peasants were astonished at finding a shower of rats pelting down on their heads. Showers of fishes have been numerous. At Stanstead, in Kent, in 1866, a pasture-field was found one morning covered plentifully with fish, although there is neither sea, nor river, lake nor fish-pond near. In several other cases these showers of fish have occurred, and can generally be explained by well-understood causes. Stray winds blowing from sea and river; a water-spout licking up the fish out of the water; a whirlwind sending them hither and thither; all these are intelligible. The rat shower in Norway was an extraordinary one; thousands of rats were taking their annual excursion from a hilly region to the lowlands, when a whirlwind overtook them, whisked them up and deposited them in a field at some distance; doubtless much to the astonishment of such of the rats as came down alive. Naturalists have proved that the so-called showers of blood are connected with some phenomena of insect life.

A Good Kerosene.

According to Prof. J. Lawrence Smith good kerosene should have the following characteristics: First, the color should be white or light yellow, with a blue reflection. Second, the odor should be faint and not disagreeable. Third, the specific gravity, at 60 deg. Fahrenheit, ought not to be below 0.795 nor above 0.84. Fourth, when mixed with an equal volume of sulphuric acid of the density of 1.53, the color ought not to become darker, but lighter. A petroleum that satisfies all these conditions, and possesses the proper flashing-point, may be regarded as pure and safe.

A MINISTER in the South of Scotland had a parishioner, who, to show her affection for the pastor, sent him every morning by the hands of her daughter a couple of what she wished him to understand were new-laid eggs for breakfast. The eggs, on being delivered, were generally warm, as if just taken from the nest; but one morning the minister's maid, on taking the eggs from the girl, observed, "The eggs are no warm to-day, Jeanie; are they no fresh?" "Ou, ay," said the girl; "they're quite fresh, but my mother couldna get the cat to sit on them this morning."

THE annual production of sugar throughout the world is estimated at 3,420,000,000 pounds. The estimated consumption of sugar in the United States is thirty-three pounds per head a year, or more than any other country. England uses thirty pounds to the inhabitant, or four times more than France. The Scotchmen also use thirty pounds per head.

A. T. Stewart's Characteristics.

Stewart was the greatest merchant the world ever saw, and he made a greater fortune than ever before was created by trade. He left a larger property than old John Jacob Astor, and was by far the greatest organizer of his day. If there be any interest concerning the personal appearance of such a man, I must say that the latter by no means corresponded with his real character. He was plain in dress and in general appearance. In stature he was five feet ten, and in early days, being thin, looked tall; but of late years an increase of flesh and a slight stoop changed this aspect. He was of blonde features, with a mild blue eye and auburn hair, almost red. No stranger would have taken him for a great merchant, but he might readily have passed for a physician or clergyman. He seldom spoke above a low tone, and, when making his daily tour through the warehouse, his orders were in a still, small voice, unnoticed by the crowd. His visits to each department were brief, but he comprehended all things at a glance. At one place he might say, "What! those goods not sold, and prices down one-quarter?" At another, "Those things are out of style, and must go at auction." His criticisms were sharp, and indicated an observing eye. "Some of these young men are not neat enough in their dress. I smell tobacco round here; dismiss every man that uses it. There's a fellow that does not know how to wait on ladies," etc.

When Stewart had gone through the retail establishment—which was his first morning's duty—he knew its condition perfectly, for his perceptions were so keen that he absorbed knowledge. He paid no attention to the crowd of customers, unless something particular attracted his attention, when he might speak—as a stranger—in the way of a suggestion. An incident of this kind occurred in my own experience about two years before his death. I was standing at one of the counters where a person was buying a calico dress pattern which left a small remnant. Stewart came along hastily and remarked in a sharp tone, "Don't sell these goods so as to leave these small remnants. If a piece has ten yards and a woman wants eight, let her take all or none. The price won't allow it." As he passed on the head of the department said to other clerks, "What made you let the old man see that remnant? The next time chuck 'em under the counter;" then adding, "What the eye never sees the heart never grieves." I mention this to illustrate that close attention to little things which marked this strange and gifted man.—New York letter.

The Physiology of the Liver.

The liver is the largest secreting organ in the human body, and the bile which it secretes is more liable to vitiation and misdirection from its proper channels than any other of the animal fluids. Luckily for the bilious, however, there is an unfailing source of relief from liver complaint, namely, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine which for over a quarter of a century has been achieving thorough cures of the above-mentioned ailments, fever and ague, dyspepsia, bowel complaints, rheumatic and kidney affections, and disorders involving loss of nervous vigor. It is, moreover, a preventive of malarial disease, and affords protection to thousands of persons residing in districts of country where that dire scourge is prevalent. As a remedy adapted to the medicinal requirements of families it is supremely desirable, and as a means of fortifying a debilitated system it is thoroughly to be depended upon.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, of Buffalo, N. Y., the proprietor of Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, and also of the Invalids' and Tourists' Hotel, of that city, has recently been elected to Congress by the very flattering majority of nearly 3,000. He has already served his constituency as State Senator, and this renewed indorsement signifies that his services have been highly satisfactory. His extensive practice in the treatment of Chronic Diseases will not, we are informed, be neglected or suffer in the least when the time arrives for him to take his seat in Congress, it being intrusted to his brother and other experienced medical gentlemen who have long been associated with the Doctor in the Medical Department of his celebrated World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel. Besides, as the Forty-sixth Congress does not convene until December, 1879, Dr. Pierce's patients will not lose his personal attention for some months yet.

THOUGH they may obstinately resist the action of other external remedies, ulcers containing proud flesh, swellings, tumors, leprous granulations and scrofulous sores speedily heal under the purifying and soothing influence of HENRY'S CARBOLIC SALVE, the promptest and most efficient topical application ever discovered or used. It is believed that there is no chronic sore or eruption that may not be eradicated by this incomparable purifier. Sold by all druggists.

"A SLIGHT COLD," COUGHS.—Few are aware of the importance of checking a cough or "SLIGHT COLD," which would yield to a mild remedy, if neglected, often attacks the lungs. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" give sure and almost immediate relief.

FAMILIARITY with the writings of the great poets is a necessity to any one who wishes to appear well in company. JOHNSON'S Anodyne Liniment is one of the few really valuable patent medicines which we always take pleasure in calling attention to. It is both for internal and external use, and is worth more to a family than a whole medicine chest.

A Woman's Logic.

"It is useless to take medicine. I shall feel better to-morrow. Besides, I need the money to get that lovely new hat. My old one is such a fright, and people will look more at my bonnet than they will at my face. I will wait till I feel worse before I spend any money for medicine." The bonnet is purchased, and fifty other feminine necessaries in the form of ribbons, laces, brooches, etc. Meanwhile the lady's face becomes every day paler and thinner, and her body weaker, until disease has gained so firm a foothold in her system that the most thorough, and oftimes a long and tedious, course of treatment is necessary to restore her to health. Ladies, attend to your health before you even think of apparel. A fresh, blooming face in a plain bonnet is much handsomer and far more attractive to your gentlemen friends than a pain-worn, diseased face in the most elaborate and elegant hat your milliner could devise. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is everywhere acknowledged to be the standard remedy for female complaints and weaknesses. It is sold by druggists.

FOR upward of 30 years MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children with never-failing success. FRANK LESLIE'S

SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

CONDUCTED BY

CHARLES FORCE DEEMS, D. D.,

Pastor of the Church of the Strangers.

The SUNDAY MAGAZINE aims to supply pure and healthy reading, not only for Sunday, but for every day of the week. It contains more reading matter, and is more profusely illustrated, than any other similar periodical published in Europe or America; and no effort or expense will be spared by the Editor and Publisher to render it worthy of the cordial appreciation and generous support which it has received.

The Number for January, which will be issued early in December, commences the Fifth Semi-Annual Volume of the SUNDAY MAGAZINE. This presents a favorable opportunity for the commencement of new Subscriptions; and the Publisher especially desires that former Subscribers will renew their Subscriptions promptly, so that he may be enabled to have the names duly registered.

TERMS:

Three Dollars per Annum, or Twenty-five Cents per Single Number.

The Magazine may be ordered through any Bookseller or Newsdealer.
When sent directly from the Office, the Postage will be prepaid by the Publisher.

YOU CAN CURE YOUR CATARRH

By the Same Means We Cured Ours.

Catarrh of Head and Bowels, Deafness, Etc.

167 THIRTIETH ST., CHICAGO, Jan. 1, 1878.

DR. C. R. SYKES—Dear Sir: I was a great sufferer from Catarrh for about twelve years previous to March, 1876. The disease located mainly in my head and bowels, causing painful ulcerations in my nose, and I could hardly breathe through that important organ.

During the last two years of that time the catarrhal condition of the bowels resulted in ulceration, and the discharges and other appearances were much like a chronic diarrhea.

The stomach was also involved, and this organ, together with the bowels, would at times become so distended as to become terribly uncomfortable, then relax, until "I feel all gone," is the best expression I can give for it.

My [illegible], but seemingly still more terrible than all the rest, was a deafness that nearly disabled me for business. It came to be so bad at last that, at church I had to take a front seat, and even then, with my hand around the back of the ear to catch and concentrate the sound, I seemed to miss about half the sermon.

My memory was also greatly impaired. I shall not attempt a description of my sufferings; you, from your own knowledge of the disease, can well judge what they must have been.

In March, '76, I heard of and tried your "SURE CURE," and took it according to directions; I experienced great satisfaction from the first bottle, and after about four bottles were used, my hearing suddenly cleared up; I was in church at the time, and it seemed as if a new revelation had been opened up to me.

I discontinued the medicine gradually, the ulcers in my head and bowels healed, the shadow in my brain was restored to order, in fact I could hear, and smell, and breathe through my nose, and have been free from the disease since that time. I cheerfully recommend your "SURE CURE" to all like sufferers, and have known several cases of catarrhal colds that yielded promptly to the remedy.

Wishing you a "Happy New Year" in your noble work, I am respectfully and gratefully yours,
A. C. DAVIS.

Nose Raw—Bones Eaten Out.

148 N. ADA ST., CHICAGO, Sept. 10, 1877.

OVER two years ago I was cured by Dr. Sykes' remedies. The whole inside of my left nostril was perfectly raw, and it had eaten clear around the division of the nose on the lip. Two pieces of bone had got loose and came out. I had not been able to smell for three years, or taste anything in a long time, and my lungs had got up to bad also, and I was in despair.

I had doctored about six months previous to going with my husband to see Dr. Sykes, and, not getting any better, but rather worse, was afraid I could not be cured; but in about three months the cure was completed in every particular, and has remained so ever since.
MRS. S. J. BILSON.

Eight or Nine Years' Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Loss of Smell, Etc., Cured.

I think no man ever had the Catarrh much worse than I had for eight or nine years. The discharges from the head were perfectly awful, especially in the morning. Anything cooking or burning I couldn't smell, and I suffered dreadfully from the DYSPEPSIA, that I am sure proceeded from the foul Catarrh.

Over a year ago I used five bottles and a half (got six) of Dr. Sykes' Sure Cure, and his Nasal Tube, and it cured me perfectly sound. I have no Dyspepsia since; my eyes are stronger; ears free from ringing; head clear, and no trace of Catarrh. I can smell sharp as ever, and never was so well in all my life as the last six months. My advice is; "Go and do likewise."

Hearing, Sight and Memory Restored.

FACTORYVILLE, Cook Co., Ill., March 21, 1877.

ABOUT the first of last February I got one bottle of your Sure Cure and Insufflator. I had been suffering about three years with Catarrh. I am now using the third bottle, and have used one of your Ear Specific; and words cannot express how good I feel. I am a new man entirely. My head, which had been completely stuffed up, is now as clear as can be; the swelling has all left my nose; my eyes, which had been for two years dead and watery, are now as bright as diamonds. I was so deaf that I was completely stupid, and I could not remember anything; now my hearing and memory are as good as ever.

Before commencing with your remedies, I called on Dr. ——. He said I had catarrh in its worst form, and if I did not have it cured immediately, I would lose my hearing entirely. He said he would cure me for forty-five dollars. So you see I have saved over forty dollars, as your medicine has cost me only about four dollars, and I could not expect more from it if it had cost me four hundred. You can use this as you wish with the greatest pleasure.

Child of Five Years.—Terrible Scent Cured.

MRS. M. M. STACY, 282 Fulton St., Chicago, March, 1875, brought the only daughter of five years to my office. She scented so bad from her head as to be soon noticed. Her mother said: "It seems half the time as though I could not dress her." Had been so about a year, and found nothing to do her any good. April 21, 1875, Mrs. Stacy wrote as follows: "To say that your treatment for my little daughter was all that you recommended, would express it but feebly, for I think in her case it has surpassed your expectations, as one bottle of your 'Sure Cure' has wrought nearly a cure, if not wholly, for her. I am only too happy to add my name to your list of wonderful cures."
[No more was needed; the cure was complete.]

Came Home to Die—Returned Cured.

On the 11th of September, 1876, Miss Annie Green, aged twenty-four, was brought to me by her mother for treatment. Her palate (the Uvula) was entirely gone, and a hole as large as the end of my thumb, flattened, was eaten through the roof above, also a hole through from the inner to the outside of the nose as large as a pipe-stem. These were so fetid as to be almost unendurable, and as raw as they possibly could be.

Her throat and stomach were completely deranged. Lungs weak and sore, with bad cough, no appetite and great general debility; her weight was reduced to only eighty-five pounds. She had been living in Colorado, where she had been treated by several physicians, at an expense of nearly $600—all in vain. She said: "I have come home to my mother to die, but from what she has heard of you she thinks perhaps you can cure me."

The only medicines I prescribed were the "Sure Cure," "Liver Tonic" (with one additional ingredient), and an ointment. The good effects were apparent in three days, and in six weeks the holes in palate and nose were healed sound, the breath sweet, no cough or soreness of lungs, and a gain in flesh of twenty-two pounds. She soon after returned to Colorado and went to work. In about two months she wrote her mother that she was entirely free from her old troubles and weighed one hundred and thirty-five pounds, making a total gain of fifty pounds.

On the 18th of the following October, Miss Green, with tears of gratitude, made this, her statement, in my office, which I took down in presence of Mrs. R. [illegible], of [illegible] Clayton street, and Miss Rosa Gubbins, of 24 [illegible] street, Chicago.
DR. C. R. SYKES.

This statement in regard to my daughter is true in every particular.

Terrible Case—Wonderful Cure.

NEW RUTLAND, Ill., June 17, 1878.

DR. C. R. SYKES—Dear Sir: I feel it my duty to give you a condensed history of my case. In the summer of 1872 I took a very severe cold, which settled in my head. I paid but little attention to it, as I thought it would wear out, but it came very near wearing me out instead, as the sequel will show. I had a constant pain over my eyes and through my forehead, and as the disease advanced the discharge from my nose became of a thick, yellowish matter, and very offensive. Finally the disease extended to my throat, and eat my palate off; then it extended to my tonsils and eat them both out; nor did this horrible disease stop there, but in the fall of 1874 it eat a hole through the roof of my mouth that finally got so large I could run my fore-finger up as far as the first joint, and was as raw and ulcerated as it could be, and finally the scent became so bad that no one could stay in the room with me any length of time.

In the meantime, however, I used nearly all the [illegible] medicines that were recommended to me, besides physicians and surgeons, and all to but little benefit, only for the time being, but which cost me an immense amount of money; in fact, nearly reduced me to poverty at last.

In the spring of 1875 my disease assumed the form of asthma, and God only knows what I suffered. I had to give up all labor and was confined to the house the most of the time. In July, 1875, I went to Michigan for my health; from there to Northern Iowa; but continued to grow worse, until life became a burden to me, and I prayed to God to put an end to my sufferings. I had lost my voice so that for about two years I could scarcely speak above a whisper. At last I resolved to come home and patiently await the grim monster—Death. I passed through Chicago on the 16th of last March, but I never dreamed that there was in that city such a Good Samaritan as I have since found in Dr. Sykes. At this time I was but little more than a skeleton, weighing but one hundred pounds, and could not walk ten rods without breathing so hard as to be heard by persons some yards from me, and when I arrived home I was so changed my mother hardly knew me. A while after this, I happened to read one of your pamphlets, entitled "The True Theory of Catarrh," which seemed so rational and commonsense, I procured some of your "Sure Cure for Catarrh," and before I had finished one bottle my breath was sweet as honey, and while using the half-dozen bottles the amount of slime and matter that I raised from my throat and lungs was truly enormous, almost beyond belief, for it might be counted up by quarts, if not by gallons.

Now I raise but very little, my voice is strong and clear, no more contraction of the air passages, or asthma, and I feel better and stronger than I have felt for at least five years. I now weigh 163½ pounds, and am still gaining. My friends here look upon my cure as far as "a miracle wrought from God." And when I meditate upon my condition now to what it was three months ago, I will often rub my eyes and get up and walk around to make sure that I am awake—that it is not all a dream.

My mother has watched the effects of your "Sure Cure" on me with an interest such as none but a widowed mother can feel for an only son. And every night and morning, when we bow around our family altar, we offer up an earnest prayer that you may be blessed and prospered. Oh, thanks be to God and to Dr. Sykes that I have been spared such a horrible death. My dear sir, I owe you a debt that I never can repay. My heart overflows with gratitude to you for the kind interest you have taken in my case—a stranger, and if you think best you may publish this letter, and if any one doubts for a moment the truth or veracity of this plain statement, I would refer them to Marcena A. Hicks, or Wm. M. Webber, both the most influential citizens of our town.

Respectfully yours, PERCY T. ODEKIRK.

[Mr. O. was completely cured, and taught school in Donon, Fayette county, Iowa, all the following winter, and the next summer followed bookkeeping, in Fond du Lac, Wis. In November, 1877, he stayed one week with me, where he was seen by many persons.]

Another Wonder—Chunks and Bones.

SUBLIGNA, Chattooga Co., Ga., Sept. 21, 1878.

I WRITE to thank you for the wonderful cure you have wrought on me by your medicine—"The Sure Cure." No words can explain the severity of my case or express the gratitude I feel, for I am sure your remedy has saved me not only from unspeakable suffering but from the very verge of the grave. My neighbors and physicians (I had tried a dozen doctors) look upon my cure as being almost miraculous.

For four years past I had suffered from Catarrh, Headache, Neuralgia and occasional lung troubles, so severe at times as to be confined to my bed. During last November my ears and nostrils became so tender I had to cover them with flannels even in this warm climate, when I went out doors. In January I had neuralgia 36 hours, so severe I was in perfect agony, then my nostrils began discharging a blue, offensive corruption, growing gradually yellow and thick. I got weak and diseased all over. My nostrils finally closed up so I could not breathe through them, and if I went to sleep it was to be awakened every few minutes with strangling and suffocation. I had not had a minute's ease in months, and my sufferings were indescribable. It was in this condition, after having tried all the remedies and physicians in my reach, that I began taking the "Sure Cure." It relieved me in eight hours so that I slept nearly all night, and in the morning I felt like a new man. The third day the matter began coming away in large lumps, and the quantity passed in three days was simply incredible. This continued at intervals for about forty days, when in trying to clear my head the whole lining seemed to break loose in the upper part of my head and fall into the air passages, nearly choking me; by means of a crooked instrument I succeeded in breaking it up into small lumps and pulling and hawking it out. When I got it all out there was a gill measure full of the tough hard lumps and matter. I will send you some of these excretions and bits of bone that worked out of my nose. Your Ear Specific has given me equal satisfaction with the "Sure Cure." It is now over a month since I reported the facts of my cure to you. I inclose money for two of my neighbors; their symptoms are described on a separate sheet. Our doctors have failed to help them.

My wife and children join in gratitude to God and to you as an instrument in His hands for restoring to them a husband and a father. God bless you.
GEO. R. FONDER.

"DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH"

Is an Internal and Local remedy, and, if rightly used, is as sure to Cure Catarrh as Sulphur is to cure the Itch. I had Catarrh 24 years, and, after expending over $1,200 in vain, originated this plan of treatment, which cured me in 1870, and the number of cures since is simply wonderful—the above are only given as specimens. The Sure Cure is within the reach of all; can be sent by mail or express. Price Complete, with Insufflator, $1.50. If afraid to risk the money—to a stranger—send 10 cents for a book of full information, worth ten times its cost. (Postage stamps are good as cash.) Address

—If you act a part truly great, you may expect men of mean spirits, who cannot reach you, will endeavor by detraction to pull you down to their level. But posterity will do you justice, for envy will die with you.

* * *

—There is a poem in the November Atlantic that starts off by saying: "There came three queens from heaven.' Never do you believe it; we'll bet you a thousand dollars one of them was dealt to him and he pulled the other two out of his boot.—Hawkeye.

* * *

—Idleness is the badge of gentry, the bane of the body and mind, the nurse of haughtiness, the step-mother of discipline, the chief author of all mischief one of the seven deadly sins, the cushion upon which the devil chiefly reposes and a great cause not only of melancholy, but many other diseases; for the mind is naturally active, and if it be not occupied about some honest business, it rushes into mischief or sinks into melancholy.

Good Will.

The good will of the benefactor is the fountain of all benefits; nay, it is the benefit itself—or, at least the stamp that makes it valuable and current.

* * *

Solitude.

Little do men perceive what solitude is, and how far it extendeth. For a crowd is not company; and faces are but a gallery of pictures; and talk but a tinkling cymbal, where there is no love —Bacon.

* * *

A Book.

Except a living man, there is nothing more wonderful than a book; a message to us from the dead—from human souls we never saw, who lived, perhaps, thousands of miles away. And yet these, in those little sheets of paper, speak to us, arouse us, terrify us, teach us, comfort us, open their hearts to us as brothers.—C. Kingsley.

Laughter.

Laughter very often shows the bright side of a man. It brings out his happier nature, and shows of what sort of stuff he is really made. Somehow we feel as if we never thoroughly knew a man until we hear him laugh. We do not feel "at home" with him until then. We do not mean a mere snigger, but a good, hearty, round laugh. The solemn sober visage, like a Sunday's dress, tells nothing of the real man. He may be very silly or very profound, very coarse or very jolly. Let us hear him laugh, and we can decipher him at once, and tell how his heart beats.

* * *

A Mighty Power.

Politeness cannot be over estimated. Many a man, raised from poverty and obscurity to wealth and honor, can trace his rise to civility; it is sure to produce itself in others, and he who is always polite will be sure to get, at least, as much as he gives. We believe it was Macauley who defined politeness as benevolence in small things. The French, who are nothing unless satirical, declare politeness to be the zero of friendship's thermometer. Yet even the nearest and dearest friends may be polite to each other with advantage.

TUTT'S PILLS!

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS THEY ARE WORTH THEIR WEIGHT in GOLD

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last Spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.
REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will with certainty relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these pills, of itself indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

Sold Everywhere, 25 Cents.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

Concerning the Newspaper Business.

[Plymouth Democrat.]

A lazy man ought not to engage in the newspaper business. He may imagine that he can fill his paper with almost anything that costs him no effort to procure, and that his readers will not know the difference, but time will demonstrate that he is mistaken There is no business that a man can engage in upon which so much labor can be expended. Often for an item of a dozen lines, it requires the expenditure of half a day's time to procure the facts and arrange it in readable shape for publication. It is not unfrequent that the editor starts out Monday morning without a single memorandum out of which to make an item for the three or four columns of "local" he is expected to collect for his readers by Thursday morning.

The newspaper week begins on publication day, which, with the "Democrat" is Thursday. As soon as the forms go to press Thursday morning, the compositors begin to set the type for the outside of the next issue. The editor must have his copy ready, so the compositors may not be delayed in their work. The selections for the outside embrace poetry, a story and articles on miscellaneous subjects clipped by the editor in his readings during the week. The copy for the paper is hung on a hook, and the first compositor out of copy takes the first article on the hook, and each compositor in turn does the same. In this way all take their chances of "fat" and "lean" copy. "Fat copy," in printers parlance, is matter in which there are numerous paragraphs or white lines, few quotation marks, capital letters, italics, figures, etc. "Lean" of course is the reverse. Each compositor has before him on a stand, two "cases" which slope toward him in angles convenient to his hand. The upper case is divided into ninety-eight boxes. The part on the left is devoted to CAPITAL letters, figures, particular "sorts," etc., while the right contains the SMALL CAPITALS, etc. The letters and figures are arranged, with one or two exceptions, in alphabetical and numerical order, from left to right. The lower case is divided into fifty-four boxes of varying sizes, according to the average occurence of the letter, containing the small letters, punctuation points, figures and spaces of different sizes. The "lower case" is not arranged in alphabetical order, but the larger boxes, which hold the most frequently recurring letters are in the center of the case neatest at hand. Placing his copy before him on the upper case the compositor takes in his left hand a composing stick, which is a steel frame with a slide which can be adjusted and fixed to the "measure" or width of the column. In the stick is a thin brass or steel "rule" on which to slip the types to their places and prevent the lines already set from falling over. Reading a few words of the copy the compositor takes a capital letter from the upper case and the succeeding letters from the lower case, one by one, with a "space" at the end of each word, securing the increasing line in its place with his thumb, till the line ends. After "justifying" the line, or setting in spaces until the line is firm in the stick, he then takes out his rule, places it in front of the line just set and repeats the opperation until his stick is full. The number of lines in a stick when it is full differs according to the size of the type. If the matter is to be "leaded"—that is if the lines have to be more apart, the compositor after setting each line, and before removing his rule, places before the line one or more thin pieces of metal called leads, which are of the exact width of the column, and not higher than the spaces. The stick full is then "emptied," that is, by a dextrous operation, the compositor lifts the lines and places them upon a flat surface, usually of brass, with a rim to sustain the standing type, and called a "galley." Compositors are usually paid by the "thousand," not a thousand letters, but the space occupied by a thousand of the letter "m," and the payment is for corrected matter. Proofs are taken from the matter on the "galleys" by hand on a hand press made expressly for that purpose. The slips are sent to the proof reader, who reads it over carefully for the purpose of detecting errors in spelling, turned letters, capitals, italics or other blunders which in a proof not "clean" will soon cover the margin with letters, words and signs. The proof is then sent to the compositor who corrects his own matter. "Dirty" proofs come generally, from careless distribution of the type in the case. If the right letters are in the right boxes, the proof will be all right except as to "doublets," 'outs,' "misspelling," etc. The reader has doubtless noticed that the first word of articles on the second page without "heads," are set in SMALL CAPS, while articles on the local page begin with an "m"—. These are distinguishing marks to enable the foreman who makes up the "forms" to tell at a glance on which page an article is desired to appear. When the forms are full, they are "planed down," locked up, and sent to the press where they are put in proper position from which the papers are worked off. When the outside of the issue is printed, the forms are taken to a box prepared for the purpose, where the ink is thoroughly washed from the type with a strong solution of lye. The forms are then taken to the composing room where the compositors distribute the type as they need it. The inside is made up in the same manner, and thus week in and week out, year in and year out, the same performances are gone through with. The folding and mailing, of itself, is no small job. An issue of one thousand requires four thousand folds each week. Most of the papers are folded in wrappers and pasted, adding two more to the number of folds.

Newville Items.

(Last Week)

—Snow about gone and plenty of mud.

—Thanksgiving over and nobody hurt.

—We are having a writing school at present, a Mr. Martin is the teacher, and a splendid one he is. Perhaps your compositor will think that he is needed in this vicinity by the time he gets this in type.

—Our schools commenced in this township last Monday, and we hope there will be a general attendance; that the students and teachers will make good use of their time. Teachers are getting good wages considering the financial condition of the country, and should try to earn their wages, then the people will be satisfied.

—We are sorry to learn that any democrat would even think of going back on D. W. Voorhees for U. S. Senator, as he is certainly the choice of the people, and we do not think that A. P. Edgerton will encourage the use of his name to divide the party. He is too good a democrat and too much of a gentleman to do anything of that kind at this time at least.

—Protracted meeting will commence at churches the shortly. Well, all right, I guess it is necessary. We all need reformation here as well as other places.

—We had a dancing club organized last Saturday evening. Perhaps this is all right too.

—The evenings are long and now is the time to subscribe for some good papers. Let the COURIER be one of them, and thereby help to keep up a good county paper.

—This is a good time for debating clubs to be organized, will some one make a move in Newville? This is a good way to improve the mind and a pleasant way to spend these long evenings—better than playing euchre.

—Lawsuits seem to be the order of the day at present. Better pay your honest debts without law as it costs less. Never go to law if you can avoid it honorably, better loose a little than go to law about trifles.

—The steel track-layers on the G. R. & I. R. R. have quit work.

—S. Whonsettler is afflicted with a fellon on his hand.

—The "party" on thanksgiving night was a fizzle, and Billy wept.

—J. B. Ross and family, of Cedar Creek, took the train here for Texas last Monday.

—The infant son of Jess Hosack was buried last week.

—Rice and Rowley closed their meetings on thanksgiving day.

—Messrs. Holbrook and Bassett have left for Nebraska to see the country.

—C. Zern and son, of Penn., have come to LaOtto intending to make the west their future home.

—Mrs. James Shelner was called to Huntertown last week to the furneral of her father, Mr. Howard, who died very suddenly. "BIDDY."

Plain home talk embracing medical common sense, a book of nearly 1000 pages and 200 illustrations, is now issued in three styles: Half Morocco, $3.65; English cloth, standard eddition, $3.25; Fine American cloth, popular edition, containing all matter and illustrations, $150. This invaluable work, embracing a practical treatise on chronic diseases, sexual physiology, and a thousand things worth knowing, is from the pen of Dr. E. B. Foote, of 120 Lexington Avenue, New York City, who has been in extensive practice for twenty-five years. Book sent by mail on receipt of the price. Chaste and Delicate.

The most chaste and delicate perfumes for the handkerchif are Dr. Price's Unique Perfumes, Pet Rose, Alista Bouquet, Hyacinth, Sweet Brier, or any of his odors. The exquisite delicacy of their fragrance will delight all lovers of sweet scents.

Well Said.

The number of life long Democrats who did herculean service for the party during the last campaign, who are anxious for legislative appointments and election are "too numerous to mention." It occurs to The Democrat that the members of the legislature would do themselves infinite credit by selecting for principal and assistant clerk of the house and door-keepers, men of known standing and ability in the state, men that will reflect credit, not only upon the party, but upon themselves and the members of the legislature who elect them without any regard to what they may have done during the campaign.—Plymouth Democrat.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

THE INDIANA STATE SENTINEL!

FOR 1879

HAS BEEN REDUCED IN PRICE TO

One Dollar Per Year.

The merits of this paper are well known among a large majority of the farmers and stock raisers of this State. No paper furnishes more news for less money. It has been the acknowledged leading Democratic newspaper of Indiana for almost half a century. It has ever stood with the Democracy. Its reputation throughout the Union is firmly established. Indiana to-day is democratic by 15,000 majority, and the Sentinel's circulation and influence has increased in like proportion in the last six months.

The Weekly Sentinel

Will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepaired with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than

Compare Favorably

With any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be

Newsy, Literary,

And full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

Every reading and thinking man in the State who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for the Weekly Sentinel.

Farmers, Merchants

and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it, for, in addition to its political and literary merits, the Sentinel is confessedly the Commercial Paper of Indiana.

The Indiana State Sentinel is the paper for everybody—the farmer, mechanic and professional man. At our greatly reduced rates no one can afford to be without it.

Hundreds of millions of dollars of wealth have been gathered from the fields of "golden grain" during the past harvest, and, what is better, this wealth is distributed among the people. As the Sentinel's share of this happy result, we ask every reader to aid in gathering our share of the harvest of 50,000 new subscribers.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A TERRIFIC boiler explosion occurred at a coal-mine near Uniontown, Pa., a few days ago. Six men were killed and seven others injured more or less seriously.

HON. LYMAN TREMAIN, the late Congressman-at-large from New York, and an eminent lawyer, died last week at Albany.

THE WEST.

ADVICES from the West report that the Indians in the Niobrara river region of Nebraska are raiding the ranches and running off the stock of the settlers.

A DEADWOOD dispatch reports extensive and very destructive prairie fires in the Black Hills country.....Cincinnati people are agitating for a better observance of the Sabbath in that city.

HAYDEN'S rolling mill, at Columbus, Ohio, was the scene of a terrible boiler explosion the other day, by which several persons were killed and a number of others maimed and scalded in a shocking manner. The shock of the explosion was terrific, making a complete wreck of all the mill buildings in the vicinity of the boiler-house....A strike for an increase of wages among the employes, to the number of 1,500, in the three leading pork-packing houses of Chicago caused a sudden suspension of operations and a serious derangement of the hog market....Two Umatilla Indians, convicted of murdering settlers in the late Indian war, have been convicted at Walla Walla, Ore., and sentenced to be hanged Jan. 3.

THE SOUTH.

JACKSON, the county seat of Breathitt county, Ky., has been the scene of a serious outbreak and bloodshed. The trouble grew out of a collision between two rival bands of outlaws, numbering some twenty men each, who happened into the town about the same time. During the progress of the fighting, which was carried on in a desultory manner for several days, hundreds of shots were fired, some half a dozen people were killed, including the County Judge, and a number of others wounded.

THE steamboat Cotton Valley, bound from New Orleans for Shreveport, collided with the steamer Charles Morgan, in the Mississippi river, opposite Donaldsonville, La., and sunk in a few moments. Four passengers and about a dozen of the boat's crew, mostly colored, went down with the boat.

A NUMBER of prisoners charged with being concerned in the recent difficulties in Tensas parish, La., have been arrested on Federal warrants and taken to New Orleans for trial before the United States Commissioner.

WASHINGTON.

THE commission having under consideration the proposition of transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department met at Washington last week and began taking testimony. Dr. Barstow, Chairman of the Board of Indian Commissioners, was the first witness. He thought the proposed transfer unwise, and that, if effected, it would work adversely to Christian operations now in progress. He thought it impossible for the body of the Indian Commissioners to work in harmony with army officials as it did with civilians, and gave as his reason that the army was formed for war, to subdue enemies and make peace, rather than to promote religion and friendship. E. M. Kingsley, a member of the board, held similar views. He said we need an army with hoes and spades for the Indians, rather than swords and rifles. Both of the witnesses defended the Indian Agents as a body, and said the wholesale abuse was unwarranted....The President has determined to suspend Supervising Architect Hill, pending the trial of the Chicago indictment against him.

POLITICAL.

PROMINENT members of the National party held a conference at Washington last week, the result of which is thus reported by the Associated Press Agent: The meeting was held with closed doors. They claim sixteen members in the next Congress, who will act independently, not joining either party in caucus, and this number, as the balance of power, will enable them to decide the Speakership and claim the Clerkship and Chairmanship of important committees. They propose to maintain in Washington an office for the distribution of political information, but do not, as has been stated, intend to start here a Greenback organ. The following resolution was adopted at the conference:

> Resolved, That the National party, so far as it is represented by this conference, denounce the resumption of specie payments as a fraud and delusion, impracticable in this or any other civilized country; yet, if persisted in by the Secretary of the Treasury, we insist that it shall be so carried out as to be equal in its operations in all sections, and enforced for the redemption of the national-bank notes as well as for the legal-tender notes issued by the Government.

The members of the Central Executive Committee of the National party, with headquarters in Washington, have issued an address to the people of the United States, reviewing the rise and progress of the party, predicting continued success, and the rapid spread of its principles, and expressing confidence that the party will elect its candidate for the Presidency in 1880, with majorities in Congress and in nearly all the State Legislatures. The address denounces the action of the banks, speaking through the Clearing House Association of New York, and says the contest is between the Republican and Democratic parties. It is between the money power and the people; between bank bills based on untaxed bonds and a Government legal-tender currency, and the people have no chance whatever of ever securing their emancipation from industrial thralldom, either through the party of money power, the Republican party, or its ally, the Democratic party. An appeal is made for organizations in the interest of the National party in every school district, city, town and ward.

GENERAL.

WILLIAM A. POTTER, ex-Chief Supervising Architect of the treasury, has been indicted, along with Hill, Mueller and others, for conspiring to defraud the Government in connection with the public building in Chicago.

BURNED: The sewer-pipe works of Sperry, Ritchie & Co., at Tallmadge, Ohio, loss $100,000; the Northern Pacific round-house at Fargo, Dakota, loss $30,000; 4,000 tons of Government hay at Bismarck, Dakota; several houses at Middleport, N. Y., loss $30,000.

RECENT deaths: Episcopal Bishop Wilmer, of the Diocese of New Orleans; Louis A. Godey, the founder and publisher of Godey's Lady's Book, a well-known Philadelphia magazine; George Henry Lewes, the eminent English author, and husband of the still more eminent "George Eliot."

AT the meeting of railroad Presidents of the great trunk lines, held in New York the other day, it was decided that the present pooling arrangement on west-bound freights be continued for five years from the 1st of January, the percentages to be determined from time to time by Commissioner Albert Fink, to whom absolute power is given in the matter. The percentage of the pool is at present: Erie, 33 per cent.; New York Central, 33; Pennsylvania, 25; Baltimore and Ohio, 9. It was also resolved to maintain the rates for east-bound freight and passengers.

FOREIGN.

ADVICES from the war in Afghanistan to Nov. 30 would indicate that the British invaders were just beginning to realize the seriousness of the task before them. Dispatches of that date inform us that Gen. Browne's communications have been "temporarily cut. Hostile Highlanders, estimated at 4,000 in number, have collected in the hills below Ali Musjid. They cut off stragglers and fire on armed parties. The section of the pass between Jumrood and Ali Musjid has been closed altogether for the present. A strongly-escorted convoy failed to force its way to-day. The situation is serious, and strong measures are inevitable."

MR. GLADSTONE delivered a speech at Greenwich, England, the other day, in which he denounced the Ministry for going to war with Afghanistan without first convoking Parliament and communicating with that body regarding the matter. He solemnly warned the British people not to abandon the principles of liberty which made its happiness. He declared that the money spent in this war is to the dishonor of England, and her responsibilities will but commence with her victory. Lady Macbeth's word's "Here is the smell of blood" are still a powerful peroration, and unjust wars lead to national downfall....The subject of cremation has lately been engaging the attention of the authorities in Paris, and it has been decided by the Board of Health that the public welfare will be subserved if the dead are burned in the following contingencies: (1) after battles, (2) during epidemics, (3) for the conveyance of remains to distant parts, and (4) where the soil is unsuitable for burial purposes.

ADVICES from the far East to Dec. 1 report that the British force invading Afghanistan through the Khyber pass were cut off from retreat by a large force of Afghans, who were well supplied with artillery, and posted upon an elevation of 7,000 feet.

M. T'KINDT, manager, and M. Fortamps, President, of the Banque de Belgique of Brussels, who defrauded the bank of 20,000,000 francs, have been convicted and sentenced, the former to fifteen years' solitary confinement, and the latter to one year's imprisonment with $1,200 fine.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch says Suleiman Pasha has been sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment....A new Turkish Ministry has been organized, all the members of the old Cabinet having been dismissed....At Goa, India, on the 4th of December, the body of St. Francis Xavier was exposed in the Cathedral in the presence of many Catholics from various parts of the world. The ceremonial was impressive and excited much religious enthusiasm.

EMPEROR WILLIAM has returned to the German capital, after several months' retirement, and issued a decree announcing his resumption of imperial powers....The British under Gen. Roberts gained a complete victory over the Afghans in Peiwar pass, killing a large number of the enemy, capturing eighteen cannon and a large quantity of ammunition. The British loss was eighty killed and wounded....The British Parliament convened Dec. 5, the war in Afghanistan being the occasion of its meeting so early. The Queen's address was unusually brief. It stated that the assurances from all foreign powers are friendly, and speaks hopefully of the future peace of Europe.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

MONDAY, Dec. 2.—The second session of the Forty-fifth Congress was opened in the presence of a very large and distinguished audience, the galleries and all available space being occupied. In the Senate Mr. Beck introduced a bill to provide for the retiring of the trade dollar, and for its coinage into standard silver dollars; Mr. Voorhees introduced a bill looking to the same end; and Mr. Blaine introduced a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to report to the Senate whether, at the recent elections, the constitutional rights of any citizens were violated in any State; what further legislation is necessary to protect citizens in their constitutional rights, etc. A resolution was also introduced providing for a joint committee to inquire into the cause and spread of the yellow fever, what legislation is necessary to prevent its introduction into the country, etc. The President's Message was received and read. The House was called to order by Speaker Randall, without any formal speech of welcome, the President's Message was read, after which an adjournment was voted without transacting any further business.

TUESDAY, Dec. 3.—SENATE.—Mr. Paddock introduced a resolution looking to the making of trade dollars a legal tender, and the enlargement of the standard silver dollar to 420 grains....Mr. Beck submitted a resolution calling upon Secretary Sherman for information as to what amount of silver coin has been received in payment of customs dues since the beginning of the fiscal year, and also whether or not he has applied the silver coin so received to the payment of interest on bonds. Agreed to....Mr. Matthews called up the Texas Pacific Railroad bill, and made an address in favor thereof.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced as follows: Recoining the silver trade dollars into standard silver dollars; repealing the Resumption act; for the appointment of committees on yellow-fever epidemics; to give notice of the termination of the treaty of 1868 with the North German Confederation; to abolish the tariff on matches; to punish election frauds; to authorize tobacco raisers to sell their products without payment of tax; to prevent corruption in elections; for improvement of the Mississippi river from its mouth to its headwaters; in relation to the expulsion from Germany of the naturalized American citizen Julius Bauer; for the admission and registry of foreign-built ships; for the termination of the naturalization treaty with Prussia....The Military Academy and Fortifications Appropriations bills were passed.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 4.—SENATE.—Messrs. Ferry, Davis and Randolph were appointed a committee to inquire about the omission of the Hot Springs clause from the enrolled Sundry Civil Appropriation bill at the last session....Mr. Saulsbury introduced a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, in redeeming United States legal-tender notes, as required by the Specie Resumption act, to pay 75 per cent. in gold coin and 25 per cent. in standard silver dollars....Mr. Harris' resolution regarding the prevention of epidemics was agreed to, with an amendment that the committee may sit with a similar committee of the House....The motion of Mr. Matthews to take up the Texas Pacific Railroad bill was rejected—19 yeas to 22 nays—on the ground that it would lead to a long discussion.

HOUSE.—The session of the House was very brief. The bill providing for a Hot Springs Commission, with an amendment that free baths will be maintained for the indigent, was passed....Mr. Fort offered a resolution declaring that a refusal by any national bank to receive and treat as a legal dollar the standard silver dollar of 412½ grains shall be deemed a defiance of the laws of the United States, and providing for the punishment of all banks so nullifying the law by the passage of a bill withdrawing their notes from circulation.

THURSDAY, Dec. 5.—SENATE.—A resolution was adopted calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to the amount of deposits in the treasury to the credit of the Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company; whether interest should be allowed thereon; the expenses of the commission to settle the affairs of that company, and what legislation is necessary to close up the affairs of the company and have the Commissioners retire....The Vice President announced as the special committee on yellow-fever investigation Messrs. Harris, Matthews, Lamar, Paddock, Conover, Garland, and Eustis....The following changes in the standing committees were made by unanimous consent: Mr. Eaton is to retire from the Committee on Appropriations, and Mr. Wallace is to take his place. Mr. Morgan is to retire from the Committee on Patents, and Mr. Eaton is to take his place. Mr. Wallace to retire from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and Mr. Morgan is to take his place. ....Mr. Ferry was excused from service on the committee to inquire as to Senator Conover's connection with the omission of the Hot Springs clause from the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill at the last session....Adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE.—Mr. Singleton, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill. Referred to the committee of the whole, and made the special order for Tuesday next....Mr. Clymer, from the same committee, reported the Naval Appropriation bill. Referred to the committee of the whole....Mr. Harrison, of Illinois, offered a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information regarding the names, salary, and duties of all the employes appointed in the Chicago Custom House since the appointment of the present Collector. Adopted....Mr. Garfield, from the Committee on Rules, reported a concurrent resolution for the appointment of a Yellow Fever Commission, and said the committee had not considered the power of Congress in the matter farther than to recognize the fact that, under even the strictest construction of the constitution, Congress had the clearest possible right to take care of the quarantine regulations along the harbors and navigable rivers. In this instance the men of all parties and sections were absolutely in accord, and any light that could be thrown on the history of the pestilence, and in direction of the splendid generosities and sympathies of the people, ought to be shed upon it for future use. The resolution was adopted, and the House adjourned till Monday.

MESSAGE.

The President's Annual Statement of the Condition of the Country.

Fellow-citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Our heartfelt gratitude is due to the Divine Being, who holds in His hands the destinies of nations, for the continued bestowal during the last year of countless blessings upon our country.

We are at peace with all other nations. Our public credit has greatly improved, and is, perhaps, now stronger than ever before. Abundant harvests have rewarded the labors of those who till the soil, our manufacturing industries are reviving, and it is believed that general prosperity, which has been so long anxiously looked for, is at last within our reach.

The Yellow Fever.

The enjoyment of health by our people generally, has, however, been interrupted, during the past season, by the prevalence of a fatal pestilence, the yellow fever, in some portions of the Southern States, creating an emergency which called for prompt and extraordinary measures of relief. The disease appeared as an epidemic at New Orleans and at other places on the Lower Mississippi soon after midsummer. It was rapidly spread by fugitives from the infected cities and towns, and did not disappear until early in November. The States of Louisiana, Mississippi and Tennessee have suffered severely. About 100,000 cases are believed to have occurred, of which about 20,000, according to intelligent estimates, proved fatal. It is impossible to estimate, with any approach to accuracy, the loss to the country occasioned by this epidemic. It is to be reckoned by the hundred millions of dollars. The suffering and destitution that resulted excited the deepest sympathy in all parts of the Union. Physicians and nurses hastened from every quarter to the assistance of the afflicted communities. Voluntary contributions of money and supplies, in every needed form, were speedily and generously furnished. The Government was able to respond in some measure to the call for help, by providing tents, medicines and food for the sick and destitute, the requisite directions for the purpose being given in the confident expectation that this action of the Executive would receive the sanction of Congress. About 1,800 tents, and rations of the value of about $25,000, were sent to cities and towns which applied for them, full details of which will be furnished to Congress by the proper department.

The fearful spread of this pestilence has awakened a very general public sentiment in favor of national sanitary administration, which shall not only control quarantine, but have the sanitary supervision of internal commerce in times of epidemics, and hold an advisory relation to the State and municipal health authorities, with power to deal with whatever endangers the public health, and which the municipal and State authorities are unable to regulate. The National Quarantine act, approved April 29, 1878, which was passed too late in the last session of Congress to provide the means for carrying it into practical operation during the past season, is a step in the direction here indicated. In view of the necessity for the most effective measures, by quarantine and otherwise, for the protection of our seaports, and the country generally, from this and other epidemics, it is recommended that Congress give to the whole subject early and careful consideration.

The South.

The permanent pacification of the country by the complete protection of all citizens in every civil and political right continues to be of paramount interest with the great body of our people. Every step in this direction is welcomed with public approval, and every interruption of steady and uniform progress to the desired consummation awakens general uneasiness and widespread condemnation. The recent Congressional elections have furnished a direct and trustworthy test of the advance thus far made in the practical establishment of the right of suffrage, secured by the constitution to the liberated race in the Southern States. All disturbing influences, real or imaginary, had been removed from all of these States.

The three constitutional amendments, which conferred freedom and equality of civil and political rights upon the people of the South, were adopted by the concurrent action of the great body of good citizens who maintained the authority of the National Government and the integrity and perpetuity of the Union at such a cost of treasure and life, as a wise and necessary embodiment in the organic law of the just results of the war. The people of the former slave-holding States accepted these results, and gave, in every practicable form, assurances that the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments, and laws passed in pursuance thereof, should, in good faith, be enforced, rigidly and impartially, in letter and spirit, to the end that the humblest citizen, without distinction of race or color, should, under them, receive full and equal protection in person and property and in political rights and privileges. By these constitutional amendments the Southern section of the Union obtained a large increase of political power in Congress and in the Electoral College, and the country justly expected that elections would proceed, as to the enfranchised race, upon the same circumstances of legal and constitutional freedom and protection which obtained in all the other States of the Union. The friends of law and order looked forward to the conduct of these elections, as offering to the general judgment of the country an important opportunity to measure the degree in which the right of suffrage could be exercised by the colored people, and would be respected by their fellow-citizens; but a more general enjoyment of freedom of suffrage by the colored people, and a more just and generous protection of that freedom by the communities of which they form a part, were generally anticipated than the record of the elections discloses. In some of those States in which the colored people have been unable to make their opinions felt in the elections the result is mainly due to influences not easily measured or remedied by legal protection; but in the States of Louisiana and South Carolina at large, and in some particular Congressional districts outside of those States, the records of the elections seem to compel the conclusion that the rights of the colored voters have been overridden, and their participation in the elections not permitted to be either general or free.

It will be for the Congress for which these elections were held to make such examinations into their conduct as may be appropriate to determine the validity of the claims of members to their seats. In the meanwhile it becomes the duty of the Executive and judicial Departments of the Government, each in its province, to inquire into and punish violations of the laws of the United States which have occurred. I can but repeat what I said in this connection in my last message, that whatever authority rests with me to this end I shall not hesitate to put forth, and I am unwilling to forego a renewed appeal to the Legislatures, the courts, the executive authorities, and the people of the States where these wrongs have been perpetrated, to give their assistance toward bringing to justice the offenders and preventing a repetition of the crimes. No means within my power will be spared to obtain a full and fair investigation of the alleged crimes, and to secure the conviction and just punishment of the guilty.

It is to be observed that the principal appropriation made for the Department of Justice at the last session contained the following clause: "And for defraying the expenses which may be incurred in the enforcement of the act approved Feb. 28, 1871, entitled, 'An act to amend an act approved May 30, 1870, entitled an act to enforce the rights of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of the Union, and for other purposes,' or any acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto."

It is the opinion of the Attorney General that the expenses of these proceedings will largely exceed the amount which was thus provided, and I may rely confidently upon Congress to make adequate appropriations to enable the Executive Department to enforce the laws.

Congressional Elections.

I respectfully urge upon your attention that the Congressional elections, in every district, in a very important sense, are justly a matter of political interest and concern throughout the whole country. Each State, every political party, is entitled to the share of power which is conferred by the legal and constitutional suffrage. It is the right of every citizen, possessing the qualifications prescribed by law, to cast one unintimidated ballot, and to have his ballot honestly counted. So long as the exercise of this power and the enjoyment of this right are common and equal, practically as well as formally, submission to the results of the suffrage will be accorded loyally and cheerfully, and all the departments of Government will feel the true vigor of the popular will thus expressed. No temporary or administrative interests of the Government, however urgent or weighty, will ever displace the zeal of our people in defense of the primary rights of citizenship. They understand that the protection of liberty requires the maintenance, in full vigor, of the manly methods of free speech, free press, and free suffrage, and will sustain the full authority of the Government to enforce the laws which are framed to preserve these inestimable rights. The material progress and welfare of the States depend on the protection afforded to their citizens. There can be no peace without such protection, no prosperity without peace; and the whole country is deeply interested in the growth and prosperity of all its parts.

While the country has not yet reached complete unity of feeling and reciprocal confidence between the communities so lately and so seriously estranged, I feel an absolute assurance that the tendencies are in that direction, and with increasing force. The power of public opinion will override all political prejudices, and all sectional or State attachments, in demanding that all over our wide territory the name and character of citizen of the United States shall mean one and the same thing, and carry with them unchallenged security and respect.

Foreign Relations.

Our relations with other countries continue peaceful. Our neutrality in contests between foreign powers has been maintained and respected.

The Universal Exposition held at Paris during the past summer has been attended by large numbers of our citizens. The brief period allowed for the preparation and arrangement of the contributions of our citizens to this great Exposition was well employed in energetic and judicious efforts to overcome this disadvantage. These efforts, led and directed by the Commissioner General, were remarkably successful, and the exhibition of the products of American industry was creditable and gratifying in scope and character. The reports of the United States Commissioners, giving its results in detail, will be duly laid before you. Our participation in this international competition for the favor and the trade of the world may be expected to produce useful and important results, in promoting intercourse, friendship and commerce with other nations.

In accordance with the provisions of the act of Feb. 28, 1878, three Commissioners were appointed to an international conference on the subject of adopting a common ratio between gold and silver, for the purpose of establishing, internationally, the use of bimetallic money, and securing fixity of relative value between those metals.

Invitations were addressed to the various Governments which had expressed a willingness to participate in its deliberations. The conference held its meetings in Paris in August last. The report of the Commissioners, herewith submitted, will show its results. No common ratio between gold and silver could be agreed upon by the conference. The general conclusion was reached that it is necessary to maintain in the world the monetary functions of silver as well as of gold, leaving the selection of the use of one or the other of these two metals, or of both, to be made by each state.

Congress having appropriated at its last session the sum of $5,500,000 to pay the award of the Joint Commission at Halifax, if, after correspondence with the British Government on the subject of the conformity of the award to the requirements of the treaty and to the terms of the question thereby submitted to the commission, the President shall deem it his duty to make the payment, communications upon these points were addressed to the British Government through the legation of the United States at London. Failing to obtain the concurrence of the British Government in the views of this Government respecting the award, I have deemed it my duty to tender the sum named, within the year fixed by the treaty, accompanied by a notice of the grounds of the payment, and protest against any other construction of the same. The correspondence upon this subject will be laid before you.

The Spanish Government has officially announced the termination of the insurrection in Cuba, and the restoration of peace throughout that island. Confident expectations are expressed of a revival of trade and prosperity, which it is earnestly hoped may prove well-founded. Numerous claims of American citizens for relief for injuries or restoration of property have been among the incidents of the long-continued hostilities. Some of these claims are in process of adjustment by Spain, and the others are promised early and careful consideration.

The treaty made with Italy, in regard to reciprocal consular privileges, has been duly ratified and proclaimed.

No questions of grave importance have arisen with any other of the European powers.

The Japanese Government has been desirous of a revision of such parts of its treaties with foreign powers as relate to commerce, and, it is understood, has addressed to each of the treaty powers a request to open negotiations with that view. The United States Government has been inclined to regard the matter favorably. Whatever restrictions upon trade with Japan are found injurious to that people cannot but affect injuriously nations holding commercial intercourse with them. Japan, after a long period of seclusion, has within the past few years made rapid strides in the path of enlightenment and progress, and, not unreasonably, is looking forward to the time when her relations with the nations of Europe and America shall be assimilated to those which they hold with each other. A treaty looking to this end has been made, which will be submitted for the consideration of the Senate.

After an interval of seven years, the Chinese Government has again sent envoys to the United States. They have been received, and a permanent legation is now established here by that Government. It is not doubted that this step will be of advantage to both nations in promoting friendly relations and removing causes of difference. The treaty with the Samoan islands, having been duly ratified and accepted on the part of both Governments, is now in operation, and a survey and soundings of the harbor of Pago-Pago have been made by a naval vessel of the United States, with a view of its occupation as a naval station, if found desirable to the service.

Since the resumption of diplomatic relations with Mexico, correspondence has been opened and still continues between the two Governments upon the various questions which at one time seemed to endanger their relations. While no formal agreement has been reached as to the troubles on the border, much has been done to repress and diminish them. The effective force of United States troops on the Rio Grande, by a strict and faithful compliance with instructions, has done much to remove the sources of dispute, and it is now understood that a like force of Mexican troops on the other side of the river is also making an energetic movement against the marauding Indian tribes. This Government looks with the greatest satisfaction upon every evidence of strength in the national authority of Mexico, and upon every effort put forth to prevent or to punish incursions upon our territory. Reluctant to assume any action or attitude in the control of these incursions, by military movements across the border, not imperatively demanded for the protection of the lives and property of our own citizens, I shall take the earliest opportunity consistent with the proper discharge of this plain duty to recognize the ability of the Mexican Government to restrain effectively violations of our territory. It is proposed to hold next year an international exhibition in Mexico, and it is believed that the display of the agricultural and manufacturing products of the two nations will tend to better understanding and increased commercial intercourse between their people.

With Brazil and the republics of Central and South America some steps have been taken toward the development of closer commercial intercourse. Diplomatic relations have been resumed with Colombia and with Bolivia. A boundary question between the Argentine Republic and Paraguay has been submitted by those Governments for arbitration to the President of the United States, and I have, after careful examination, given a decision upon it.

The National Finances.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury furnishes a detailed statement of the operations of that department of the Government and of the condition of the public finances.

The ordinary revenues from all sources for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1878, were $257,763,878.70; the ordinary expenditures for the same period were $236,964,326.80—leaving a surplus revenue for the year of $20,799,551.90.

The receipts of the present fiscal year, ending June 30, 1879, actual and estimated, are as follows: Actual receipts for the first quarter commencing July 1, 1878, $73,389,743.43; estimated receipts for remaining three-quarters of the year, $191,110,256.57; total receipts for the current fiscal year, actual and estimated, $264,500,000. The expenditures for the same period will be, actual and estimated, as follows: For the quarter commencing July 1, 1878, actual expenditures, $73,344,573.27, and for the remaining three-quarters of the year the expenditures are estimated at $166,755,426.73—making the total expenditures $240,100,000, and leaving an estimated surplus revenue for the year ending June 30, 1879, of $24,400,000.

The total receipts during the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, estimated according to existing laws, will be $264,500,000; and the estimated ordinary expenditures for the same period will be $236,320,412.68, leaving a surplus of $28,179,587.32 for that year.

In the foregoing statement of expenditures, actual and estimated, no amount is allowed for the sinking fund provided for by the act approved Feb. 25, 1862, which requires that 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States shall be purchased or paid within each fiscal year, to be set apart as a sinking fund. There has been, however, a substantial compliance with the conditions of the law. By its terms, the public debt should have been reduced between 1862 and the close of the last fiscal year, $518,361,806.28; the actual reduction of the ascertained debt, in that period, has been $720,644,739.61, being in excess of the reduction required by the Sinking-Fund act, $202,282,933.33.

The amount of the public debt, less cash in the treasury, Nov. 1, 1878, was $2,024,200,083.18—a reduction, since the same date last year, of $23,150,617.39.

The progress made during the last year in refunding the public debt, at lower rates of interest, is very gratifying. The amount of 4 per cent. bonds sold during the present year prior to Nov. 23, 1878, is $100,270,900, and 6 per cent. bonds, commonly known as 5-20s, to an equal amount, have been or will be redeemed as calls mature.

It has been the policy of the department to place the 4 per cent. bonds within easy reach of every citizen who desires to invest his savings, whether small or great, in these securities. The Secretary of the Treasury recommends that the law be so modified that small sums may be invested, and that, through the Postoffices or other agents of the Government, the freest opportunity may be given in all parts of the country for such investments.

The best mode suggested is that the department be authorized to issue certificates of deposit, of the denomination of $10, bearing interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum, and convertible at any time within one year after their issue into the 4 per cent. bonds authorized by the Refunding act, and to be issued only in exchange for United States notes sent to the treasury by mail or otherwise. Such a provision of law, supported by suitable regulations, would enable any person readily, without cost or risk, to convert his money into an interest-bearing security of the United States, and the money so received could be applied to the redemption of 6 per cent. bonds.

The coinage of gold during the last fiscal year was $52,798,980. The coinage of silver dollars, under the act passed Feb. 28, 1878, amounted on the 23d of November, 1878, to $19,814,550, of which amount $4,984,947 are in circulation, and the balance, $14,829,603 is still in the possession of the Government.

With views unchanged with regard to the act under which the coinage of silver proceeds, it has been the purpose of the Secretary faithfully to execute the law, and to afford a fair trial to the measure.

In the present financial condition of the country, I am persuaded that the welfare of legitimate business and industry of every description will be best promoted by abstaining from all attempts to make radical changes in the existing financial legislation. Let it be understood that during the coming year the business of the country will be undisturbed by Governmental interference with the laws affecting it, and we may confidently expect that the resumption of specie payments, which will take place at the appointed time, will be successfully and easily maintained, and that it will be followed by a healthful and enduring revival of business prosperity.

Let the healing influence of time, the inherent energies of our people, and the boundless resources of our country, have a fair opportunity, and relief from present difficulties will surely follow.

Military Affairs.

The report of the Secretary of War shows that the army has been well and economically supplied, that our small force has been actively employed, and has faithfully performed all the service required of it. The morale of the army has improved, and the number of desertions has materially decreased during the year.

The Secretary recommends—

1. That a pension be granted to the widow of the late Lieut. Henry H. Benner, Eighteenth Infantry, who lost his life by yellow fever while in command of the steamer J. M. Chambers, sent with supplies for the relief of sufferers in the South from that disease.

2. The establishment of the annuity scheme for the benefit of the heirs of deceased officers, as suggested by the Paymaster General.

3. The adoption by Congress of a plan for the publication of the records of the war of the Rebellion, now being prepared for that purpose.

4. The increase of the extra per diem of soldier-teachers employed in post-schools, and liberal appropriations for the erection of buildings for schools and libraries at the different posts.

5. The repeal or amendment of the act of June 18, 1878, forbidding the "use of the army as a posse comitatus, or otherwise, for the purpose of executing the laws, except in such cases and under such circumstances as may be expressly authorized by the constitution or by act of Congress."

6. The passage of a joint resolution of Congress legalizing the issues of rations, tents and medicines which were made for the relief of sufferers from yellow fever.

7. That provision be made for the erection of a fire-proof building for the preservation of certain valuable records, now constantly exposed to destruction by fire.

These recommendations are commended to your favorable consideration.

Naval Affairs.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy shows that the navy has improved during the last fiscal year. Work has been done on seventy-five vessels, ten of which have been thoroughly repaired and made ready for sea. Two others are in rapid progress toward completion. The total expenditures of the year, including the amount appropriated for the deficiencies of the previous year, were $17,468,392.65. The actual expenses chargeable to the year, exclusive of these deficiencies, were $13,306,914.09, or $767,199.18 less than those of the previous year, and $4,928,677.74 less than the expenses, including the deficiencies. The estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, are $14,562,381.45—exceeding the appropriations of the present year only $33,949.75; which excess is occasioned by the demands of the Naval Academy and Marine Corps, as explained in the Secretary's report. The appropriations for the present fiscal year are $14,528,431.70, which, in the opinion of the Secretary, will be ample for all the current expenses of the department during the year. The amount drawn from the treasury from July 1 to November 1, 1878, is $4,740,544.14, of which $70,980.75 has been refunded, leaving as the expenditure for that period $4,669,563.39, or $520,899.24 less than the corresponding period of the last fiscal year.

Postal Affairs.

The report of the Postmaster General embraces a detailed statement of the operations of the Postoffice Department. The expenditures of that department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1878, were $34,165,084.49. The receipts, including sales of stamps, money-order business and official stamps, were $29,277,516.95. The sum of $290,436.90, included in the foregoing statement of expenditures, is chargeable to preceding years, so that the actual expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, are $33,874,647.59. The amount drawn from the treasury on appropriations, in addition to the revenues, of the department was $5,307,652.82. The expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, are estimated at $36,571,900, and the receipts from all sources at $30,664,023.90, leaving a deficiency to be appropriated out of the treasury of $5,907,876.10. The report calls attention to the fact that the compensation of Postmasters and of railroads for carrying the mail is regulated by law, and that the failure of Congress to appropriate the amounts required for these purposes does not relieve the Government of responsibility, but necessarily increases the deficiency bills which Congress will be called upon to pass.

In providing for the postal service, the following questions are presented: Should Congress annually appropriate a sum for its expenses largely in excess of its revenues, or should such rates of postage be established as will make the department self-sustaining? Should the postal service be reduced by excluding from the mails matter which does not pay its way? Should the number of post-routes be diminished? Should other methods be adopted which will increase the revenue or diminish the expenses of the postal service?

The International Postal Congress, which met at Paris, May 1, 1878, and continued in session until June 4 of the same year, was composed of delegates from nearly all the civilized countries of the world. It adopted a new convention, to take the place of the treaty concluded at Berne, Oct. 9, 1874, which goes into effect on the 1st of April, 1879, between the countries whose delegates have signed it. It was ratified and approved, by and with the consent of the President, Aug. 13, 1878. A synopsis of this Universal Postal Convention will be found in the report of the Postmaster General, and the full text in the appendix thereto. In its origin the Postal Union comprised twenty-three countries, having a population of 350,000,000 of people, and will soon, by the accession of the few remaining countries and colonies which maintain organized postal services, constitute, in fact as well as in name, as its new title indicates, a universal union, regulating, upon a uniform basis of cheap postage-rates, the postal intercourse between all civilized nations.

Some embarrassment has arisen out of the conflict between the customs laws of this country and the provisions of the Postal Convention in regard to the transmission of foreign books and newspapers to this country by mail. It is hoped that Congress will be able to devise some means of reconciling the difficulties which have thus been created, so as to do justice to all parties involved.

The Judiciary.

The business of the Supreme Court, and of the courts in many of the circuits, has increased to such an extent during the past years that additional legislation is imperative to relieve and prevent the delay of justice, and possible oppression to suitors, which is thus occasioned. The encumbered condition of these dockets is presented anew in the report of the Attorney General, and the remedy suggested is earnestly urged for Congressional action. The creation of additional Circuit Judges, as proposed, would afford a complete remedy, and would involve an expense—at the present rate of salaries—of not more than $60,000 a year.

Indian Affairs.

The annual reports of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs present an elaborate account of the present condition of the Indian tribes, and of that branch of the public service which ministers to their interests. While the conduct of the Indians, generally, has been orderly, and their relations with their neighbors friendly and peaceful, two local disturbances have occurred, which were deplorable in their character, but remained, happily, confined to a comparatively small number of Indians. The discontent among the Bannocks, which led first to some acts of violence on the part of some of the members of the tribe, and finally to the outbreak, appears to have been caused by an insufficiency of food on the reservation, and this insufficiency to have been owing to the inadequacy of the appropriations, made by Congress, to the wants of the Indians, at a time when the Indians were prevented from supplying the deficiency by hunting. After an arduous pursuit by the troops of the United States, and several engagements, the hostile Indians were reduced to subjection, and the larger part of them surrendered themselves as prisoners. In this connection I desire to call attention to the recommendation made by the Secretary of the Interior, that a sufficient fund be placed at the disposal of the Executive, to be used, with proper accountability, at discretion, in sudden emergencies of the Indian service.

The other case of disturbance was that of a band of Northern Cheyennes who suddenly left their reservation in the Indian Territory and marched rapidly through the States of Kansas and Nebraska in the direction of their old hunting-grounds, committing murders and other crimes on their way. From documents accompanying the report of the Secretary of the Interior, it appears that this disorderly band was as fully supplied with the necessaries of life as the 4,700 other Indians who remained quietly on the reservation, and that the disturbance was caused by men of a restless and mischievous disposition among the Indians themselves. Almost the whole of this band have surrendered to the military authorities, and it is a gratifying fact that when some of them had taken refuge in the camp of the Red Cloud Sioux, with whom they have been in friendly relations, the Sioux held them as prisoners and readily gave them up to the officers of the United States, thus giving new proof of the loyal spirit which, alarming rumors to the contrary notwithstanding, they have uniformly shown ever since the wishes they expressed at the council of September, 1877, had been complied with.

Both the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War unite in the recommendation that provision be made by Congress for the organization of a corps of mounted "Indian auxiliaries," to be under the control of the army, and to be used for the purpose of keeping the Indians on their reservations and preventing or repressing disturbance on their part. I earnestly concur in this recommendation. It is believed that the organization of such a body of Indian cavalry, receiving a moderate pay from the Government, would considerably weaken the restless element among the Indians by withdrawing from it a number of young men and giving them congenial employment under the Government, it being a matter of experience that Indians in our service almost without exception are faithful in the performance of the duties assigned to them. Such an organization would materially aid the army in the accomplishment of a task for which its numerical strength is sometimes found insufficient.

But, while the employment of force for the prevention or repression of Indian troubles is of occasional necessity, and wise preparation should be made to that end, greater reliance must be placed on humane and civilizing agencies for the ultimate solution of what is called the Indian problem. It may be very difficult, and require much patient effort, to curb the unruly spirit of the savage Indian to the restraints of civilized life, but experience shows that it is not impossible. Many of the tribes which are now quiet and orderly and self-supporting were once as savage as any that at present roam over the plains or in the mountains of the far West, and were then considered inaccessible to civilizing influences. It may be impossible to raise them fully up to the level of the white population of the United States; but we should not forget that they are the aborigines of the country, and called the soil their own on which our people have grown rich, powerful, and happy. We owe it to them as a moral duty to help them in attaining at least that degree of civilization which they may be able to reach. It is not only our duty—it is also our interest to do so. Indians who have become agriculturists or herdsmen and feel an interest in property will thenceforth cease to be a warlike and disturbing element. It is also a well-authenticated fact that Indians are apt to be peaceable and quiet when their children are at school, and I am gratified to know, from the expressions of Indians themselves and from many concurring reports, that there is a steadily increasing desire, even among Indians belonging to comparatively wild tribes, to have their children educated. I invite attention to the reports of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs touching the experiment recently inaugurated, in taking fifty Indian children, boys and girls, from different tribes, to the Hampton Normal Agricultural Institute, in Virginia, where they are to receive an elementary English education and training in agriculture and other useful work, to be returned to their tribes, after the completed course, as interpreters, instructors and examples. It is reported that the officer charged with the selection of those children might have had thousands of young Indians sent with him had it been possible to make provision for them. I agree with the Secretary of the Interior in saying that "the result of this interesting experiment, if favorable, may be destined to become an important factor in the advancement of civilization among the Indians."

The question whether a change in the control of the Indian service should be made was, at the last session of Congress, referred to a committee for inquiry and report. Without desiring to anticipate that report, I venture to express the hope that, in the decision of so important a question, the views expressed above may not be lost sight of, and that the decision, whatever it may be, will arrest further agitation of this subject, such agitation being apt to produce a disturbing effect upon the service as well as on the Indians themselves.

Hot Springs Commission.

In the enrollment of the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses, at the last session of Congress, that portion which provided for the continuation of the Hot Springs Commission was omitted. As the commission had completed the work of taking testimony on the many conflicting claims, the suspension of their labors, before determining the rights of claimants, threatened for a time to embarrass the interests not only of the Government, but also of a large number of the citizens of Hot Springs, who were waiting for final action on their claims before beginning contemplated improvements. In order to prevent serious difficulties which were apprehended, and at the solicitation of many leading citizens of Hot Springs, and others interested in the welfare of the town, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to request the late Commissioners to take charge of the records of their proceedings, and to perform such work as could properly be done by them under such circumstances, to facilitate the adjudication of the claims at an early day, and to preserve the status of the claimants until their rights should be finally determined. The late Commissioners complied with that request, and report that the testimony, in all the cases, has been written out, examined, briefed, and so arranged as to facilitate an early settlement when authorized by law. It is recommended that the requisite authority be given at as early a day in the session as possible, and that a fair compensation be allowed the late Commissioners for the expenses incurred and the labor performed by them since the 25th of June last.

Timber Lands.

I invite the attention of Congress to the recommendations made by the Secretary of the Interior with regard to the preservation of the timber on the public lands of the United States. The protection of the public property is one of first duties of the Government. The Department of the Interior should, therefore, be enabled by sufficient appropriations to enforce the laws in that respect. But this matter appears still more important as a question of public economy. The rapid destruction of our forests is an evil fraught with the gravest consequences, especially in the mountainous districts, where the rocky slopes, once denuded of their trees, will remain so forever. There the injury, once done, cannot be repaired. I fully concur with the Secretary of the Interior in the opinion that for this reason legislation touching the public timber in the mountainous States and Territories of the West should be especially well considered, and that existing laws, in which the destruction of the forests is not sufficiently guarded against, should be speedily modified. A general law concerning this important subject appears to me to be a matter of urgent public necessity.

Agriculture.

From the organization of the Government the importance of encouraging, by all possible means, the increase of our agricultural productions has been acknowledged and urged upon the attention of Congress and the people as the surest and readiest means of increasing our substantial and enduring prosperity.

The words of Washington are as applicable today as when, in his eighth annual message, he said: "It is not to be doubted with reference either to individual or national welfare, agriculture is of primary importance. In proportion as nations advance in population and other circumstances of maturity this truth becomes more apparent, and renders the cultivation of the soil more and more an object of public patronage. Institutions for promoting it grow up, supported by the public purse—and to what object can it be dedicated with greater propriety? Among the means which have been employed to this end, none have been attended with greater success than the establishment of boards, composed of proper characters, charged with collecting and diffusing information, and enabled, by premiums and small pecuniary aids, to encourage and assist the spirit of discovery and improvement, this species of establishment contributing doubly to the increase of improvement by stimulating to enterprise and experiment, and by drawing to a common center the results everywhere of individual skill and observation, and spreading them thence over the whole nation. Experience accordingly hath shown that they are very cheap instruments of immense national benefit."

The great preponderance of the agricultural over any other interest in the United States entitles it to all the consideration claimed for it by Washington. About one-half of the population of the United States is engaged in agriculture. The value of the agricultural products of the United States for the year 1878 is estimated at $3,000,000,000. The exports of agricultural products for the year 1877, as appears from the report of the Bureau of Statistics, were $524,000,000. The great extent of our country, with its diversity of soil and climate, enables us to produce within our own borders, and by our own labor, not only the necessaries but most of the luxuries that are consumed in civilized countries. Yet, notwithstanding our advantages of soil, climate and intercommunication, it appears from the statistical statements in the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture that we import annually from foreign lands many millions of dollars' worth of agricultural products which could be raised in our own country.

Numerous questions arise in the practice of advanced agriculture which can only be answered by experiments, often costly and sometimes fruitless, which are beyond the means of private individuals, and are a just and proper charge on the whole nation for the benefit of the nation. It is good policy, especially in times of depression and uncertainty in other business pursuits, with a vast area of uncultivated, and hence unproductive territory wisely opened to homestead settlement, to encourage, by every proper and legitimate means, the occupation and tillage of the soil. The efforts of the Department of Agriculture to stimulate old and introduce new agricultural industries, to improve the quality and increase the quantity of our products, to determine the value of old or establish the importance of new methods of culture, are worthy of your careful and favorable consideration, and assistance by such appropriations of money and enlargement of facilities as may seem to be demanded by the present favorable conditions for the growth and rapid development of this important interest.

The abuse of animals in transit is widely attracting public attention. A national convention of societies specially interested in the subject has recently met at Baltimore, and the facts developed, both in regard to cruelties to animals and the effect of such cruelties upon the public health, would seem to demand the careful consideration of Congress, and the enactment of more efficient laws for the prevention of these abuses.

Education.

The report of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Education shows very gratifying progress throughout the country, in all the interests committed to the care of this important office. The report is especially encouraging with respect to the extension of the advantages of the common-school system in sections of the country where the general enjoyment of the privilege of free schools is not yet attained.

To education more than to any other agency we are indebted for the measure of the advancement of the people in the requisite knowledge and appreciation of their rights and responsibilities as citizens, and I desire to repeat the suggestion contained in my former message in behalf of the enactment of appropriate measures by Congress for the purpose of supplementing, with national aid, the local systems of education in the several States.

Adequate accommodations for the great library, which is overgrowing the capacity of the rooms now occupied at the Capitol, should be provided without further delay. This invaluable collection of books, manuscripts and illustrative art has grown to such proportions, in connection with the copyright system of the country, as to demand the prompt and careful attention of Congress to save it from injury in its present crowded and insufficient quarters. As this library is national in its character, and must, from the nature of the case, increase even more rapidly in the future than in the past, it cannot be doubted that the people will sanction any wise expenditure to preserve it and to enlarge its usefulness.

The appeal of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution for the means to organize, exhibit and make available for the public benefit the articles now stored away belonging to the National Museum, I heartily recommend to your favorable consideration.

District of Columbia.

The attention of Congress is again invited to the condition of the river-front of the city of Washington. It is a matter of vital importance to the health of the residents of the national capital, both temporary and permanent, that the lowlands in front of the city, now subject to tidal overflow, should be reclaimed. In their present condition these flats obstruct the drainage of the city, and are a dangerous source of malarial poison. The reclamation will improve the navigation of the river, by restricting and, consequently, deepening its channel: and is also of importance when considered in connection with the extension of the public ground and the enlargement of the park, west and south of the Washington monument. The report of the Board of Survey, heretofore ordered by act of Congress, on the improvement of the harbor of Washington and Georgetown, is respectfully commended to consideration.

The report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia presents a detailed statement of the affairs of the District.

The relative expenditures by the United States and the District for local purposes are contrasted, showing that the expenditures by the people of the District greatly exceed those of the General Government. The exhibit is made in connection with estimates for the requisite repair of the defective pavements and sewers of the city, which is a work of immediate necessity, and, in the same connection, a plan is presented for the permanent funding of the outstanding securities of the District.

The benevolent, reformatory and penal institutions of the District are all entitled to the favorable attention of Congress. The Reform School needs additional buildings and teachers. Appropriations which will place all of these institutions in a condition to become models of usefulness and beneficence will be regarded by the country as liberality wisely bestowed.

The Commissioners, with evident justice, request attention to the discrimination made by Congress against the District in the donation of land for the support of the public schools, and ask that the same liberality that has been shown to the inhabitants of the various States and Territories of the United States may be extended to the District of Columbia.

The Commissioners also invite attention to the damage inflicted upon public and private interests by the present location of the depots and switching tracks of the several railroads entering the city, and ask for legislation looking to their removal. The recommendations and suggestions contained in the report will, I trust, receive the careful consideration of Congress.

Sufficient time has, perhaps, not elapsed since the reorganization of the Government of the District, under the recent legislation of Congress, for the expression of a confident opinion as to its successful operation; but the practical results already attained are so satisfactory that the friends of the new government may well urge upon Congress the wisdom of its continuance, without essential modification, until, by actual experience, its advantages and defects may be more fully ascertained.

R. B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 2, 1878.

THE FINANCES.

ANNUAL REPORT OF SECRETARY SHERMAN.

The annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury upon the state of the finances of the country is an unusually lengthy document. Upon the subject of specie resumption the Secretary says:

The important duty imposed on this department by the Resumption act, approved Jan. 14, 1875, has been steadily pursued during the past year. The plain purpose of the act is to secure to all interests and all classes the benefits of a sound currency, redeemable in coin, with the least possible disturbance of existing rights and contracts. Three of its provisions have been substantially carried into execution by the gradual substitution of fractional coin for fractional currency, by the free coinage of gold and by free banking. There remains only the completion of preparations for resumption in coin on the 1st day of January, 1879, and its maintenance thereafter upon the basis of existing law.

At the date of my annual report to Congress in December, 1877, it was deemed necessary, as a preparation for resumption, to accumulate in the treasury a coin reserve of at least 40 per cent. of United States notes outstanding. At that time it was anticipated that, under the provisions of the Resumption act, the volume of United States notes would be reduced to $300,000,000 by the 1st of January, 1879, or soon thereafter, and that a reserve in coin of $120,000,000 would then be sufficient. Congress, however, in view of the strong popular feeling against a contraction of the currency, by the act approved May 31, 1878, forbade the retirement of any United States notes after that date, leaving the amount in circulation $346,681,016. Upon the principle of safety upon which the department was acting, that 40 per cent. of coin was the smallest reserve upon which resumption could prudently be commenced, it became necessary to increase the coin reserve to $138,000,000.

At the close of the year 1877 this coin reserve, in excess of coin liabilities, amounted to $101,116,030.96, of which $15,000,000 were obtained by the sale of 4½ per cent., and $25,000,000 by the sale of 4 per cent. bonds, the residue being surplus revenue. Subsequently, on the 11th day of April, 1878, the Secretary entered into a contract with certain bankers in New York and London—the parties to the previous contract of June 9, 1877, already communicated to Congress—for the sale of $50,000,000 4½ per cent. bonds for resumption purposes. The bonds were sold at a premium of 1½ per cent. and accrued interest, less a commission of ½ of 1 per cent. The contract has been fulfilled, and the net proceeds, $50,500,000, have been paid into the treasury in gold. The $5,500,000 coin paid on the Halifax award have been replaced by the sale of that amount of 4 per cent. bonds sold for resumption purposes, making the aggregate amount of bonds sold for these purposes $95,500,000, of which $65,000,000 were 4½ per cent. bonds, and $30,500,000 4 per cent. bonds. To this has been added the surplus revenue from time to time. The amount of coin held in the treasury on the 23d day of November last, in excess of coin sufficient to pay all accrued coin liabilities, was $141,888,100, and constitutes the coin reserve prepared for resumption purposes. This sum will be diminished somewhat on the 1st of January next by reason of the large amount of interest accruing on that day in excess of the coin revenue received meanwhile.

In anticipation of resumption, and in view of the fact that the redemption of United States notes is mandatory only at the office of the Assistant Treasurer in the city of New York, it was deemed important to secure the co-operation of the associated banks of that city in the ready collection of drafts on those banks and in the payment of treasury drafts held by them. A satisfactory arrangement has been made by which all drafts on the banks held by the treasury are to be paid at the Clearing-House, and all drafts on the treasury held by them are to be paid to the Clearing-House at the office of the Assistant Treasurer, in United States notes; and, after the 1st of January, United States notes are to be received by them as coin. This will greatly lessen the risk and labor of collections both to the treasury and the banks.

Every step in these preparations for resumption has been accompanied with increased business and confidence. The accumulation of coin, instead of increasing its price, as was feared by many, has steadily reduced its premium in the market. The depressing and ruinous losses that followed the panic of 1873 had not diminished in 1875, when the Resumption act passed; but every measure taken in the execution or enforcement of this act has tended to lighten these losses and to reduce the premium on coin, so that now it is merely nominal. The present condition of our trade, industry and commerce, hereafter more fully stated, our ample reserves, and the general confidence inspired in our financial condition, seem to justify the opinion that we are prepared to commence and maintain resumption from and after the first day of January, A. D. 1879.

The means and manner of doing this are left largely to the discretion of the Secretary, but, from the nature of the duty imposed, he must restore coin and bullion, when withdrawn in the process of redemption, either by the sale of bonds, or the use of the surplus revenue, or of the notes redeemed from time to time.

The power to sell any of the bonds described in the Refunding act continues after as well as before resumption. Though it may not be often used, it is essential to enable the department to meet contingencies. By its exercise it is anticipated that the treasury at any time can readily obtain coin to reinforce the reserve already accumulated. United States notes must, however, be the chief means under existing law with which the department must restore coin and bullion when withdrawn in process of redemption. The notes, when redeemed, must necessarily accumulate in the treasury until their superior use and convenience for circulation enables the department to exchange them at par for coin or bullion.

The act of May 31, 1878, already referred to, provides that when United States notes are redeemed or received in the treasury under any law, from any source whatever, and shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation.

The power to reissue United States notes was conferred by section 3,579, Revised Statutes, and was not limited by the Resumption act. As this, however, was questioned, Congress wisely removed the doubt.

Notes redeemed are like other notes received into the treasury. Payments of them can be made only in consequence of appropriations made by law, or for the purpose of bullion, or for the refunding of the public debt.

The current receipts from revenue are sufficient to meet the current expenditures as well as the accruing interest on the public debt. Authority is conferred by the Refunding act to redeem 6 per cent. bonds as they become redeemable, by the proceeds of the sale of bonds bearing a lower rate of interest. The United States notes redeemed under the Resumption act are, therefore, the principal means provided for the purchase of bullion or coin with which to maintain resumption, but should only be paid out when they can be used to replace an equal amount of coin withdrawn from the resumption fund. They may, it is true, be used for current purposes like other money, but when so used their place is filled by money received from taxes or other sources of revenue.

In daily business, no distinction need be made between moneys from whatever source received, but they may properly be applied to any of the purposes authorized by law. No doubt coin liabilities, such as interest or principal of the public debt, will be ordinarily paid and willingly received in United States notes, but, when demanded, such payments will be made in coin; and United States notes and coin will be used in the purchase of bullion. This method has already been adopted in Colorado and North Carolina, and arrangements are being perfected to purchase bullion in this way in all the mining regions of the United States.

By the act approved June 8, 1878, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to constitute any superintendent of a mint or assayer of any assay office an Assistant Treasurer of the United States to receive gold coin or bullion on deposit. By the Legislative Appropriation bill, approved July 19, 1878, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue coin certificates in payment to depositors of bullion at the several mints and assay offices of the United States. These provisions, intended to secure to the producers of bullion more speedy payment, will necessarily bring into the mints and treasury the great body of the precious metals mined in the United States, and will tend greatly to the easy and steady supply of bullion for coinage. United States notes, when at par with coin, will be readily received for bullion instead of coin certificates, and with great advantage and convenience to the producers.

Deposits of coin in the treasury will, no doubt, continue to be made after the 1st of January, as heretofore. Both gold and silver coin, from its weight and bulk, will naturally seek such a safe deposit, while notes redeemable in coin, from their superior convenience, will be circulated instead. After resumption, the distinction between coin and United States notes should be, as far as practicable, abandoned in the current affairs of the Government; and, therefore, no coin certificates should be issued except where expressly required by the provisions of law, as in the case of silver certificates. The gold certificates hitherto issued by virtue of the discretion conferred upon the Secretary will not be issued after the 1st of January next. The necessity for them during a suspension of specie payments is obvious, but no longer exists when by law every United States note is, in effect, a coin certificate. The only purpose that could be subserved by their issue hereafter would be to enable persons to convert their notes into coin certificates, and thus contract the currency and hoard gold in the vaults of the treasury without the inconvenience or risk of its custody. For convenience United States notes of the same denomination as the larger coin certificates will be issued.

By existing law customs duties and the interest of the public debt are payable in coin, and a portion of the duties was specifically pledged as a special fund for the payment of the interest, thus making one provision dependent upon the other. As we cannot, with due regard to the public honor, repeal the obligation to pay coin, we ought not to impair or repeal the means provided to procure coin. When, happily, our notes are equal to coin, they will be accepted as coin, both by the public creditor and by the Government; but this acceptance should be left to the option of the respective parties, and the legal right on both sides to demand coin should be preserved inviolate.

The Secretary is of the opinion that a change of the law is not necessary to authorize this department to receive United States notes for customs duties on and after the 1st day of January, 1879, while they are redeemable and are redeemed on demand in coin. After resumption it would seem a useless inconvenience to require payment of such duties in coin rather than in United States notes. The Resumption act, by clear implication, so far modifies previous laws as to permit payments in United States notes as well as in coin. The provision for coin payment was made in the midst of war when the notes were depreciated and the public necessities required an assured revenue in coin to support the public credit. This alone justified the refusal by the Government to take its own notes for the taxes levied by it. It has now definitely assumed to pay these notes in coin, and this necessarily implies the receipt of these notes as coin. To refuse them is only to invite their presentation for coin. Any other construction would require the notes to be presented to the Assistant Treasurer in New York for coin, and, if used in the purchase of bonds, to be returned to the same officer, or, if used for the payment of customs duties, to be carried to the Collector of Customs, who must daily deposit in the treasury all money received by him. It is not to be assumed that the law requires this indirect and inconvenient process after the notes are redeemable in coin on demand of the holder. They are then at a parity with coin, and both should be received indiscriminately.

If United States notes are received for duties at the port of New York, they should be received for the same purpose in all other ports of the United States, or an unconstitutional preference would be given to that port over other ports. If this privilege is denied to the citizens of other ports, they could make such use of these notes only by transporting them to New York and transporting the coin to their homes for payment; and all this, not only without benefit to the Government, but with a loss in returning the coin again to New York, where it is required for redemption purposes.

The provision in the law for redemption in New York was believed to be practical redemption in all parts of the United States. Actual redemption was confined to a single place from the necessity of maintaining only one coin reserve and where the coin could be easily accumulated and kept.

With this view of the Resumption act, the Secretary will feel it to be his duty, unless Congress otherwise provides, to direct that after the 1st day of January next, and while United States notes are redeemed at the treasury, they be received the same as coin by the officers of this department in all payments in all parts of the United States.

If any further provision of law is deemed necessary by Congress to authorize the receipt of United States notes for customs dues or for bonds, the Secretary respectfully submits that this authority should continue only while the notes are redeemed in coin. However desirable continuous resumption may be, and however confident we may feel in its maintenance, yet the experience of many nations has proven that it may be impossible in periods of great emergency. In such events the public faith demands that the customs duties shall be collected in coin and paid to the public creditors, and this pledge should never be violated or our ability to perform it endangered.

The tendency of late among commercial nations is to the adoption of a single standard of gold and the issue of silver for fractional coin. We may, by ignoring this tendency, give temporarily-increased value to the stores of silver held in Germany and France until our market absorbs them, but by adopting a silver standard as nearly equal to gold as practicable we make a market for our large production of silver, and furnish a full, honest dollar that will be hoarded, transported, or circulated, without disparagement or reproach.

It is respectfully submitted that the United States, already so largely interested in trade with all parts of the world, and becoming, by its population, wealth, commerce and productions a leading member of the family of nations, should not adopt a standard of less intrinsic value than other commercial nations.

Bad Luck Clear Through.

"My darling," says Mr. Sadrake, who has been ostensibly duck-shooting at San Mateo all the day and night previous, "did the office boy bring you those ducks I shot, as I told him?" "No, sir, he did not," replied Mrs. S., in an icy and appalling manner; "but the butcher's boy has been here to say that, as he cannot fill your orders for wild ducks to-day, he sends you a half dozen tame ones instead." Synopsis of the Annual Reports.

THE WAR OFFICE.

Annual Report of Secretary McCrary.

The Secretary of War, in his report, reviews the operations of the army for the year, and quotes portions of the reports of Gens. Sherman and Sheridan in regard to the condition of the service, its requirements, and its numerical inadequacy to perform the duty required of it. He describes the embarrassment of the army at present under the posse-comitatus clause in the last appropriation bill, and asks that Congress either repeal the clause and allow the President and Secretary of War to use the army as authorized by the constitution, or interpret the meaning of the clause so that it may be clear in what service the army can perform without violating its provisions. If the clause is not repealed, he wants Congress to enumerate the cases in which the army may be used to suppress disturbances in response to the call of the civil authorities. He recites the lawlessness in New Mexico, Texas, and elsewhere, which could not be suppressed by the civil authorities, and which might have been prevented had not the army been prohibited from interference.

With great delicacy Secretary McCrary treats the Indian question, and, while he describes what has been done by the military in respect to the hostile Indians, he does not join in the controversy between officers of the army and the Indian service about the cause of outbreaks or alleged insufficiency of the Indian management, nor does he allude in any way to the proposition for the transfer of the Indians from the care of the Secretary of the Interior to his own.

One of Secretary McCrary's hobbies is the education of the rank and file of the army, and the establishment and maintenance of schools for soldiers. He discusses this subject at length, describes what has already been done, and what he proposes to do.

He asks that Congress legalize his action in furnishing supplies to the yellow-fever sufferers, and that the army be reimbursed for such supplies. He also asks the passage of a bill giving a pension to the widow of Lieut. Benner, who died while in command of the yellow-fever relief boat, as she is not entitled to pension under the law, her husband not having died in the performance of military duty.

In regard to the uses of the army, the Secretary of War says:

"The fifteenth section of the act of Congress of June 18, 1878, provides that from and after the passage of the act it shall not be lawful to employ any part of the army of the United States as a posse comitatus or otherwise for the purpose of executing the laws, except in such cases and under such circumstances as such employment of such force may be expressly authorized by the constitution or by act of Congress. In my judgment it is important either that this provision be repealed or that the number of cases in which the use of the army shall be expressly authorized be very much enlarged. In many portions of our Western Territories, and even in some portions of the newer States, a resolute desperado with a few followers can defy the officers of the law and any local posse that can be organized. During the year numerous attacks have been made upon mail coaches in New Mexico and Arizona for purposes of robbery and plunder, and, while I have been of the opinion that the mails of the United States may be defended by the use of troops, I have been obliged to give instructions that they cannot without disregarding the act of Congress be employed to aid officers of the law in capturing robbers after they have committed a crime. In doing so they would act as a posse comitatus, and this is nowhere by law expressly authorized. In the new and sparsely-populated regions of the West to say to robbers and thieves that they shall not be taken on any writ unless the Sheriff and his local posse is able to capture them without aid from the soldiers is almost to grant them immunity from arrest. In these new regions the army is the power chiefly relied upon by the law-abiding people for protection, and chiefly feared by the lawless classes. Numerous instances might be cited, but the recent occurrences in Lincoln county, New Mexico, constitute a striking example. The inability of the officer in command of the troops in that vicinity to aid officers of the law in making arrests was one of the principal causes which led to the most disgraceful scenes of riot and murder, amounting, in fact, to anarchy. This state of things continued until a case could be made for declaring the district in insurrection, after which a proclamation of warning was issued by the President, the troops were called into action, and at once restored quiet. I am clearly of the opinion that the President should be left free to employ the national forces in aid of the processes of Federal Courts whenever he shall deem it necessary. But if such use is to be limited to such cases where, as declared by the act above quoted, it is expressly authorized by the constitution or by act of Congress, then it is respectfully submitted that Congress should give very careful attention to the enumeration and specification of the cases in which such use of the troops is to be permitted."

THE ARMY.

Report of Gen. W. T. Sherman.

Gen. Sherman, in his annual report to the Secretary of War, states that the army is in good condition, and discourses at length on the Indian question. The whole number of enlisted men in the army is 24,761.

Beyond question, says Gen. Sherman, it was hunger which drove the Bannocks and Cheyennes to war this summer, and similar escapades will occur each year unless these Indians be kept quiet with more food. It seems idle to expect that the enterprising white race will cease till every acre of this continent is susceptible of cultivation. It is not to be expected that these pasture-fields can be used by the two races without everlasting conflict. The reservations already set apart for the Indians are large enough, and should suffice them to raise all the meat and grain necessary for their subsistence, but, meantime, they must have food, else they will steal and fight. To convert these Indians into a pastoral race is the first step in the upward progress of civilization; that of agriculture must be the next stage, though slower of realization. But in this direction is the sole hope of rescuing any part of the "nomad" Indians from utter annihilation. This end cannot be reached by means of the present peace agents, because persuasion is wasted on an Indian. There must not only be a show of force, but actual force and subjection used. Force will be necessary to compel the "nomad" to cultivate his own ground.

There is a wide distinction among the tribes, and each tribe must be dealt with according to its nature. Large discretion to supply food must be lodged with the President, or somewhere else. Starvation with each year causes wars such as occurred this season with the Shoshones and Southern Cheyennes. The army cannot foresee or prevent these wars. All it can do, after the Indians break out, plunder, steal and kill harmless farmers, is to pursue and capture them in detail, after infinite toil, then conduct them back to their reservations and turn them loose to return to the same game, ad libitum. Congress alone can provide a remedy, and, if prevention be wiser than cure, money and discretion must be lodged somewhere in time to prevent starvation.

THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Secretary Thompson's Report.

Hon. R. W. Thompson, Secretary of the Navy, in his annual report, states that under the auspices of that department sixty-three Government vessels have been either wholly or partially equipped at the several navy yards, at an expenditure of $717,010.36, as follows: For labor, $142,205.21; for material from stock on hand, $487,675.81; for material purchased during the year, $97,129.34. Thirty-six thousand seven hundred and eighty tons of coal have been purchased for the use of the navy, costing, including freight, $288,222.09. Two hundred and eighty thousand five hundred and thirty pounds of Manila hemp have been purchased, costing $23,857.54. During the year $644,140 have been expended for the equipment of vessels, and under appropriation contingent (equipment and recruiting, 1878), $51,542, leaving a balance on hand of $13,542.

The number of desertions during the year was 609, and during the previous year 818. Five hundred and twenty-three boys have enlisted during the past year. There are remaining in the training ships 440 boys, who are advancing the tone and morale of the service. With the training system on a permanent basis, our ships will soon be manned by native-born seamen. It is the intention of the department to continue the present system of training-ships.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Secretary Schurz on the Indian Problem.

A very large portion of the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior is devoted to the discussion of the Indian question. He states that, on the whole, the character of the Indian service has been raised in point of integrity and efficiency, and proceeds to say:

I am, however, far from pretending that the present state of Indian affairs is what it ought to be. The experience gained in the earnest efforts to overcome difficulties and to correct abuses has enabled me to appreciate more clearly the task still to be accomplished. In my last annual report I stated frankly, and I have to repeat now, that in pursuing a policy ever so wise, and with a machinery ever so efficient, gradual improvement can be effected only by patient, energetic, and well-directed work in detail. An entirely satisfactory state of things can be brought about only under circumstances which are not and cannot be under the control of the Indian service alone. If the recurrence of trouble and disturbance is to be avoided, the appropriations made by Congress for the support of the Indians who are not self-supporting must be liberal enough to be sufficient for that purpose, and they must be made early enough in the year to render the purchase and delivery of new supplies possible before the old supplies are exhausted.

The Indian service should have at its disposal a sufficient fund to be used with proper accountability at discretion in unforseen emergencies.

Citizens of the Western States and Territories must be made to understand that, if the Indians are to cease to be troublesome paupers and vagabonds, are to become orderly and self-supporting, they must have lands fit for agriculture and pasture; that on such lands they must be permitted to raign and establish permanent homes, and that such a result cannot be obtained if the white people insist upon taking from them by force or trickery every acre of ground that is good for anything. The first two things can be accomplished by appropriate action on the part of Congress. The difficulties growing out of continually repeated encroachments by white people on the rights of the Indians may be lessened by the concentration of the Indians on a smaller number of reservations, but they can be entirely avoided even then only by the most energetic enforcement of the law on the part of the general and local governments. To this end it seems desirable that the Southwestern tribes, whose present reservation appears insecure, or otherwise unsuitable for their permanent settlement, should be gradually removed to the Indian Territory. The Northwestern tribes will, in the course of time, have to be concentrated in a similar manner on a few reservations east of the Rocky mountains and on the Pacific slope. To keep the Indians on their reservations and prevent disturbance and conflicts, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommends the organization of a mounted body of Indian auxiliaries, to be drawn from young men of the various tribes, and to be under the command of the military authorities. I heartily concur in this recommendation. It is a matter of general experience that the Indians so employed can be depended upon as to loyal fidelity to the duties assigned them. But the principal end of our Indian policy cannot be promoted by police measures alone. That end consists in gradually introducing among the Indians the habits and occupations of civilized life by inducing them to work for their own support, by encouraging pride of individual ownership of property, and by educating the young generation, and no efforts should be spared to bring to bear upon them the proper influences in that direction. Such efforts should not be sneered at as mere sentimental fancies, for, should they be discouraged by the assertion that success is impossible, the advance made by some Indian tribes is sufficient proof that a similar advance may be made by others. Whatever may be accomplished by the employment of force, it is certain that only as the Indians progress in the way of civilization they will cease to be a troublesome and disturbing element.

POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Annual Report of the Postmaster General.

Hon. David M. Key, Postmaster General, in his annual report of the operations of his department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1878, estimates the total expense of the postal service at $36,571,900, the amount appropriated for the current year being $33,256,373. The net revenue for the year from the sale of postage-stamps was $16,839,116, against $15,881,936 last year. Amount of stamps, stamped envelopes, etc., sold, $27,375,593, against $25,757,515 in 1877. Expended during the year for mail transportation, $19,444,179, against $19,356,023 the previous year. From tables showing the operation of the money-order offices it appears that the revenue from this source for the year was $209,647, against $109,148 the previous year.

A considerable portion of the report is devoted to the subject of the present and prospective deficiencies in the amounts appropriated by Congress for salaries of Postmasters and for railway transportation. In regard to Postmasters' salaries, he says the deficiencies or prevention of them, so far as salaries and compensation of Postmasters are concerned, are not and cannot be controlled by the department. If the amount appropriated by Congress for the purpose be not equal to the amount of compensation established by law, there must be a deficiency.

After describing the rates of compensation prescribed by law for railway mail service, the Postmaster General says the appropriation made by Congress at its last session was not sufficient to pay for the existing service on railroads, and, should no additional appropriation be made for this service, he shall feel it his duty under the law so to curtail the service as to fall within the appropriation, however much he might consider the public interests injured thereby.

In regard to the revenues of the postal service, the Postmaster General says:

"Time and again it has been shown that matter of the second and third class does not pay its way through the mails, and Congress has been urged to increase the rates thereon. The question has been considered time and time again by appropriate committees, and discussed in both branches of Congress, and the results have shown that it was not expected that the department should be self-sustaining, but that the deficiencies in its revenues should be met by appropriations from the general treasury. The amount of matter sent through the mails free is very large, adding greatly to our expenditure and giving us no revenue."

Postmaster General Key protests against the revival of the worst features of the franking privilege. The free list is such, he says, that almost every thing except letters can now be franked which ever could be, and it was precisely that kind of luggage which the abolition of the frank aimed at throwing out. Tons upon tons of books, documents, seeds, shrubs and the like are "dead-headed" from Washington all over the country.

AGRICULTURAL BUREAU.

Commissioner Le Duc's Report.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture shows that the department during the year has been engaged in examining into the practicability of introducing new products, and has been to some degree successful. The following extracts and condensations show in outline the work of this department for the year, as stated by the Commissioner himself.

Gen. Le Duc is an enthusiast on the subject of making the United States independent of foreign nations. He has grouped together, and gives in a table, a list of articles annually imported into this country, amounting in value to many millions of dollars, which he is confident might, and he thinks ought to, be produced at home. Among these articles are enumerated tea, coffee, sugar, Peruvian bark, paper material, rice, barley, hemp, flax seed, wool, fruits, nuts, etc. The Commissioner advocates the building and repairing of the Mississippi levees at the expense of the General Government.

The Commissioner states that the wheat crop of the present year has been promising in a high degree during the entire season. Fears of grasshopper invasions were early dispelled, except in a few counties in Minnesota. The losses from winter-killing, the fly, chinch-bug, grasshoppers, rust, smut, etc., have this season been far less than usual. The heaviest production is in the section of the lightest yield last year (the Northwestern or spring-wheat States), whose product fell off 36,000,000 bushels. The aggregate in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and Nebraska is double that of last year, and nearly 30,000,000 bushels greater than in 1875. The entire crop promises to exceed that of last year by 70,000,000 bushels, leaving 100,000,000 bushels for exportation, with a surplus remaining above the actual requirement of consumption. Other crops have generally been good.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Report of Commissioner Williamson.

Commissioner of the Land Office Williamson, in his report, shows that there are still 1,000,000,000 acres of public lands unsurveyed. The receipts last year from the sale of public lands were $2,022,536, or $569,567 greater than in the preceding year. The report exhibits in detail the work done in connection with the suppression of timber depredations on public lands, and presents a variety of information with regard to abandoned military and Indian reservations, the adjustment of private land claims, and miscellaneous matters.

Among other recommendations contained in the report are the following: For legislation to transfer any title the United States may possess in islands and beds of "meandered" lakes, sloughs and ponds to the States in which they respectively lie; to allow affidavits in pre-emption cases to be taken before the Judges and Clerks of courts of record anywhere in the local districts, instead of compelling attendance before Registers and Receivers; to repeal the town-site law, except as regards applications made under the law previous to its recent amendment; to enable the department to extend prompt relief to parties entering public land where title cannot be confirmed, and also in cases where erroneous and illegal exactions have been made, by refunding to them money paid in error.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Report of Commissioner Raum.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that $111,089,319 was collected during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878; a decrease of $8,367,231 from the receipts of the previous year. The receipts were from the following sources:

	1877.	1878.
Spirits	$57,469,430	$50,420,503
Tobacco	41,106,547	40,094,529
Fermented liquors	9,480,789	9,937,052
Banks and bankers	3,829,729	3,492,031
Stamps, penalties, etc	7,166,689	7,155,301
Total	$118,988,184	$111,089,319

It will be noticed that the falling off was almost entirely in the receipts from distilled spirits and tobacco, seven-eighths of the loss being on spirits, and the other eighth from tobacco. This is owing almost entirely to the attempted legislation in Congress last winter for the reduction of the tax on whisky and tobacco.

According to Commissioner Raum's figures the American people are drinking less whisky and more beer than formerly. There was manufactured in the fiscal year of 1878 about 6,500,000 gallons less whisky than during the previous year, and 1,500,000 gallons more beer.

Commissioner Raum estimates that $500,000,000 is annually expended for liquor in the United States, an expenditure that, if applied on the public debt, would pay it in three years. Each one of us, it will be seen, therefore pays over $13.25 per year into the hands of liquor sellers.

The number of cigars consumed in this country last year was 1,905,063,743, being an average of over forty-two cigars to every man, woman and child. Assuming that one-fourth of the population—a very large estimate—are smokers, each smoker would have 168 cigars for the year.

The amount of tobacco, other than cigars and cigarettes, consumed, was 25,312,923 pounds, which is equal to more than half a pound to every inhabitant.

The House of Representatives, at its last session, passed a bill reducing the tax on manufactured tobacco from 24 cents to 16 cents per pound. The Commissioner advises against the enactment of this measure, on the ground that it is inexpedient to reduce the revenues of the Government over $8,000,000 a year as will result if the proposed change is accomplished. But if the reduction of the tobacco tax is made the Commissioner will recommend that the tax on fermented liquors be increased from $1 to $1.50 per barrel of thirty-one gallons.

THE PENSION BUREAU.

Report of a Year's Operations.

Commissioner of Pensions Bentley, in his annual report, shows a reduction of expenses in the last two years of $662,222. There are 223,998 pensioners on the rolls. Exclusive of fees of Examining Surgeons and fees and salaries of Pension Agents, the amount paid for pensions during the year was $26,520,782, of which $240,901 was retained from pensioners and paid to claim agents for fees. The number of new claims for the year ending June 30, filed during the year, was 67,509. Of these, 18,812 were original claims for invalid pensions, being more than double the number of the same class filed in either of the four years 1871 to 1874; 18,240 were for the war of 1812 service, under the act of March 9, 1878; about one-sixth of these were in behalf of survivors; the balance were widows' claims. The aggregate saving in the bureau for the year, in reduced payments of salaries of all descriptions and reduction in the number of agencies, was $482,172. Adding $180,050 for 1877, the aggregate saving for two years in these items alone has been $662,222. Commissioner Bentley reports that, since the consolidation, the pensions have been paid more promptly than before, and the pay service has advanced to a high degree of efficiency.

THE TERRITORIES.

Reports of the Territorial Governors.

Some of the Governors of the Territories, in their annual reports to the Interior Department, make suggestions that are very interesting.

Montana.—The Governor of Montana submits the question whether the United States will permit the British Government to afford an asylum for our hostile Indians, and furnish them a safe place where they may recruit and replenish their supply of ammunition and again raid upon peaceable citizens. If the British Government persists in doing so, he recommends that for the safety of the people of the Territory the Indians be removed from the border several hundred miles into the interior. He recommends, also, in view of the surrounding dangers, that the military districts of the Yellowstone and Montana be consolidated in one department and placed under the command of Gen. Nelson A. Miles, to the support of whom thousands of settlers would rally.

Utah.—Gov. Emery, of Utah, recommends a modification of the Jury law in force so that jurors may be selected, certainly in criminal cases, in precisely the same manner as they are chosen for the United States courts in the States. He claims that as matters now stand it is almost impossible, owing to the peculiar legislation enacted by Congress, and to Territorial legislation, to obtain conviction in certain classes of cases. He recommends, secondly, that woman suffrage in the Territory be abolished, and thirdly, that bigamy in the Territories should be made by act of Congress a continuous offense, based on cohabitation rather than the marriage ceremony, as is now enacted by Congress.

Idaho.—Gov. Brayman, of Idaho, makes a general recommendation that a thorough revision and consolidation of the laws governing Territories be effected, securing greater uniformity, applying to all the same rules, in a manner defining more clearly the rights and limits of local legislation, and holding officers to a stricter accountability. To bring this about it is suggested that Territorial delegates might properly be permitted to vote in the House on Territorial matters.

Arizona.—Gov. Fremont, of Arizona, in his report to the Secretary of the Interior, expresses the opinion that the control of the Indians there should be transferred to the military.

MISCELLANEOUS REPORTS.

BUREAU OF PRINTING AND ENGRAVING.

The annual report of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department shows that the aggregate expenses of operating the bureau during the year was $538,861.32. In the labor and expense account less than one-fifth the amount appropriated was expended, leaving $653,336.17 in the treasury unexpended at the close of the last fiscal year. The number of impressions by plate printing was 20,244,400, against 18,980,327 during the preceding year. The number of sheets of customs and internal-revenue stamps and of United States securities delivered in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1877, was 9,830,059. The number of sheets of the same class of work during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1878, was 12,518,539. The value of notes, bonds and miscellaneous securities turned out during the year ended June 30, 1877, was $708,414,645. The value of the same class of work during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1878, was $1,040,451,380. Eight hundred and twenty-two persons are now employed in the bureau, the number having been increased during the last four months on account of the demand for the 4 per cent. bonds.

During the year no counterfeit has appeared on any of the work engraved or executed in the bureau.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The annual report of Gen. A. A. Humphrey Chief of Engineers, is devoted mainly to the subjects of fortifications and river and harbor improvements. It is shown that, during the fiscal year ending June 30, the sum of $2,794,483 was expended for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and a balance of $1,608,078, remaining from the previous appropriations, is available for use during the present fiscal year. The act of June 18, 1878, made provision for 215 works and for surveys and examinations at 116 places, appropriating a total of $8,201,700 in addition to the balance available from previous appropriations. Upon the approval of projects submitted by the various subordinate engineer officers, steps were taken for putting the works at once into execution, and they are now being conducted under the contract system, or by means of hired labor and the purchase of material in open market, as appeared to be the most advantageous in any particular instance to the Government.

FOREIGN MAILS.

J. H. Blackfan, Superintendent of Foreign Mails, shows that the total cost of the United States ocean mail service for the year ended June 30 was $197,276, being a reduction of $10,310 from the cost of the preceding year. The report embraces an elaborate account of the proceedings of the late postal convention at Paris, and the action taken by the representatives of the United States—Messrs. Tyner and Blackfan—at that meeting. The total weight of mails dispatched from the United States to postal union foreign countries during the fiscal year was, of letters, 3,400,711 ounces, and of printed matter and samples 14,528,862 ounces, being an increase over the preceding year of 176,284 ounces in letters and 1,210,975 ounces of printed matter and samples. The number of letters exchanged with countries not embraced in the general postal union—the Dominion of Canada excepted—was 697,551.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSARY GENERAL.

Commissary General Macfeely's report to the War Department shows that the total amount disbursed for subsistence stores during the fiscal year ended June 30 last was $3,510,551, of which $1,011,747 was reimbursed by sales of stores to officers and enlisted men; $31,824 was paid by the Interior Department for supplies furnished to Indians; $73,843 was collected for tobacco sold to enlisted men, and the balance was furnished to the department by the Congressional appropriation.

From the tables accompanying the report it appears that there was a marked decline in the cost of the components of the army ration during the past year, as compared with the preceding twelve months, and the estimates for appropriations were reduced accordingly.

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S REPORT.

The report of Quartermaster General Meigs contains a large amount of statistical information, and makes several recommendations. The total requisitions from his office during the fiscal year ended June 30 last amounted to $12,792,603. The department moved, during the year, 79,200 passengers, 11,400 beasts and 109,261 tons of military material. The department bought 2,251 horses and 1,162 mules during the year, at an average cost of $117 for the former and $130 for the latter. There were 11,375 horses and 9,638 mules in the army on the 30th of June, and the forage consumed was as follows: 893,000 bushels of corn, 1,100,000 bushels of oats, 138,000 bushels of barley, 57,000 tons of hay and 2,500 tons of straw.

REPORT OF THE SURGEON GENERAL.

The annual report of Surgeon General Barnes, United States army, has been submitted to the Secretary of War. It shows that there were disbursed during the year, for medicinal and hospital supplies, $46,001.01; expenses of purveying depots, $5,657.23; pay of employes $35,303.73; medical attendance, nursing, etc., $7,471.81; miscellaneous expenses, $6,111.16; total, $100,545.03; balance, June 30, 1878, $99,188.67. The greater part of this balance has since been disbursed, and the remainder will be required in fulfilling contracts made before June 30. There were furnished during the year 83 artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, while 1,700 drew commutations for the same.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, DEC. 12h, 1878

THEODORE REED, - - Editor.

Hon. John E. Neff is a little inclined to gerrymander in the interest of Mr. Neff. The democratic party can't afford it.

Hon. Walpole G. Colerick, Congressman elect in the 12th district, it is feared will be unable to take his seat in the next congress, owing to his impaired condition physical ly.

How does judge Osborn stand on the interest, attorney fee and other important questions likely to come up in the next legislature. It might be well enough to know about these things before important positions are filled.

The COURIER seems alarmed at the opposition to D. W. Voorhees, as a candidate for Senator.—Waterloo Press.

Far from it. We know of no opposition except by republican editors, and the more they wail the better it is for Voorhees.

The following from the Puget Sound Weekly Argus, published at Port Towsend, Washington Territory, may be of interest to the acquaintances of A. R. Hoffman, formerly of this place:

"In our recapitulation of majorties exhibited by the election returns of this county, we omitted to mention Prof. Hoffman's majority of 44 over Dr. Willison for County School Superintendent.

How is this for Shylock doctrine, as enunciated by the New York Evening Post, a pronounced radical organ. It says to Congress: "Let us have a short bill passed something like this: 'The Silver law is hereby repealed;' or 'The silver dollar shall not be a legal tender for any sum greater than five dollars.'

Let us have another short bill passed something like this: 'Every greenback redeemed by the treasury shall be forthwith withdrawn, cancelled and destroyed.'"

Since the election we hear very little about Tildens' cipher dispatches. The radical party was alive with "important discoveries" during the last campaign, it was a self-constituted committee, created to influence votes. If Tilden is guilty he is no worse than Hayes in that respect, besides the latter is guilty of stealing the Presidency. We would like to see congress refer the charges against Tilden to the Potter committee to be subject to a thorough investigation, and if Tilden is found guilty, let him share with Hayes in infamy. The people want to know something about the matter from a reliable source.

The Warsaw Union states that Howard Coe—the irrepressible, never-to-be-got-rid-of Howard—is a candidate for Door-keeper of the Senate. By all means let him be appointed. He will talk all the members to death in less than three weeks and secure to the overburdened tax-payers of Indiana a short and cheap session of the Legislature. Howard, we hand't thought of you before—but now that your name has been mentioned it occurs to us that you are just the d—est old bore that ever sought an office or button-holed a pollitition.—Wabash Courier.

The above fits closely. We know of several other "old bores" in Indiana who owe their political existance to a superabundance of check, whose names would appear with good effect on the retired list.

Straus Bros., a Ligonier firm, recently raked in another large lot of land on the Hawpatch, known as the Gale farms containing 440 acres, for which Mr. Gale paid $100 per acre a few years ago. The "Banner" says the land was PURCHASED by Straus Bros., who have few superiors as real estate operators; it says "they probably buy and sell more real estate than any other firm in Northern Indiana." Yes, and they do it by hunting up every owner of unincumbered real estate in Noble and adjoining counties who happens to be involved in debt, they loan the debtor money to the amount of about 25 per cent. of the real value of his land, take a mortgage as security, collect the interest promptly, and the very day the mortgage falls due it is presented for payment; if not paid at once it is foreclosed at the next term of Court, then in order to get possession of the land without trouble, they pay a little extra for a deed, and this is what they call PURCHASING land. We advise DeKalb county farmers to give Ligonier real estate fiends a wide berth, and save being "purchased" out of a home.

The time is not far off when a new issue will be presented on the question of finance. The subject has already been broached by several prominent organs that advocate Sherman's ideas, and it will not be long until the whole radical gang will be out spoken in favor of the old STATE BANKING system—a system that would be a disgrace to American statesmanship. The south would probable favor such a move in order to have a larger circulating medium, regardless of its wild-cat nature. The money power will favor anything that would operate against a sufficient issue of legal tender greenbacks. The radical party will favor anything suggested by the money power. The people want United States legal tender notes in sufficient quantity to bring the country back to prosperity. Retire the National Bank circulation, oppose the state bank issue, and demand greenbacks in such quantities as the demands of trade require with the aid of gold and silver, all at par, and receivable for all debts public and private including interest on bonds, when not otherwise provided in the now existing contracts, and trade will revive, confidence will be restored, and the country will prosper as of yore.

It will doubtless be seriously attempted during the present session of congress to increase the number of grains of silver in the standard dollar to the number that the trade dollar now contains, and make them both legal tender. Whether this is exactly the kind of legislation we want may bear argument; but there is one thing certain: the trade dollar should be made as good as its kind of less intrinsic value than itself. —Syracuse Gazette.

We have had all the legislation we need on the subject of the standard silver dollar. It has been made a legal tender at 412½ grains, there let it remain. Let the trade dollar nuisance be abated by the government taking them up at the value of the pure silver they contain, and sending them to the mint to be re-issued in standard silver dollars of 412½ grains each. It is not long since trade dollars were issued at par, after the supply had been placed in the hands of farmers and laboring men at 100 cents each, it was announced by the government and bankers that they were only worth 90 cents, and bankers and capitalists then commenced to gather them up as fast as possible at prices varying from 90 to 98 cents, until now we see but few of them in circulation. Now suppose congress would make them a legal tender, who would be the gainers? would not the present holders—the bankers and capitalists clear from two to ten per cent. in the tranaction? besides the amount stolen from the people in the former issue and redemption.

It is claimed by some republican papers that there are prominent democrats in the state who think a change in the management of our state benevolent institutions would be detrimental to the best interests of such institutions. If there are democrats in the state who advance such ideas, they are certainly influenced by personal motives, and prefer to advocate measures that would benefit themselves rather than the party which they profess to support. It cannot be argued with any force that the republican party would allow a democrat to hold an official position which is within the appointing power of that party, neither can it be maintained that the republican party is composed of men more intelligent and better fitted for positions of trust which require the talent and experience necessary in the management of public institutions for the care of insane persons, and the education of those who are deaf and dumb or blind. The republican party is noted for its faithful observance of the old adage, "to the victors, belong the spoils," else it would have lost control of our national government long since, for it is very evident that the influence and money contributed by nearly a hundred thousand appointees of that party constitutes the power which drives the political machinery of radicalism in every important campaign. To bring the matter nearer home, it is only necessary to allude to the appointment of republican directors of our northern prison by the last republican legislature, who in turn undertook to remove the Warden and other employes of that institution before the expiration of the time for which they were appointed, simply because they were democrats. We believe that DEMOCRATS should be selected to fill every position within the appointing power of a democratic legislature, men who are qualified for the several positions, without regard to who asks or who does not ask to be favored. Let qualification and true merit be awarded, rather than the "check" of the lobby, or the claims of chronic office-seekers.

Indiana Patents.

—An Indiana cremation society has been formed with headquarters at Indianapolis. It has a goodly list of members among whom the "Rev." GEORGE HARDING is conspicuous. Mr. W. B. FLETCHER is president. The initiation fee is one dollar, and the yearly dues the same amount. A crematory is to be established at Indianapolis and the bodies of the deceased members will be cremated at an expense not to exceed $3, being the estimated cost of the fuel. The society is receiving a great many members from among the most intelligent people all over the state, showing that cremation has already taken a firm hold upon the thinking classes.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

Miss Vineyard.

The following are a few of the many notices of the press, complimentary to Miss Vineyard, who will entertain the citizens of Auburn at the M. E. church to-morrow (Friday) evening.

Miss Vineyard's redition of Bob-o-link places her a little beyond the range of critic's arrow.—Boston Transcript.

The honors of the evening were conferred on Miss Callie Vineyard, of the Boston School of oratory, her inimitable grace and charming stage presence completely won the audience, while the tumultuous applause that followed her recitation, attested to her merit as a speaker.—Toledo Commercial.

The change of voice displayed by Miss Vineyard in her transition from "Woman's Rights" to "Belshazzar's Feast" is something wonderful.—Detroit Press.

The effect of Miss Vineyard's poetic rendition was wonderful, and among all the gathered thousands,—hundreds of whom had marched without the flinching of a muscle up to the cannon's—there was not an eye that was not wet with tears. Such an effect none but the truest artist could produce, and it has been frequently remarked by those who have had any opportunity for observation that they have never seen its like upon an audience of such vast proportions,—an audience composed almost exclusively of men,—men to whose eyes tears seldom start. Miss Vineyard richly deserves the congratulations that followed and still follow her magnificent effort.—Toledo Sunday Journal.

—Having heard considerable of Mr. I. N. Davis, the Grand Worthy Chief Templar of Indiana, who is now engaged in an effort to induce the people of Indiana to flood the coming Legislature with petitions for such measures as will allow the people to vote upon an amendment to the State constitution, authorizing the enactment of a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the state, or, a local option law, which would prohibit the sale of liquors in localities where a majority of the voters are opposed to it, we laid aside our work and went to the M. E. church last Tuesday evening to hear what he had to say in favor of the proposition named; to which we may have occasion to refer at some future time. We had another object in view when we entered the church, and that was to ascertain who of Auburn's inhabitants were interested in the temperance movement, supposing of course that zeal in the cause would bring out the full strength of that element of society, especially when the lecturer stands at the head of the temperance organization of Indiana. To our surprise found that about forty persons (representing both the sheep and the goats) constituted the audience, and notwithstanding the apology of the speaker for the slim attendance, we were forced to the conclusion that good templarism was below par, or, that those who pretended to advocate the temperance cause are a little off, for some reason not known to an out-sider.

—Syracuse, Kosciusko county, was recently visited by one Capt. Drake, who put up at the hotel, and represented that he was worth $50,000, which he had derived from the sale of a large grist mill in Ohio. After forming some acquaintances he began to inquire after real estate, proposing to invest his money in a good farm. He went to a farmer named Dennis, says the Gazette; and made a contract to take his farm and pay him for it $6,300 in cash. After the contract was made, however, a dispute arose in regard to which of the parties should pay the taxes, and ere this was settled the buyer went to the neighboring house of Mr. Traster under a pretense that he wished to see him. While there he appraised Mr. Traster of the fact that he had made a contract for the farm and was willing to take it if Mr. Dennis would consent to pay the taxes in dispute, and after doing this asked him (Traster) to give him some small bills for a $50 greenback. Traster did not have the requisite small bills and the man saying that he needed some small money to finish the contract, borrowed, for a short time $20 and after thanking his victim very much for the favor, left. The remainder of the story is soon told."

—Schaab, Beugnot & Co. are selling dry goods, clothing and groceries cheaper than any other retail store in Northern Indiana. Below find a few of their prices:

Starch 5c. per pound.
Splendid tea 40c. per lb.
Corn starch 10c. per pound.
Grain pepper 20c. per pound.
Best Coffee A sugar 9¼ cents.
Parlor matches 4 boxes for 25c.
Best Young Hyson tea 80c. per lb.
Best Rio coffee 5 lbs. for 90 cents.

All best prints 6c. per yard, and a splendid print for 5c. per yard. Good canton flannel 16 yards for $1.00. A very heavy canton flannel 11 yards for $1.00. A good red flannel for 20c per yard. Good underclothing at 25c each. All other goods equally low. As they have no rent to pay, they can sell goods ten per cent. cheaper than any of their competitors. tf.

Emma Abbott.

This evening Miss Emma Abbott with the celebrated Hess English Opera Co., will appear at the Academy of Music, in Fort Wayne. Emma Abbott will appear as Marguarete in Faust, the character in which she has the highest praise from press and public in the larger eastern cities. Miss Abbott will have the support of Mrs. Seguin, the contralto, one of the most fascinating and charming singers on the American stage, Mr. Wm. Castle, the great operatic tenor; Mr. Bragau, baritone; Mr. Ryse, basso; Miss Girard and others. The opera will be given with the complete chorus and orchestra just as it is presented in the largest cities. The price of reserved seats will be $1.

By order of W. M.
B. D. Harris, Sec'y.

To the People who Sing.

The musical convention to be held here under the direction of Prof. B. W. Straub, promises to be largely attended. The work to be elementary, but will be confined to the study of music of a classical character. The opportunity to do such work occurs rarely, and people who sing cannot afford to let it pass. An effort will be made to effect a permanent organization, to meet once each year somewhere in the county, to hold a three or four days convention, under the management of a first-class conductor. The project, we believe, will command the hearty approval of all who care to see the standard of music elevated in this part of Indiana.

For any information respecting the work, write for circular, addressing,

M. Seiler,
Bruce Miller, } Auburn, Ind.

Elocutionary Entertainment.

A grand entertainment at the M. E. church, Auburn, on Friday evening, December 13th, by Miss Vineyard, of Toledo, O. All who have heard Miss Vineyard, pronounce her public entertainments a grand success. It is to be hoped that all our people will turn out and enjoy this rare intellectual treat, as the attendance fee is placed at the small sum of 25 cents for adults, and 15 cents for children. Many will doubtless remember the brief and charming display of her oratorial powers at the residence of Dr. Ford sometime since, at a session of the Presbyterian social. No reserved seats. Door open at 7 o'clock, entertainment at 7:45. 2w

—Auburn has another new firm in the grain trade. Messrs. Mulcay & McClellan have formed a copartnership for the purpose of handling all kinds of grain. See notice in another column. Mr. Mulcay and Mr. Bob McClellan are both wide awake young men, well known in this vicinity for their business qualifications. Their facilities for handling grain are excellent, and they will pay prices that will insure them a big trade. Office at the Saginaw depot. Give them a call before you sell your grain.

To Farmers.

We want all the wheat there is to be bought. We can and will pay the highest price. As to weights the Saginaw elevator scales give the best satisfaction of any in the country. Bring your wheat to the Fort Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw Elevator.

St. Joe.

—John Somers, of Auburn, was in town last Friday.

—Dr. C. H. Woodcox, of Bethel, Mich., paid us a visit on wednesday.

—Corbin still holbs Jake's castle, notwithstanding Jake has his hosts arrayed against him. Hold the fort, old man, it wont be long.

—O. H's. fence boards are like the Irishman's flea—dont know where to put his hand on them.

—St. Joe, if reports are true, will have her share of saw mills in the near future. Mr. Young will have one in running order within six weeks, while other parties north of Auburn are about to locate here.

—A series of meetings commenced here last Sunday, which will continue during the week and longer if any success attends the effort. The meeting is conducted by Rev. Hartman, of Hicksville, O., of the United Brethren church.

—J. D. Mart done a little trading the other day which is not likely to turn out very profitable for Jake. Be sure the next time you trade sight unseen that every man you meet is honest to the core. Come in and see Jake, he can give you the particulars without swearing.

—Those boys that stole Chris' traps will be very likely to keep their hands off of property that belongs to other parties. Other things than traps have been stolen within the last few months, and people are on the watch. Be honest, boys.

—Jake thinks that knocking a man down and taking his money is more honorable than to misrepresent when it is done for the sole purpose of fraud.

THE CHILDREN.

BY PAUL HAYNE.

The children! ah the children!
Your innocent, joyous ones;
Your daughters, with souls of sunshine;
Your buoyant and laughing sons,

Look long in their happy faces,
Drink love from their sparkling eyes,
For the wonderful charm of childhood,
How soon it withers and dies!

A few fast-vanishing summers,
A season or twain of frost,
And you suddenly ask, bewildered,
"What is it my heart hath lost?"

Perchance you see by the hearth-stone
Some Juno, stately and proud,
Or a Hebe, whose softly umbushed eyes
Flash out from the golden cloud

Of lavish and beautiful tresses
That, wantonly floating, stray
Over the white of a throat and bosom
More fair than blossoms in May.

And perchance you mark their brothers,
Young heroes who spurn the sod,
With the fervor of antique knighthood,
And the air of a Grecian god.

But where, ah! where are the children,
Your household fairies of yore?
Alack! they are dead, and their grace has fled
Forever and evermore!

THE TWO ROBERTS.

Singing softly to himself, Robert Edbury rode "over dale and over down" in the sweet stillness of the July night. Hardly a breath of air was stirring in the branches of the trees. Now and then an invisible night bird piped a solitary note to keep him company, and soft waves of light streamed over the hills as the queenly moon, well attended by her guards, rode indolently down the broad highway of heaven. The blue dome, looking soft as velvet, was, like the fabled path of love, strewn thickly with the golden kisses of the stars.

As he gained the last hill, whose summit gazed on the little watering place which was for a few weeks to be his destination, he involuntarily drew rein and sat silent a moment, enjoying the moonlight scene. On his left an old-fashioned brick house reared its twisted chimneys aloft. So close was he to it that its sharp gables seemed to cut the air over his head, and only a strip of green lawn, bordered by horse-chestnut trees, separated him from the windows, gleaming in the moonlight.

Scepter and crown I'd fling them down,
If I might—

Robert Edbury hushed his song when he perceived, for the first time, his very close proximity to the house and the windows.

"The substantial home of some substantial farmer," he said to himself. "I had better move on, or his daughters may think I am serenading them."

Too late! Just then a window was opened softly overhead, and a lady's face appeared at it. In the rush of bright moonlight Robert caught sight of the long ripple of gold-gleaming hair, and was sure that the face was lovely. At any rate, the voice was.

"Robert, dear, is it you?"

For half a minute Robert Edbury was mute with surprise, and made no answer.

"It is you, Robert? Why don't you speak?"

He spoke, then, low, and with hesitation.

"How did you know it was I?"

"Of course I knew it was you." There was a dash of petulance in the sweet voice now. "Who else but you would be riding and singing in that absurd way at this hour of the night, and halting before the house? Have you a cold, Robert? Your voice sounds different from what it usually does."

"Perhaps it is the night air," answered Robert, wickedly, and getting his wits partially together. "Or I may have cracked it with singing." But still he spoke in the most subdued of tones. "I did not expect the pleasure of speaking with you."

"The very idea of your coming up on horseback at this night hour! You know you ought not to be out. Why did you do it? Where are you going? To Spafield?"

"To be sure."

"But what for?"

"To see a friend."

"Who is it?" came the quick response. "Not—not Nelly Cameron?"—with a shade of jealousy in the tone now. "Are the Camerons receiving this evening?"

"Not that I know of," returned Robert Edbury, promptly. "I swear to you I was not going to see Nelly Cameron. I have not spoken with a single young lady to-day, except yourself."

"Poor Robert," and a little laugh rippled lightly on the air. "But do go. You know what your health is, and that you have no business to be riding at this time of night. You ought to take better care of yourself. You will be laid up to-morrow; your voice already sounds strange and altered. Good-night."

"One moment," cried Robert Edbury, earnestly, as he leaped from his horse, fastened the bridle to the gate, and stepped inside beneath the window, where gleamed that mysterious, enchanting face. "Won't you give me a flower—you can easily reach that clustering vine by your casement. Perhaps—perhaps I shall wish to ask you some time to forgive me some great offense. Won't you give me a flower for a token?"

"How strangely you talk! Of course I would give you a flower; but these are only honeysuckles, and you know we promised to give each other nothing but roses. But, stay!"—the pretty voice caught itself. "I have a bunch of violets on my table. Would you like them?"

"Anything—anything that comes from your hands!" whispered Robert, more sincerely than he always spoke.

The bright face disappeared a moment from the window and then returned—a white hand gleamed in the moonlight.

"There, take them, and now you must go! Quick! I hear some one stirring. Suppose it should be mamma! Good-night, dear Robert."

The window was softly closed, and in an instant after Robert was groping for the violets in the wet grass. He found them where they fell. But, as they were falling, the quick eyes of Robert Edbury had discerned something, bright as a star, falling, too. The small strip of grass where he had stood was entirely in the shade, hidden from the light by the large horse-chestnut trees, and he had to grope in the dark for this glittering thing. An instant's search revealed it to be what he suspected—a lady's bracelet. It was a slender circlet of gold, studded with crystal. The quick movement had unclasped it from her arm; and Robert, with a smile, put it side by side with the withered bunch of violets in his pocket as he rode away.

Scepter and crown I'd fling them down, sang Mr. Edbury, as he rode swiftly on in the purple dusk of the trees. "Scepter and crown, if I had them, I'd fling them down for the one bare chance of hearing that lovely voice once again."

He was alone; there was no one to see him; and, taking the violets out of his pocket, he kissed them tenderly. It was most absurdly silly of him to do it; but who of us does not do silly things in the heyday of our youth's morning? Silly things that we blush for afterward, perhaps; just as Robert Edbury blushed when putting the violets again quickly away.

Scepter and crown I'd fling them down,
If I might—

But his song got no further than that; it died away in thought.

Passing, arm-in-arm, down the crowded dancing-room of the Spa the next evening, with his friend Norton, Robert Edbury's quick ear was caught by a note which at once arrested his attention. He had said that he should know that divine voice again, hear it wherever and whenever he might, and he was not mistaken. A certain remonstrance lay in its tone; not to say misbelief.

"But who could it have been, Robert, if it was not you? It frightens me to think of it. It—it was somebody of your height and figure. It must have been yourself, Robert."

"But I tell you it was not, Jessie. I should like to know who it was."

"He was a gentleman, I am sure"—with a stress upon the word. "You need not be put out, Robert."

Robert Edbury turned and saw, close beside him, leaning on that other Robert's arm, a young girl surpassingly beautiful. Roses mingled with the bright gold of her hair, shone in the bosom of her dress, and a bunch of them was somehow intertwined with the slender gold wrist-chain attached to her fan.

Mr. Edbury caught his breath, as, turning her face, the girl's soft, violet-blue eyes rested for a moment unrecognizingly on his.

"Who is she?" he whispered eagerly to his friend. "How lovely she is! What is her name! By heaven! I never believed in divine loveliness before; but here it is, pure and undefiled. What is her name?"

"It is Miss Chassdane," was the answer. "She and her mother live at the Grove, half a mile out of town."

"A farm-house," remarked Robert.

"No, it is not. It looks not unlike one. They are people of property. Yes, she is very pretty. I'll introduce you if you like."

Half an hour later Robert Edbury was bending over the young lady's hand in the pretty secluded gloom of a vine-wreathed window. They were as much alone as it is possible for one to be in the heart of a busy, unheeding crowd. The first notes of a Strauss waltz were beckoning the dancers, and gay couples went laughing, hurrying by.

"You are not engaged for this waltz?" said Robert, eagerly.

Some remembered cadence of his voice struck the young girl's memory, and, forgetting to answer him, she looked at him doubtfully, while a rosy blush swept over her forehead. She half knew him and half did not.

"Will you let me look at your card?" he pursued, as, with perfect courtesy in his voice and manner, he took the bit of gilt and enameled pasteboard which she had tucked away amid the roses at her wrist.

"I—I half promised this dance to Robert," she stammered, flinging a quick glance over her shoulder into the swaying crowd.

"Then I shall claim it," answered the other Robert, with an audacious smile. He stooped and picked up a rosebud that had fallen, and then held it triumphantly before the flushed and startled face by his side.

"See!" he said, gayly; "I saved it from being crushed under foot. Will you not give it to me?"

But she reached out her hand impulsively. "I—I never give roses to strangers," she replied, with a cold, frightened, angry air. "They are Mr. Robert Stonor's roses. Give it back to me, if you please."

"My name is Robert, too," he said, in the same gayly tender voice, though his dark face changed a little at her frank confession. "My name is Robert, too, Miss Chassdane. Therefore, may I not claim the rose?"

The soft blue eyes, filled with tears, flew up and met his. She knew him then. Frightened and ashamed, and trembling from head to foot, she rose impulsively to her feet. He took a step backward, and they stood so, facing each other a moment in the gay, unheeding crowd.

"I know you now," gasped Jessie. "How dare you speak to me again—you are very presuming, sir. I will not bear it. Give me back my flower and leave me."

"Nay," he said, gently, but in the tone of a master, "is there cause for anger?" And in a low, reasoning, persuasive voice he spoke to her for some moments, and the rising spirit was calmed. In spite of herself and against her will she was becoming irresistibly attracted to this man.

"Give me this one waltz, Miss Chassdane, and then I will give you back your rose. It will be a fair exchange. But mind what I tell you, as sure as there is a heaven above us the day is coming when you will offer me a rose unasked. Come!"

The old rose-red flush drifted over the young girl's face; his words, and, more than all, his manner, impressed her as he meant they should. He stood, with proffered arm, courteously still beside her, and, though protesting inwardly with all her might that she would not dance, she gave him her hand, and in another moment they were floating deliciously together to the strains of the seductive music.

When it was over, Robert led her to her seat near some friends; her mother had not gone to the rooms that night. She looked very pale. The pretty rose color had all died out of the sweet, round cheeks.

"Are you faint?" he asked anxiously, bending over her. "Are you tired? Shall I get you some water?"

"No, no!" she cried, shrinking away from him. "I am not faint—but look at Mr. Robert Stonor. I have offended him. He is angry because I danced with you. Oh, what shall I do? He is my cousin, and has ill-health, and he must not be excited."

Robert Edbury turned, and saw standing near him that other Robert, who threatened to be—or perhaps was—no mean rival. His ill-health was evident. One hand was pressed to his side as if to still some pain there, and on his handsome blonde face, which was marked by unmistakable traces of confirmed sickness, a cloud of jealous anger rested heavily.

The eyes of the two men met, and each knew the other for a rival.

A half smile of scorn as he looked curled Robert Edbury's lips. In a case like this a man has no pity for the ailments of another. With a grave face he took from his pocket the rosebud and laid it in Miss Chassdane's lap.

"Here is your rose," he said, quietly. "I restore it to you at your wish. But remember what I said; and, believe me, time will prove me to be no false prophet."

Without waiting for an answer, he bowed and disappeared amid the throng of dancers, seeking her no more that night.

"Is Miss Chassdane engaged to that man?" he questioned of his friend Norton.

"I believe there is no positive engagement," was the reply. "Mrs. Chassdane, it is said, objects to it."

"On what score does she object? Money?"

"Oh no, Stonor has a small, compact estate close by, and is well off. On the score of his uncertain health. Also, they are cousins."

"What is it that is the matter with him?"

"Some complication, connected with both the lungs and the heart, which, I conclude, renders treatment difficult."

"Do you think Miss Chassdane cares for him?"

"I don't think she loves him, Edbury—if that's what you mean. It seems to me that she likes him more as a brother. When eligible attentions are paid to girls, they feel flattered, you know, and respond accordingly. Nine out of ten of them understand nothing of their own feelings, and mistake friendship for love. Robert Stonor and Miss Chassdane have grown up together—have been like brother and sister."

Frequently they met after that. It was an unusually gay season at Spafield, and entertainments abounded accordingly. In the morning drinking the water, or making believe to drink it; in the afternoon sauntering in the gardens, or on the parade; in the evening at the rooms, or at private parties; two or three times did Mr. Edbury and Miss Chassdane meet, and linger together, and converse with each other. Robert Edbury's time was his own, and he stayed on. He could have stayed forever. The two or three weeks sojourn he had intended had more than doubled itself. For he had learned to love her passionately; and all the world might see it for aught he cared. She, too, might see it, if she chose; but whether she did or not he could not tell, judging from the grave and sweet dignity with which she met and bore back his eager attentions.

At length there came an evening when he was determined to put his fate to the test; to go on in this uncertainty was worse than torment. They had not been much disturbed by Robert Stonor; a paroxysm of his complaint had confined that gentleman to his own home.

And so Robert Edbury went up to the old gabled house, before which his horse had halted that first night, and sought an interview with Miss Chassdane. She was quite alone. The long French window by which she sat was flung wide open, and the low red sunlight, streaming in over her, lighted up her fair, gold hair and the roses in her dress.

"How beautiful she is!" he thought, as he took her hand in his. "What if I should not win her after all? But I will make a hard fight for it."

Jessie looked up inquiringly into his face. "You are very silent," she said; and then, catching the earnest look in his eyes, she blushed violently and drew away her hand.

"I love you," he passionately broke forth in a low, tremulous tone, breaking his emotional silence. "I have come to you this evening to risk my fate by saying this, to win or lose all. Jessie, you must know how I love you; how I have loved you all along, from that very first night that I spoke to you, neither of us knowing the other. Will you not give me some hope of love in return? Do not send me from you an utterly broken and discouraged man!"

Jessie was silent for a moment—one long, cruel moment to Robert Edbury—then the small, sweet face was turned to him with gentle dignity. He knew his doom beforehand, ere she spoke the words.

"You must know how useless it was to speak to me of this," she said. "You knew, surely you must have known, that I was engaged to my cousin, Robert Stonor."

"Engaged to him?"

"Yes. We are engaged."

Neither spoke for a time. The scent of the flowers, blooming in the lonely grounds on this side of the house, away from the dusty and busy highway, seemed to mock them with its sweetness; the clustering shrubs and trees waved gently in the summer evening breeze.

He could not speak at once; the sense of his bitter loss was too great. The setting sun streamed in upon him, lighting up his distressed face. It seemed to him that the great old-fashioned clock in the hall ticked out the jeering words:

"Lost! Lost!! Lost!!!"

"Engaged!" he said, at length, with a long-drawn breath. "I did not know it. But engagements, where no love is, have been broken many times before now!"

"Hush!" cried Jessie. "Do not speak like that again. It would kill him! You do not know what you are saying."

"Kill him?"

"If he heard it, I meant. He says he trusts me."

"And you are sacrificing yourself for him—for a fancy! Hear the truth, Jessie. You care not for Mr. Stonor except as a cousin or a brother. Examine your own heart, and it will tell you that you do not. You care for me. You love me. Many a half word, a half look has betrayed it to me. Yes, my darling, it is Robert Edbury you have learned to love, not Robert Stonor. Your blushes, my love, are betraying it now. You—"

"What was that?" shrieked Jessie.

A low, smothered sound, half groan, half cry, had come in from the open window. It was so full of pain that a man would not care to hear it twice in a lifetime. Before either could rush out, Robert Stonor stood at the opening.

It was a figure never to be forgotten. His handsome, fair face was distorted with either pain or anger; his pale lips trembled; his left hand was pressed, with the old familiar gesture upon his heart.

"False, false that you are!" broke at length from his bloodless lips, as he seized Jessie with his right hand. "You told me you did not care for Robert Edbury! You told me—"

A pause, a stagger, and, with a frightful shiver, he fell on the carpet. Robert Edbury broke the fall partially, but not quick enough to quite save him from it. Jessie flew from the room for assistance.

"Robert Stonor here!" cried the bewildered Mrs. Chassdane. "I thought he was confined to his chamber at home."

He had been confined to his chamber; but, alas! he had crept out of it that evening, and come up to the house to see Jessie. With the fond hope of surprising her in the usual evening-room, he had gone round the shrubbery, intending to enter by the window, and had heard all.

On the floor, there as as he lay, his head raised on a cushion by the hands of Robert Edbury, he died. The medical men said he could not, in any case, have lived many months, if weeks, but that the agitation had killed him.

It was many long days after that, when she had risen from the sick-bed to which this shock of sudden death had brought her, that Robert Edbury came to say farewell to Miss Chassdane.

The interview was brief, studiedly brief, for, with the shadow of that dead man lying between them, speech was difficult to both.

"Good-by," she cried, reaching out to him an attenuated hand. "I hope you may find happiness and peace!"

"But we shall meet again," cried Robert, eagerly. "Surely—surely—some time in the future I may come to you."

"Hush!" she cried, the tears rolling piteously down her cheeks. "You must not speak of that. Robert's shadow would always come between us, as he fell down there on the floor. We killed him! We killed him!" and she wrung her pale hands together in strong excitement.

"Stop!" cried Robert Edbury, quite sternly. "You are taking an altogether mistaken view of the truth. Ask your mother; ask any one. But you are weak and ill yet, Jessie, and the time has not come for me to insist on this. Let us think of him, poor fellow, as one who must, had he lived, have suffered much, and who has mercifully found peace in the rest of death."

He stood for a moment looking with a fond longing into the small, sweet face from which the summer roses had fled with grudging haste. Then, taking from his pocket a fragile gold and crystal circlet, he held it out to her. It was the bracelet she lost that first night of their meeting.

"I found it under your window the night with the violets," he said. "It fell from your arm. Will you take it back now?"

"No!" she answered, looking into his dark face with tender, gentle wistfulness, "I—I don't want to recall that night, or anything connected with it. You may keep it if you like."

So he kissed her hand and said farewell. But he left a whisper behind him.

"When the roses bloom again, remember me."

A year went by, and no message came. The second year he said to himself: "Surely she will send for me now!" But May and June crept by, and July came; but not one word came from Jessie Chassdane. He was growing sick with a wild and helpless despair, for he felt how worse than useless it would be to go, uncalled; when one day a letter came fluttering like a white bird to his heart.

Removal of the Entire Scalp by Machinery.

At a recent meeting of the New York Pathological Society, reported in the New York Medical Journal, Dr. Finnel presented, on behalf of a candidate, the entire scalp of a woman 28 years of age. While visiting an oleomargarine factory, she stooped down to examine some of the processes. Behind her head was a revolving shaft, and in some manner her long hair became wound round the shaft. The rapidity of the shaft was such that the whole scalp was torn off without giving sufficient pain to draw her attention to the condition of her head. Following the injury, there was no shock and no pain. On examining the head, the denuded surface was seen to extend from the base of the occiput to the left eyebrow. The eyebrow was gone, and the left ear was so much injured as to hang down by a strip of skin.

The scalp measured twenty-four inches in circumference, and was attached to the hair thirty-two inches long. It was at first proposed to apply the scalp, but, on examining, there was noticed such an amount of grease adhering to the raw surface that any effort at union was thought to be useless.

Dr. Finnel said it was the intention to tan the scalp, and thus allow the patient to use her natural hair, but not in the natural way.

Dr. Abbe referred to a similar case which occurred four years ago, and was under treatment in St. Luke's Hospital. The amount of scalp removed was nearly identical with that presented, and the manner in which it was done was similar. Three months after the injury, granulation extended over the denuded cranium. It was found, in the use of grafts, that only those were successful that were placed within an inch from the cicatricial margins. The grafts were the size of canary seed, and, during the four years that the process of cicatrization continued, about 12,000 were used.

Dr. J. C. Peters referred to the case of a waiter at a club-house, who was scalped by a falling mirror. The scalp was separated into two flaps, which were attached at their base. These were brought into position, and, within a few days, union took place.—Scientific American.

A Blind Sculptor.

One of the most remarkable phenomena in artistic life is the history of the blind French sculptor, Vidal. He was suddenly struck incurably blind at 21 years of age. He had previously passed his life among artists, and he was devoted to sculpture, in which he had already given proofs of superior genius. When this calamity came upon him he was for a time dismayed. Recovering courage, he determined to pursue his favorite studies. From 1855 to 1875 he has exhibited his works, and has received several medals. His preference is for animal subjects. The French Government has purchased several of his works for the national galleries. Vidal works during the day, but he prefers the night, owing to its quietude and his freedom from interruption. On one occasion he met a friend on the Boulevards, about 10 o'clock at night, and invited him to his studio, to which he conducted him as easily as if he had not lost his sight. On arriving there, he sat down with perfect complacency to his labors, forgetful that his friend was involved in darkness. He kindled a light for the benefit of his guest, and then recommenced his work. In reply to the inquiries of his friend, he said that through his sense of touch he could follow the lines that figured the external proportions, and trace the dimensions of the subject. A hunter dog was brought to him. He passed his hand over it in every direction until he had got a correct idea of its shape and size. Having impressed its proportions on his memory, he modeled the animal to perfection in clay, size, shape, expression and all. He is not only an artist himself, but he is also an excellent judge of the works of others. A friend who accompanied him through the Exhibition of 1875 was startled at the correctness of his judgment, particularly on busts, his impressions being derived entirely from his fine sense of touch. He has made an admirable likeness of himself in medallion form. He loves to frequent the theater. His sense is so acute that no critic can surpass him in his judgment of the comparative excellence of the singers and actors. He seems to be endowed with a perspicacity of acumen that few possess, and which he admits that, prior to his blindness, he was not conscious of. He rarely goes out to walk except in cloudy weather. The bright sunlight dazes him. He discerns immediately the vicinity of a wall, a lamp-post, a tree, or other obstacle. For the most part he walks with a steady and sure tread. Like the blind generally, he is gay and festive in temper. He is never happier than when at home working in thick gloom in his studio. "Thus far," he said to a friend, "I know only the external night; long may it be before I shall know the inner night that envelopes the soul in utter darkness."—J. W. Forney's "Progress."

The Oldest Married Couple.

A Gallipolis correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette thus calls attention to two very interesting relics of the last century:

There is probably now in the Gallia County Infirmary the oldest married couple in the United States—namely, William J. Davis and Lucy Ann Davis, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania, the old gent being born on November 30, 1771, and the old lady on February 19, 1778, both being over 100 years old. They each have been married twice before. He is living with his third wife and she with her third husband. They have been living together forty-three years, or nearly half a century. They are both hale and hearty, and bid fair to live for twenty years yet. The old man is a little deaf, and, with that exception, they are both in possession of their full faculties. The old lady even reads without the aid of glasses. On Sunday, Nov. 10, they walked two miles to call on a friend, and were little fatigued by the exertion. Four years ago they walked from here to Jackson, a distance of thirty-two miles, in two days.

The old man has never been sick a day in his life, and, as yet, has never taken a dose of medicine. He is addicted to the use of tobacco, but his teeth are in a remarkable state of preservation.

The above is a positive fact, and can be substantiated. We challenge any State in the Union to produce their equal.

IN live stock, Georgia was $970,606 richer in 1877 than in 1876; in farming and mechanical tools, $438,851, and in bonds and stocks, $1,454,062. Population has slightly increased, in spite of the steady drain of the Texas emigration fever; whereas in 1876 there were in the State 204,507 men who paid poll-tax last year there were 207,815.

SABBATH READING.

Our Lost.

They never quite leave us, the friends who have passed
Through the shadows of death to the sunlight above;
A thousand sweet memories are holding them fast
To the places they blessed with their presence and love.

The work which they left and the books which they read
Speak mutely, though still with an eloquence rare,
And the songs that they sung, and dear words that they said,
Still linger and sigh on the desolate air.

And oft when alone, and as oft in the throng,
Or when evil allures us, or sin draweth nigh,
A whisper comes gently, "Nay, do not the wrong,"
And we feel that our weakness is pitied on high.

In the dew-threaded morn and the opaline eve,
When the children are merry or crimsoned with sleep,
We are comforted, even as lonely we grieve,
For the thought of their rapture forbids us to weep.

We toil at our task in the burden and heat
Of life's passionate noon. They are folded in peace.
It is well. We rejoice that their heaven is sweet,
And one day for us all the bitter will cease.

We, too, will go home o'er the river of rest
As the strong and the lovely before us have gone.
Our sun will go down in the beautiful west,
To rise in the glory that circles the throne.

Until then we are bound by our love and our faith
To the saints who are walking in Paradise fair;
They have passed beyond sight, at the touching of death,
But they live like ourselves, in God's infinite care.
—Margaret E. Sangster, in the Methodist.

At the point where ordinary faith and effort stop exhausted and in despair, love becomes glorified and hopes on. Of all the praying souls of the human race, there are a crowned few whose patient waiting on God touches the sublime of prophetic trust. To that number belongs the devoted mother.

One such mother, living in Boston, had a son who early broke away from the restraints of home and began a career of dissipation. With this single exception the woman was blessed in her children. Her whole heart, however, went out after the prodigal.

For years she prayed for him, nursed him tenderly when he was sick and disabled by his excesses, and believed that her love would win him at last, but he remained incorrigible.

All the sad hours, the wakeful nights, she spent in weeping and wrestling in secret for that ingrate son she never told; but, when her heart was nigh to breaking, a change came. Then followed a sense of the infinite greatness and loving kindness of Him with whom all things are possible that filled her with a strange peace. She could not reform her erring child, but God could.

One day another son, a clergyman from the West, came home to visit her, and, after a trying scene in the house with his intoxicated brother, he said to her, "Mother, how do you, how can you, endure this?"

"I have endured it a great while," she said, calmly. "The trouble lay on my heart till I found that it was worrying me to death. Then I said, 'Oh Lord, my Lord, I cannot bear it any longer! Take care of my son, reform him, bless him, save him!' and I rested the case there. I do not worry any more. I have left him in the hands of God."

The next day this elder son, finding his dissipated brother at a sober moment, said to him, "John, your position is a critical one now—fearfully so. There'll soon be a change for better or worse."

"What's the matter? Anything new?"

"Mother has left you in God's hands, she says. She doesn't pray for you any more."

The young man went away uneasy and thoughtful. For the first time he felt himself alone with the Almighty, and his conscience was stirred. "I cannot contend with God," he said. "I will drink no more."

He reformed, became a lawyer, and went to live in the city of St. Louis. There, at a complimentary banquet, he offended his new friends by refusing champagne. He told them the story of his mother, all the history of his former degradation and rescue, and then said, "Shall I drink?" and with one voice they all cried, "No!"

An eloquent preacher narrated the above in a recent sermon on the words, "Fret not thyself." The calm, victorious, surrendering trust of that praying mother was one of his strongest illustrations.

The Lamp and the Light-House.

A Scotch fisherman, while out one night in his smack, was overtaken by a terrible storm. He could not tell where he was, or how to find his way to the landing-place. At length, his son caught sight of a small light glimmering through the wild darkness. He set sail toward the light, and soon found himself right before his own cottage, which stood on a cliff above the sea.

When he got home, he found that his little boy had set the lamp in an upper window, by whose light both father and brother had been saved from shipwreck.

Every stormy night afterward that same lamp was set in the window to guide other fishermen who might be caught out in the thick darkness. By-and-by it was determined to build a light-house on the cliff. But the big blazing burner grew out of the little boy's lamp.

A poor child in Philadelphia, the daughter of a very poor widow, died a year or two ago. During her long sickness, her heart was full of peace and

Just before she died, she put into the hands of her minister, Rev. Mr. M., a small paper box that had contained some of her medicine. In the box were fifty c-cent pieces, which she had been saving up for a long time, and she had earned each piece by hard work. She said to her minister:

"After I am dead, I want you to take this money and build with it a church for the poor people in the neighborhood."

The minister could not keep back his tears as the box was given to him; and I could not, either, when I saw it last summer.

Mr. M. took the box of coins and showed it to a rich lumber-merchant, who never cared anything about religion. The merchant at once offered to give lumber for building the church. Other people who saw the box and heard its touching history gave money; and very soon the pretty mission-church will be finished. The poor Christian child's lamp will grow into a large light-house to guide many souls to heaven.

No person can tell how much good may come from loving, yet apparently insignificant, acts. The lamp they light, even if it is small, may grow into a light-house, and shine long after they are dead.—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler.

The Poor Old Man.

He seemed at first glance to be a poor old man—one of those you read of now and then as wandering up and down the world, and patiently waiting for the summons from the other shore. But, when one came to see the feathers in his hair, the straw in his whiskers, and the dirt on his face and hands, one could not resist the conclusion that he was waiting the summons to stand up and be known as the boss vagrant of Detroit. He had heard how the old janitor opened his purse to the poor and unfortunate, and he walked up and down in front of the station, and took great pains to shiver and make out that he was suffering for the want of raiment. When he had played that line, he halted and mournfully sang:

I'm only a poor old man,
And nobody cares for me;
I wish I could die and go to the sky,
And——

Here Bijah came to the door and invited him in, and he ceased his song to wipe his red eyes and reply:

"May be the angels bless you for your kindness to one who has not long to stay on earth."

When he had been seated in the reception-room, Bijah looked him over and kindly asked:

"Old man, are you sorrowful?"

"Very—very sorrowful, and I've got a lame back, besides," was the reply.

"And nobody seems to care for you, he?"

"No, nobody. I'm a poor old man, without a friend on earth."

"I will be your friend," observed Bijah, after looking him over again.

"Will you? Thank Heaven! Oh, how my heart swells up!"

"Yes; I will be your friend. I will cut off your whiskers and hair, furnish you with water and soap, and in an hour from this you'll feel like a 2-year-old colt turned loose under a swarm of bees!"

"You'll cut off my whiskers?" shrieked the old man.

"Yes, I will."

"And wash me with common bar-soap?"

"The same—the very same."

"No you won't—I'll die first!" shouted the old man, as he made for the door.

Bijah intercepted him, placed him in a chair, and, by means of certain words and gestures, prevailed upon him to remain there while he hunted up the shears. The old man begged and entreated, but two clips of the shears removed whiskers and straw from his chin.

"Kill me if you wish, but don't cut my hair," begged the victim, as the shears passed his ears.

"This is only the beginning of the end," was the solemn answer, and a handful of feathers, hairs, burrs, straws and autumn-leaves slid down his back to the floor. In five minutes he hadn't hair enough on his head to build one end of a canary's nest, and, instead of looking to be 70 years of age and ready to become an angel, he seemed a fat, healthy vagrant of about 45 and ready for a free lunch.

"It doesn't make any difference whether you spell soap with a big 'S' or a little one," said Bijah, as he put up the shears; "it's the medicine to help your case."

"Oh, great guns! great guns!" groaned the vag, "I don't care how soon I die."

He was conducted to the bath-room, locked in for half an hour, and when Bijah looked in he fell back in amazement, and cried out:

"Are you the same man?"

"The same; and now let me go out and be run over and killed!" grunted the old chap.

He was clean. He looked white. He had used up half a bar of soap and a barrel of water, and he couldn't play the old-man business again for a year. Bijah had intended to present him with an old hat and four paper collars, but he suddenly rushed out of doors, leaped into the rear of a farmer's wagon, and never ceased shaking his fist at the station-house till he was out of sight.—Detroit Free Press.

Judicious Advertising.

Reforms of all kinds seem to be in fashion.

The reaction from the craze of speculation and inflation and politics and low moral standing, brings with it application of good sense and economy, of better morals and higher tone, and soberer views of things in nearly all departments of life. One of the outcroppings of this new fashion of common sense is in the business of advertising—a lopping off of the more expensive and sensational and vulgar modes of putting the things to sell before the attention of the person who buys. The reform was well-voiced at a late meeting of the stove manufacturers, where the President denounced the ineffective and expensive advertising that has been much indulged in by the trade, the tawdry lithographs and other sensational machinery, and recommended instead the more exclusive use of the best newspapers. "If we would make the best possible use of our money," he continued, "we should patronize ably-conducted and responsible newspapers. The newspaper is immeasurably the best medium open to our trade; the most liberal and expert advertisers testify to its value, and in the employment of its columns we would find a means of escape from wasteful, undignified and ineffective methods to which so many resort in their eagerness to secure attention and patronage." These are, indeed, suggestions of experience and common instinct that are being adopted by merchants, manufacturers and other classes of the community having occasion to engage in purchasing or selling.

Old and well-established papers, with constituencies representing the best classes of society, are undoubtedly the most availing, the cheapest, and the most remunerative avenues of advertising. The constituency of a newspaper, the character, the consuming quality, the taste and the variety of its readers, their respect for it, and the fidelity with which they and their family read it, are facts to be considered quite as much as the mere amount of gross circulation. Then, again, as advertisers cannot use all the newspapers, there is the question of selection, and into this enters the extent and completeness with which one or more newspapers occupy a certain field, and render unnecessary the use of its local rivals. On all these points there is a field of discriminating intelligence by advertisers who would get the worth of their money, and the conclusions of the stove men are evidently reflecting the thought and action of other classes of advertisers throughout the country. —Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

The Wicked Little Boy.

A little girl, whose parents lived on Beacon street, gave a children's party one day last week, and, as no pains were spared to make the "party" portion of the entertainment go off with eclat, the choicest confectionery was prettily arranged at the plate of each little guest, besides a liberal allowance of cakes and ice-cream. Fancy the horror of the small hostess and her mamma when, just before supper was announced, the enfant terrible of the house dances into the drawing-room and informs the company that he has been into the dining-room and licked every piece of candy on the table. "So now nobody will want any, you know!"

THE site of Portchester, N. Y., reputed to be worth $5,000,000 or $10,000,000, is to be contested in the courts by the heirs of Roger Merritt, a Revolutionary soldier.

A Problem Long Since Solved.

How to remedy those prolific causes of disease, an impoverished circulation and an impaired digestion, was a problem the solution of which had often baffled medical skill, but which was solved over a quarter of a century ago by the introduction of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters to public and professional notice. Since that time, which may well be said to have initiated a new epoch in the history of medicine, the remedy and preventive referred to has obtained a foothold in the confidence of the American people that each succeeding year has only served to strengthen. It is recognized throughout the Union as a tonic of the first order, a remedy for and sure means of preventing fever and ague, and disorders of the stomach and bowels; as a reliable means of reforming a disordered state of the liver, and of counteracting a tendency to rheumatism, gout, urinary and uterine disorders.

Stop Drinking Vinegar.

How many young women who have inherited a predisposition to embonpoint have ruined their health by drinking vinegar to reduce their forms to graceful proportions. Allan's Anti-Fat is absolutely harmless. It promotes digestion, and accomplishes its work simply by preventing an undue assimilation of the fatty ingredients of the food. Excessive fatness is a vexatious burden, and there is no longer any excuse for enduring it, since Allan's Anti-Fat is an effectual remedy for this abnormal condition.

Who Wrote It?

The question is, who wrote "The Little Belle of Bloomingdale," the realistic story of New York Revolutionary life now running in the CHRISTIAN UNION, of New York? We are told it is by one of the most eminent of American writers, and that we have six months to guess it in.

GOD has given us medicine to cure ourselves when sick, but the knowledge of their combinations is a mystery to most of us. That dreaded of all diseases, Heart disease, has defied nearly all remedies, but we are happy to be able to inform you that in Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR you have a certain cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold, and people are ready to testify to its beneficial results. There are some really wonderful cases of recovery from what seemed immediate death, and they have gladly given these testimonials, hoping they might be the means of benefiting others.

Among the many forms of Heart disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc.

The HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

A SPEEDY QUIETUS is given to a hacking cough by that inestimable specific for pulmonary, throat and bronchial complaints, HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, which cures consumption, bronchitis, pneumonia, pleurisy, labored breathing and other disorders of the respiratory organs. When a cough manifests itself, the early use of this beneficent medicine is earnestly recommended, as the difficulty is more easily overcome in its incipient stage than later on. Sold by all Druggists.

A GENTLEMAN afflicted with the chronic rheumatism says: "No description of my case can convey the vast amount of benefit I have received from the use of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. I believe it is the best article in the world for rheumatism."

THE season has arrived when everybody who own horses, cattle, sheep, hogs and fowl should begin to feed out Sheridan's Condition Powders. They all need to be braced up for winter. Get Sheridan's. The large packs are worthless.

DEALERS will, of course, often recommend an organ as best because they have it to sell, or can make more on it. But it has been demonstrated at all world's exhibitions for twelve years that those made by the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. excel all others.

WE confidently refer our readers to the card of Dr. C. R. Sykes, in our issue of last week. Dr. Sykes is an old resident of Chicago, a regular graduate, honest, honorable and responsible, and as a physician takes first rank in his chosen specialty of catarrh and its complications.

FOR upward of 30 years MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children with never-failing success. It corrects acidity of the stomach, relieves wind colic, regulates the bowels, cures dysentery and diarrhea, whether arising from teething or other causes. An old and well-tried remedy. 25 cts. a bottle.

Also, $1 for one dog, $2 for each female dog, and $2 for each additional dog, for the collection of which I may be found at the County Treasurer's office, in the town of Auburn, on and after December 15th, 1878.

Taxes may be paid in full, or in two installments. The first installment including all road taxes, can be paid on or before the third Monday in April, 1879; the second installment on or before the first Monday in November, 1879. If the first installment is not paid when due, both installments become delinquent, ten per cent. penalty will be added, and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of personal property.

Road Receipts will not be received after the third Monday in April, only on delinquent taxes. No Road Receipts will be received on the November installment.

Examine your receipts before leaving the office, and see that all your property is included.

No County Order will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of lands and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the second Monday of February, 1879.

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the third Monday of April, and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty.

Parties sending by others, or by letter, to pay tax, should not fail to send description of their lands and lots.

No receipt will be made out hereafter, for any party, until they are ready to pay for the same.

A TERRIBLE RETRIBUTION.

In the Woods of Southern Tennessee—A Seducer's Horrible Fate—A Tell-Tale Piece of Velvet—A Beautiful Girl's Sinister Oath.

"Stop!"

"Who are you?"

"You don't know me?"

"No."

"Yes, you do."

"Let go of my horse, or I'll give you a taste of my riding-whip."

The two persons between whom these startling words were exchanged, in the woods near Chattanooga, Tennessee, on the 17th of July, 1846, were middle-aged men.

One of them was mounted on a very fine black horse. He was elegantly dressed, and wore a heavy golden watch chain. His face was decidedly handsome, and everything about him indicated that he was endowed with extraordinary bodily strength. His gray eyes were large and lustrous, but there was an unpleasant lurking expression in them.

The other man, who had seized the bridle of his interlocutor's horse, wore a foreign looking costume. His swarthy face was sunburnt and furrowed, and his black hair was streaked with gray. His eyes were small, dark and piercing.

He responded to the before-mentioned threat by a laugh.

"Really, Dick Money," he eclaimed, "it is not very handsome in you to receive your old friend Barney Fields in this manner."

These words caused Money to TURN VERY PALE.

For a moment his consternation seemed to render him speechless. Then he faltered out:

"Yes, I recognize you now, Fields. What do you want of me?"

"Guess!"

"How can I guess it?"

Fields replied in a stern voice:

"I have come to punish you!"

"Punish me for what?" asked Money, anxiously.

"By George, Money, you are the most impudent man I ever saw. Have you forgotten my sister Ellen?"

Money dropped his eyes. Then he suddenly jerked the bridle out of Fields hands and galloped off in an opposite direction.

But he did not proceed far.

Field drew from his belt a larke pistol which he fired at Money. The latter fell from his horse, which stood still, while his master lay writhing with pain on the ground.

The bullet had shatter his right leg.

In a few minutes Fields was by his side.

"Have mercy on me, Fields,' cried the wounded man, despairingly. "If you want to revenge yourself upon me, remember that I have a young daughter Anna Bella, who loves me so well that the news of my death would kill her.'

"Maybe the unborn babe of my sister Ellen, whom you seduced, and who, in consequence of your heartlessness and infamy,

COMMITTED SUICIDE.

Would have been a girl, too.'

"Oh, my God! what do you intend to do with me?"

"I intend to cut your throat, infernal villain, who ruined our whole family!"

So saying, he drew his bowie-knife and carried his terrible threat in execution.

The blood poured in torrents from the terrible gash which Fields had made in his victim's neck.

Money made a few convulsive movements and expired

For a minute or two the murderer looked steadily at the inanimate form of the man who had so cruelly wronged his sister, broken up his family, and even gone so far in his insolence as to purchase the Fields farm which was adjoing his own extensive plantation.

"He is dead now!' muttered Fields. "My appearance is so greatly changed that no one will recognize me in Chattanooga. In a day or two I shall go there, and then try to marry Anna Bella Money. I am rich enough to dazzle her by presents, for I hear she is as vain as she is beautiful. But first I shall have to drive this infernal beast away.'

He turned to the horse, which stood as if spell bound at the murder of its master.

Field kicked it, but the spirited animal bit at him and tore from his sleeve

A SMALL PIECE OF THE VELVET

From which his coat was made. Then Fields picked up a stone and hurled it at the horse, which immediately turned and ran home at the top of his speed.

The murderer thereupon entered the thicket and disappeared in it.

When the riderless horse of the murdered man reached the plantation a great commotion took place among the slaves standing in the court yard.

Anna was only sixteen, but rather tall for her age, and one of the most beautiful daughters of the sunny South.

She was vain and haughty, and the only redeeming trait in her character was the passionate love which she felt for her father.

She turned very pale when the riderless horse was led up to her.

"Great God!' she exclaimed "Alonzo, my beautiful horse, you can not have thrown off your kind master?'

The horse neighed plantively. As he did so the small piece of velvet fell from his mouth.

Anna picked it up, and examined it curiously. Then she sent all the male slaves out in search of her father.

The blood-stained remains of Mr. Money were found alf an hour later and taken to his house, where his daughter burst into heart-rending cries.

Suddenly she sprang to her feet, and lifting up her hand to heaven, she exclaimed, in a vibrating voice:

"I swear to heaven that with these hands of mine, I will tear the flesh from the body of the miscrant who murdered my poor father!"

After uttering

THESE TERRIFIC WORDS

She never shed another tear, but set about with wonderful calmness to discover her father's assassin.

The sheriff of the county, and a number of other citizens, left no stone unturned to ferret out the perpetrator of this horrible crime; but all their efforts were utterly fruitless.

In the mean time Bernard Fields had called upon Anna Bella Money.

He had assumed the name of John Strong, and he told her that he would try hard to help her in her effort to discover

THE ASSASSIN OF HER FATHER.

"If you find him,' she said to him on one of these occasions, "I shall do all I con to prove my gratitude to you.'

He told her that he was her admirer, and wanted to marry her He spoke to her of his estates in Cuba and Texas. He promised to buy her diamonds of which a Princess would be proud.

Anna was completely dazzled. She married him a few days later. In Chattanooga no one had recognized him.

One day, not long afterward, he appeared before his wife in a velvet suit.

She admired it until her eyes fell suddenly upon the sleeve, from which a small piece had been torn out.

Then she recalled the piece of velvet that had fallen from the mouth of her father's horse.

She burst into a scream of horror.

"John,' she hissed out, "you are my father's assassin!"

Her husband turned livid.

"What do you mean?" he asked.

She gave the alarm, and an hour later Fields was in the hands of the sheriff.

Then some of his old acquaintances recognized him. They had heard him swear, on his departure from Chattanooga, that he would kill Richard Money one day.

The tell-tale piece of velvet was found, and it led eventually to the conviction of the prisoner.

He was found guilty of murder in the first degree, and hanged at Chattanooga on the the 19th of June, 1847.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case. Try it Sold by W. McIntyre & Son—is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

A TORPID LIVER

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will with certainty relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these pills, of itself indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

WORM SPECIFIC OR VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a gnawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy, not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

—:o:—

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS

are not recommended as a remedy "for all the ills that flesh is heir to," but in affections of the liver, and in all Bilious Complaints, Dyspepsia and Sick Headache, or diseases of that character, they stand without a rival.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Each box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

Each wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Insist upon having the genuine Dr. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

Letter from Colorado.

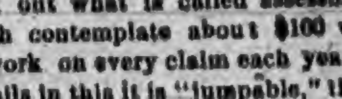
About Mines and Mining.

SILVER CLIFF, COLORADO,
Dec. 3d, 1878.

DEAR COURIER:—Wintry clouds are floating by, and the snow lies deep up on the mountains, yet the weather in the valley is quite pleasant. Now and then a snow storm comes, and hides the peaks from view, but its stay is ephemeral below, and the next day the roads are again clear and almost dry. We have splendid roads here, and very little mud.

But I want to tell you something about mines and mining as carried on in this State, and as an introduction will speak of those surrounding this place. The cliffs here are the sides of the table lands which end abruptly, and show a perpendicular wall of rock perhaps fifty feet high. These are not very near the mountains but right in the valley. A man named Edwards passed and repassed them many times, and finally got an idea one day that there ought to be ore in them from the black surface. One day he got to digging with his pick, but seeing some one coming up the valley on horse back he abandoned the job, and almost ashamed of himself at being seen in such a common place, paid no more attention to them until one day last summer he picked up a piece of rock laying on the surface, and taking it home he had it assayed, that is burnt up until all but the silver was vaporized, add lo, it was found to contain about two hundred ounces of silver to the ton It costs about $20 on an average, to the ton, to extract the silver, and as they can crush about thirty tons a day you see, at that rate, it would prove a big revenue to the owner. This was the way the first excitement arose as to this place. The lowest grade of ore taken out of this mine, called the "Racine Boy," is about 30 ounces to the ton, and the highest about 200. It is easy mining and what they call free milling ore, easy to crush. The rock in which the ore is imbeded, is what we might call rotten, full of seams, and easily broken with a hammer. Holes are drilled and the rock blasted out, and you can hear reports like the boom of canon every hour in the day. From where I sit, I can see large piles of what they call "dump," broken pieces of rock, as big as a house, lying along side of the mines, which is assorted, the richest broken in pieces less than a pound, packed in canvassed sacks, and hauled to the mills to be smelted or crushed and amalgated as the case may be. Free milling ore is first crushed to powder, and then put in cylinders and quicksilver added to gather the ore, or it can be smelted, that is rock and all melted, and when at a certain stage, salt and lime is thrown in, when the precious metal settles to the bottom, and is taken out as bullion A mill will be put up here in a few days, with 20 stamps which crush about a ton each a day, which will save the cost of hauling the ore thirty miles, and 30 ounce ore will then pay to handle. As soon as I can I want to go through one of these mills, and then I will give you a more extended description of the process. This very rock that Mr. Edwards looked at so often and passed time and again, shows about $200,000 worth of silver in sight, and no one knows how much more. In sight means eight feet farther than you can see. There are about half a dozen good mines already developed here, working from twenty to fifty miners. Several were sold when first discovered, the prices ranging from fourteen to thirty thousand dollars. The adjacent hills and cliffs are full of the precious metal, and very many who have set their stakes in the right places are sure of a fortune. The ores of Leadville were a puzzle to the old miners. None of them knew what to make of them. Those found here are still more peculiar in formation and deposit. The expert shakes his head and exclaims, "Will wonders never cease?" In the same opening has been found chlorides, carbonates and horn silver. The deposits are found in every conceivable position, and the scientists are obliged to confess that all their book-knowledge goes for nothing, so far as this district is concerned.

I want to tell you how they prospect, stake claims, etc. It seems very peculiar and indifiniite to the uninitiated. An old miner or a green-horn, it seems it don't make much difference which goes out on a prospecting tour. After digging one or more gopher holes he strikes what he thinks on examination is bearing rock. He goes to an assayer, who reports favorable or not as the case may be. If the former, the finder goes to his hole and puts up a stake, on which is written generally in lead pencil the direction he wants his claim to take, say north-westerly by south-easterly. By the law he is entitled to fifteen hundred feet one way and three hundred the other, containing about ten acres. This would make a claim about the following shape:



After his claim is staked he must work out what is called assessments, which contemplate about $100 worth of work on every claim each year. If he fails in this it is "jumpable," that is any one can come along and re-stake the claim. Some times when a valuable mine is found, desparadoes rush to the scene, and drive their stakes without regard to former locations, and revolvers and bowie knives are brought into requisition to maintain their ground, and frequently some one gets hurt. All around this place, you can see holes sunk to various depths and stakes glaring at you with their perishable inscriptions, denoting the owner and lay of the claim. In due time a patent is obtained, if the owner holds his claim, and five dollars per acre is paid to the Government for the land. I want to describe this place to you, and how things are carried on up here in the mountains, and several other things if I can find time. I am very busy in managing the new paper, the first issue of which was got out last Friday. I was down the valley six miles to-day visiting the king of ranchmen, who has about fifteen thousand head of cattle, and I want to tell you some interesting points connected therewith, and until then, Au revoir.

TOM.

The following is Bob Ingersoll's view of the Bible. We publish it simply to illustrate the general charter of his whole lecture as now being delivered throughout the country:

"This Bible has built every inquisition, made religious martyr, driven every stake, set every faggot, lighted every torch; it has made every thumbscrew, every rack, dislocated every joint; it has produced every religious war, divided us up into sects and classes, has set father against mother and child against parent; this Bible has covered the world with blood; has covered the human face with tears; has crushed honesty; has offered a premium for rascality, stupidity and hypocracy; has opposed every invention of man; has said to the astronomer, 'You must not tell the secrets of the universe;' the Bible has opposed every man of science; put Galileo in prison; made Copernicus afraid to publish his immortal work; made Kepler keep his three laws a secret; pointed the finger of scorn at Descartes; hooted every man that was investigating for himself, and endeavoring to make this world sublimer and better. It has been a prepetual onstruction upon the highway of progress, and I am opposed to it, and am going to do what little I can against it."

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung-disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

If you have a chronic disease which has resisted the skill of your local physician and your own good care of yourself, place yourself in correspondence with E. B. Foote, M. D., 120 Lexington Avenue, New York City. It will only cost you the postage you put on your letters, as all consultations by letter as well as in person are free. Dr Foote is the well known author of Medical Common Sense, Plain Home Talk, Science in Story, etc.

Delightful Perfumes.

Dr. Price has prepared a rich variety of perfumes, from which the most fastidious can select an odor with agreeable satisfaction. Dr. Price's Pet Rose, Alista Bouquet, and other perfumes, are great favorites, as their sweetness and freshness are so decided.

THE

INDIANA STATE SENTINEL!

FOR 1879

HAS BEEN REDUCED IN PRICE TO

One Dollar Per Year.

The merits of this paper are well known among a large majority of the farmers and stock raisers of this State. No paper furnishes more news for less money. It has been the acknowledged leading Democratic newspaper of Indiana for almost half a century. It has ever stood with the Democracy. Its reputation throughout the Union is firmly established. Indiana to-day is democratic by [illegible] majority, and the Sentinel's circulation and influence has increased in like proportion in the last six months.

The Weekly Sentinel

Will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepared with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than

Compare Favorably

With any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be

Newsy, Literary,

And full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

Every reading and thinking man in the State who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for the Weekly Sentinel.

Farmers, Merchants

and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it, for, in addition to its political and literary merits, the Sentinel is confessedly the Commercial Paper of Indiana.

The Indiana State Sentinel is the paper for everybody—the farmer, mechanic and professional man. At our greatly reduced rates no one can afford to be without it.

Hundreds of millions of dollars of wealth have been gathered from the fields of "golden grain" during the past harvest, and, what is better, this wealth is distributed among the people. As the Sentinel's share of this happy result, we ask every reader to aid in gathering our share of the harvest of 50,000 new subscribers.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

The schooner Caledonia went ashore on Libby island, off the coast of Maine, last week. The Captain and crew, five men, were all lost.

Orville Grant, the ex-President's brother, was released from the lunatic asylum at Morris Plaines, N. J., last week, and accompanied to his home at Elizabeth by his son. He is far from being entirely sound in mind, but it is thought that care and the quiet of his home, and the tender ministrations of his wife and mother, may secure his complete mental health.

A violent rain storm swept over the the New England States a few days ago, destroying much property, and, by washing away bridges and culverts, causing several railway accidents and some loss of life....Sam Collyer, the prize-fighter, who was sentenced to the New Jersey penitentiary for six years for manslaughter in 1876, has been pardoned by the Governor.

THE WEST.

A great fat-cattle show has just been held in Chicago. One of the finest lots of cattle ever witnessed was on exhibition, few of them weighing less than 2,000 pounds, and most of them turning the scales at from 3,000 to 4,000 pounds. There was also a splendid exhibit of hogs and sheep. The show was such a big success that it will be repeated next year.

A shocking domestic tragedy is reported from Hamilton, Ohio. An old man named Weigel, a well-to-do citizen, shot his wife through the heart while she lay in bed asleep, and then took his own life by shooting three balls into his body.

A sad calamity is reported from Washington, Iowa. The county poor-house was destroyed by fire. There were twenty-six pauper inmates, and so rapid was the spread of the fire that five of them were consumed in the flames.

Another one of the great Minneapolis flour mills—the Anchor, with seven runs of stones—has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $85,000.

Chicago elevators, as per official returns, contain 4,836,429 bushels of wheat, 1,296,927 bushels of corn, 355,105 bushels of oats, 172,858 bushels of rye, and 1,240,531 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 7,901,850 bushels, against 2,352,912 bushels at this period last year.

THE SOUTH.

A correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal, who was sent to Breathitt county, Ky., to write up an account of the civil war raging there, reports that affairs are indeed in a deplorable condition, and that, instead of being exaggerated, the stories about the strife there do not represent as bad a state of affairs as really exist. The law is overridden, and the county officers are powerless to even make a single arrest. Prominent citizens who have been threatened have fled for their lives, and Jackson, the county seat of Breathitt county, is almost depopulated.

Two important events in the life of Wade Hampton happened on the 10th of December. On that day he was elected to the Senate of the United States from South Carolina. Almost at the same hour the surgeons amputated one of his legs.

A state of lawlessness still existed in Breathitt county, Ky., at last accounts. The rival factions continue to shoot each other like barbarians at every opportunity. The State militia has been sent to the scene of the outrages, but they seem powerless to suppress the spirit of lawlessness that seems to have seized upon an entire community.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary Schurz has given his testimony before the joint commission charged with considering the proposed transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department. The Secretary disclaimed any personal desire to retain control of the Indian service under the Interior Department. No branch of the department business is so troublesome and thankless. He thought the Indians were entitled to humane treatment, and that could only be tendered through the processes of civilization, education and kind treatment. This the military were not fitted to promote. The military arm of the Government he did not consider gifted with the patient labor required to place the hoe in the Indian's hand and show him how to use it.

The joint Congressional commission on the reorganization of the army has made its report to Congress in the shape of a bill, the general features of which are as follows: The number of regiments to be cut down to twenty, while the number of enlisted men is to be cut down to 20,000 men, without counting the signal corps. The artillery system of organization is changed from regimental to batteries and companies, while the entire artillery branch is consolidated with the Ordnance Department. The staff corps, as a distinctive branch of the service, is abolished. Adjutant Generals', Quartermaster Generals', Inspector Generals' and Paymaster Generals' staffs are done away with, and a system of interchangeability of line and staff officers substituted similar to the European system of organization. In order to reduce the number of officers, it is provided that there shall be no more promotions or appointments until the number of general and line officers is reduced to that required. The offices of General and Lieutenant General will cease with the decease of the present incumbents. The number of Major Generals and Brigadier Generals is to be reduced to the lowest point.

Federal appointments: Eugene J. Ball, Indiana, to be Consul at Pesth; David H. Bailey, Ohio, Consul General at Shanghai; Andrew V. McCormick, United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Texas; James Gallup, Postmaster at Grand Rapids, Mich....The Secretary of the Treasury has called in $5,000,000 more of the 5:20 bonds.

It can now be stated positively that there is at least no present probability of Attorney General Devens retiring from the Cabinet. The President and other members of the Cabinet consider it of advantage to the Government that no change shall occur at present, and, while Gen. Devens has had offered to him the position of the First Circuit Judgeship, he will defer his own wishes in regard thereto, and remain in his present office.

GENERAL.

A successful counterfeit of the standard silver dollar has been brought out. Be on your guard.

Gen. Grant expects to embark at Marseilles, France, in the United States war steamer Richmond, for India, via the Suez canal, about Christmas; thence he will proceed, in the same steamer, to China, Japan, Australia, and the Sandwich islands, reaching San Francisco in May next. The steamer Richmond has been placed at his convenience by President Hayes.... Failed: Lull & Sage, butter and cheese manufacturers, Chenango county, N. Y., liabilities $350,000; Place & Levy, glove manufacturers, Gloversville, N. Y., liabilities $300,000; Hanauer, Lichtenauer & Co., wholesale clothing, St. Paul, Minn., liabilities $220,000; Dodd, Brown & Co., the great dry-goods dealers of St. Louis, have been forced by their creditors to make an assignment.

Henry Wells, of Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express, died recently in Scotland....The office of Turnbull & Co., St. John, N. B., was robbed last week of bonds, stocks, etc., of the value of $100,000....Immigration is on the increase again. The arrivals at the port of New York for twelve months ending on the 30th of November numbered 81,356, while only 68,111 were reported for the previous year.... The October returns of the Department of Agriculture did not materially change the aspect of the wheat crop as foreshadowed by the monthly reports of condition. The December returns, including the estimates of the yield per acre, confirm and somewhat enlarge the previous estimates. A computation from all the returns shows an aggregate crop of about 425,000,000 bushels.

POLITICAL.

A Washington correspondent of a Western journal says that a Southern Congressman, who lately called at the White House, states that "the President intimated that he entertains kindly feelings for the South, and has a lively interest in its prosperity. He considers that the language he used in his message as applied to Southern politics was mild under the circumstances, and that he was fulfilling his constitutional duty in calling the attention of Congress to what he can only look upon as violations of constitution and law. He says he could not be expected to remain silent when in his belief the laws which he was sworn to execute have been disregarded. He says, as he has several times before remarked, he does not impute any want of good faith to either Gov. Nicholls or Gov. Hampton."

Hon. W. D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, the prospective candidate of the Nationals for Speaker of the House of Representatives, says he does not propose to support any measure in Congress calculated to embarrass the resumption of specie payments. He thinks the interconvertible bond scheme is one upon which the extremists of both sides could unite. So far from the discussion of the financial question ending on the 1st of January, Judge Kelley thinks it will be then only beginning.

There is to be a meeting at Washington, on the 22d of February, of all the National Greenback Congressmen-elect to the Forty-sixth Congress. The object of this conference, a call for which has already been issued, is to get all the National members of the next Congress together for the purpose of comparing views, and, if possible, determining upon a plan of action.... Boston's municipal election took place last week. The total vote cast for Mayor was 37,986, Prince, Democrat, being elected by a majority of 1,108.

FOREIGN.

The West of England Bank, with head office at Bristol, and the Caledonia Bank of Glasgow, Scotland, have failed. The former had a capital of $5,000,000, and the latter of about $7,000,000....It is said that Russia and England may probably make an equal division between them of the Ameer's domain. Stranger things have happened.

The Ameer of Afghanistan's reply to the Viceroy of India's ultimatum has been received by the latter. The Ameer explains that his refusal to receive Gen. Sir Neville Chamberlain's mission was not intended to be hostile, but arose from a fear of a loss of his independence. He declares no enmity exists between Afghanistan and the British Government; that he desires to resume his former friendly relations; and, finally, that he will not resist the visit of a small temporary mission. As the letter expresses no willingness to comply with the Viceroy's specific demands operations will proceed, if possible, more actively, in consequence of the Ameer's irresolution, so as to acquire as much as possible before he submits.

News comes from Cuba that the slaves in several districts of the island have notified their owners that, unless they are paid for their labor, they shall stop work after the 1st of January. They claim that, under the Amnesty act, they have been most unjustly dealt with; that, while those of their class who left plantations to join the insurgents have been set free, those who remained at home are still held in bondage. On account of this discrimination they have determined to liberate themselves at any cost.

The failure of the West of England and South Wales District Bank, lately announced by cable, turns out to have been a more serious financial disaster than the first reports indicated. The institution had forty-two branches, and its liabilities are $17,500,000. Its assets are stated at the same amount, but, as they consist of local bills, which are not negotiable in London, the Bank of England refused to advance upon them.

The magnitude of the recent famine in China almost passes belief, and it is difficult to appreciate a calamity that, as in this instance, could destroy the lives of 7,000,000 human beings. In the one province of Shansi the deaths numbered 5,000,000.

A Bombay dispatch of the 12th inst. says "An Afghan official arrived in Gen. Browne's camp from Jellalabad and invited the British to advance to Cabul and establish a new Government in consequence of a general rising against the Ameer." Another dispatch says it is reported that "the Ameer has sent a relative and high dignitary to Maj. Cavagnari at Dakka, beseeching the British to grant peace and asking for no conditions."

By the arrival of the steamer City of Pekin, at San Francisco, we get an interesting budget of news from China: Insurrections continue in the Island of Haiuan and the Province of Kwangsi, the former being agrarian and the latter military. Thus far the rebels have been successful, but their speedy suppression is confidently expected. There is considerable excitement over the quarrel of the English missionaries with the Mandarins, near Foo Chow. Li Hung Chang, a powerful Northern Viceroy, favors the immediate establishment of a Chinese mint. Fresh Government exertions are made throughout the empire for the suppression of opium smoking. Frederick Hoffman, Register of the Court of Hong Kong, has been convicted of embezzling nearly $100,000, and sentenced to seven years' penal servitude.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Monday, Dec. 9.—Senate.—Mr. Windom submitted a preamble and resolution setting forth that the United States Patent Office "has become an institution of oppression," and therefore directing the Committee on Patents to consider the expediency of some other mode of compensating inventors in place of the present system. ....Mr. Cameron submitted a resolution requesting the President of the United States to furnish the Senate with copies of the reports of United States Marshals and other officers, and such other correspondence as he may have, relative to recent elections in South Carolina and Louisiana. Agreed to....The bill to amend the Revised Statutes relating to Presidential elections, and to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising, was taken up. Mr. Edmunds addressed the Senate in favor of the bill.... Mr. Garland submitted a resolution, which was adopted, instructing the Committee on Indian Affairs to inquire whether it will not be wise and expedient, by appropriate legislation, to provide for a revision of the existing laws regulating intercourse with the Indian tribes in the Indian Territory.

House.—A large number of bills were introduced, among which were the following: To compel national banks to receive the standard silver dollar as an equivalent in value to the gold coins of the United States; directing the Secretary of the Treasury to use $10,000,000 of legal tenders, held for the redemption of fractional currency, in payment of that amount of the 5-20 bonds; by Mr. Vance (N. C.), to repeal the United States Electoral Supervisor's law; by Mr. Atkins, to make minor or subsidiary coins legal tender for all debts due the Government, including the payment of customs dues; by Mr. Burchard, requiring national-banking associations to receive legal-tender coins on deposit at par, and in exchange at par for United States and national-bank notes, also directing the United States Treasurer to receive coins of the United States in exchange for United States notes; by Mr. Buckner, amending the Silver Remonetization act; by Mr. Cummings, to provide for the redemption of subsidiary coins of the United States, and for their reissue; by Mr. Page, to enforce the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the constitution.....Mr. Durham (Ky.) moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to stop the coinage of the trade dollars, and to take the latter, thus received, and recoin them into standard dollars. The vote stood 131 yeas to 91 nays—not two-thirds.... Mr. Sayler introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information. Mr. Garfield objected on the ground that it would be imposing a large amount of unnecessary work on the department. Mr. Sayler—Then the country is not to be informed of the condition of the treasury? Mr. Foster suggested that the resolution should be accompanied by an appropriation of $25,000 to defray the expenses. The resolution was not received.

Tuesday, Dec. 10.—Senate.—Mr. Wallace introduced a bill to authorize the exchange of subsidiary coin for trade dollars. Referred. The bill provides that subsidiary coins shall be exchangeable for trade dollars at the rate of 100 cents for each of said dollars, and they shall forthwith be recoined into subsidiary coin, and the gain, if any be made, may be used by the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the expense of sending the subsidiary coin to such persons or banks as may desire the same in exchange for other coins. The coinage of the trade dollar shall cease from and after the passage of this act....Mr. Allison, from the select committee to inquire into the charges against Stanley Matthews, submitted a resolution requesting the House to transmit to the Senate the copy of the testimony of James E. Anderson relating to Matthews, taken before the House committee. Agreed to....At the expiration of the morning hour, consideration was resumed of the bill relating to Presidential elections, and Mr. Morgan made a speech favoring the measure.

House.—The Speaker announced the committee to inquire into the causes of the yellow-fever epidemic: Young, Gibson, Goode, Hartridge, Morse, Garfield, Harmer, and Chittenden....The Speaker also announced appointments to fill vacancies in committees....The House then went into committee of the whole (Springer in the chair) on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill. On motion of Mr. Hale, the salary of the Ministers to England, France, Germany and Russia, reported in the bill at $15,000, was, by a vote of 98 to 91, put back to the present figure, $17,500. The amendment to increase the salaries of the Ministers to Spain, Austria, Italy, Brazil, Mexico, Japan and China from $10,000 to $12,000 was defeated. Likewise the amendment providing for Ministers to Belgium and the Netherlands.

Wednesday, Dec. 11.—Senate.—Mr. Beck introduced a bill for the repeal of the section of the Revised Statutes which prohibits the appointment to the army of any person who served under the Confederate Government. Laid on the table for the present....Mr. Ferry introduced a bill to fix the salary of persons in the railway mail service. Referred....On motion of Mr. Hamlin, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. Blaine in regard to an inquiry as to whether, at the recent elections, the constitutional rights of American citizens were violated. Mr. Blaine spoke in favor of the resolution. Mr. Thurman offered an amendment that "the committee shall also inquire whether any citizen of any State has been dismissed or threatened with dismissal from employment or the deprivation of any right or privilege by reason of his vote or intention to vote at the recent elections or has been otherwise interfered with; and to inquire whether, in the year 1878, money was raised by assessment or otherwise upon Federal officeholders or employes for election purposes, and under what circumstances and by what means, and, if so, what amount was so raised and how the same was expended; and, further, whether such assessments were not in violation of law, and shall further inquire into the action and conduct of the United States Supervisors of Elections in the several States, as to the number of Marshals, Deputy Marshals, and others employed to take part in the conduct of said elections, in what States or cities appointed, the amount of money paid or promised to be paid to them, and how or by whom and under what law and authority." Mr. Thurman addressed the Senate in support of his amendment and in reply to the speech of Mr. Blaine. Mr. Lamar also spoke in favor of the adoption of the amendment, and was replied to by Mr. Edmunds.

House.—The Naval and Diplomatic Appropriation bills were passed....The Pension Appropriation bill was reported and referred to the committee of the whole....The bill to regulate inter-State commerce was passed by a vote of 139 to 110, after a lengthy debate. The bill makes it unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the transportation of property by railroad from one State to another, or to or from any foreign country, to receive any greater or less amount of compensation from one person than another for like and contemporaneous service. It also makes it unlawful for any person so engaged to allow any rebate or drawback on the shipments made by them, or enter into a combination with another carrier to prevent the carriage of property from being continuous, and prohibits the pooling of freights.

Thursday, Dec. 12.—Senate.—Mr. Anthony called up the Senate bill authorizing the Public Printer to print papers and documents for the Senators, Representatives and Delegates in Congress upon payment of cost and 10 per cent. additional. Passed....Mr. Windom called up the Fortification Appropriation bill. The amendments of the committee increasing the appropriation for armament of sea-coast fortifications from $145,000 to $250,000 and for the preservation and repair of fortifications from $100,000 to $200,000, were agreed to. The bill then passed....The bill from the House to correct the enrollment in the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill of last year, in regard to the Hot Springs Reservation, in Arkansas, was passed without amendment....Mr. Paddock introduced a bill to amend the posse-comitatus clause of the Army Appropriation bill for the present fiscal year, so as to provide that it shall not apply to any part of the army employed in the States or Territories subject to Indian incursions. Referred....On motion of Mr. Burnside, the bill reported by him from the joint commission in regard to reorganization of the army was made the special order for the 8th of January next.

House.—Mr. Wood offered a resolution directing an inquiry into the conduct of Chief Supervisor of Elections Davenport, at the last election in New York. The allegation was that Davenport was guilty of illegal, unjust and oppressive exercise of pretended authority, in causing the arrest, detention and imprisonment of citizens innocent of offense, by which he deprived them of the right to vote, and subjected them to indignity, insult and intimidation without warrant of law or justification, which arrests have been declared illegal by a United States Judge....The resolution was adopted ordering a recess from Dec. 20 to Jan. 6....A bill was introduced by Mr. Morrison to remove the duty on quinine....A bill was passed removing the political disabilities of ex-Senator James Chesnut, of South Carolina.

Extravagant Americans.

In two very important items of domestic expense the American people are extravagant beyond all excuse. In the matter of food the waste is astounding to all who know of the continental frugality and economy. It would not matter so much that we insist upon having the most costly viands if we only had the knowledge of cookery and the sense of saving which would make the most of them. Nine out of ten families might, if they knew how, live better at one-half of their present expenditure. But in the matter of clothing the case is, if possible, still worse. There is little or no question of what is becoming, useful, economical or appropriate to person or purse. The only care is to be in, or as near the fashion as possible.

Silk, if possible; if not, calico that looks like silk. Broadcloth, if it can be got; if not, shoddy that imitates it. The expenditure of the man who can afford to live at the rate of $10,000 a year is imitated in brass, or by stealing, by him who is entitled to spend $5,000. Afar off, the $1,000 folks are envious and imitative in cheap furniture and dresses which would lead to suspicion if every one did not know them to be the merest sham. If some of our people of advanced thought would give their attention to the subject of moral courage, even if it did no good, it would indicate a line of thought and action novel to the immense majority of our highly-trained, and wholly by what others think possessed, men and women.—Providence Journal.

McKean Buchanan as a Poker Player.

C. W. Couldock, now one of the best old men on the contemporaneous stage, once met McKean Buchanan in New Orleans, a quarter of a century ago, and at night, after the performance, the two played at poker until the small hours of the night. Buchanan proved invincible, and Couldock withdrew, after having lost a pretty round sum. Buchanan was about to start for the West, and needed a letter of introduction to a certain manager, and applied to Couldock, who wrote the following:

My Dear ——: This will be handed you by Mr. McKean Buchanan. He plays "Hamlet," "Macbeth," "Othello," "Richard," and Poker—playing poker the best. Sincerely,

C. W. Couldock.

SPECIE PAYMENTS.

The text of the Resumption act is as follows:

Chapter 15.—An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments—Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, as rapidly as practicable, to cause to be coined at the mints of the United States silver coins of the denominations of 10, 25 and 50 cents, of standard value, and to issue them in redemption of an equal number and amount of fractional currency of similar denominations, or, at his discretion, he may issue such silver coins through the mints, the sub-treasuries, public depositories and postoffices of the United States; and, upon such issue, he is hereby authorized and required to redeem an equal amount of such fractional currency, until the whole amount of said fractional currency outstanding shall be redeemed.

Sec. 2. That so much of section 3,524 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as provides for a charge of one-fifth of 1 per centum for converting standard gold bullion into coin is hereby repealed, and hereafter no charge shall be made for that service.

Sec. 3. That section 5,177 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, limiting the aggregate amount of circulating notes of national-banking associations, be, and is hereby, repealed; and each existing banking association may increase its circulating notes in accordance with existing law without respect to said aggregate limit; and new banking associations may be organized in accordance with existing law without respect to said aggregate limit; and the provisions of law for the withdrawal and redistribution of national-bank currency among the several States and Territories are hereby repealed. And whenever and so often as circulating notes shall be issued to any such banking association, so increasing its capital or circulating notes, or so newly organized as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem the legal-tender United States notes in excess only of $300,000,000, to the amount of 80 per centum of the sum of national-bank notes so issued to any such banking association as aforesaid, and to continue such redemption as such circulating notes are issued until there shall be outstanding the sum of $300,000,000 of such legal-tender United States notes and no more. And on and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem, in coin, the United States legal-tender notes then outstanding on their presentation for redemption, at the office of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States in the city of New York, in sums of not less than $50. And to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for the redemption by this act authorized or required, he is authorized to use any surplus revenues, from time to time in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell and dispose of, at not less than par, in coin, either of the descriptions of bonds of the United States described in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," with like qualities, privileges and exemptions to the extent necessary to carry this act into full effect, and to use the proceeds thereof for the purposes aforesaid. And all provisions of law inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Approved Jan. 14, 1875.

This act provided that the legal-tender circulation should not be contracted below $300,000,000. On the 31st of May, 1878, a bill was approved, which has had the effect of fixing the legal tender circulation at $346,681,016. The text of this bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury or other officer under him to cancel or retire any more of the United States legal-tender notes. And when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the treasury, under any law, from any source whatever, and shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled or destroyed, but they shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation; provided, that nothing herein shall prohibit the cancellation and destruction of mutilated notes and the issue of other notes of like denomination in their stead, as now provided by law. All acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Russia and Afghanistan.

The exact intentions of Russia, so far as the military campaign against Afghanistan is concerned, are likely to be revealed now that the English Government has instructed its Minister at St. Petersburg to call upon the Czar for an explicit statement of what was meant by Gen. Kauffman's address to the Ameer upon the occasion of presenting him with a sword. The address was as follows:

> My illustrious sovereign, in whose empire the sun never sets, and whose raised finger causes millions of soldiers to take up arms, sends this pledge of friendship and unchanging affection to his friend and ally, the noble and chivalrous ruler of the Afghans and Beloochees. History teaches that Russia ever espouses a just cause, that she has always known him to protect her allies from the attacks of any enemy however powerful. Whoever sides with Russia need not fear that a hair of his head will be injured. The power of the Russian sword is great. This is a fact known to the enemies of Russia as well as to her allies. May God protect and preserve the two powerful sovereigns—the Czar and Ameer. May God preserve the welfare of the two allied countries to the benefit of Afghans, Russians and humanity at large. May the echo of these words awaken consolation and hope where oppression and tyranny are paramount.

These are very plain, bold words, but it is to be taken into account that they were spoken before the Treaty of Berlin was signed, and at a time before peace had been concluded between Russia and Turkey. The two countries were still in a condition of war, and any assurances that Gen. Kauffman may have given the Ameer at such a time have a different significance from what they would have had if spoken after the treaty was signed, and when the attack upon Afghanistan had no bearings upon the relations of Turkey and Russia. It is not difficult to anticipate the answer which Russia will make. Indeed, the answer has been already made in her declaration that she has no intention of interfering in the pending Anglo-Afghan campaign, but that she reserves the right when the Ameer is defeated, as he will be, to have a voice in making the treaty of peace. In this demand she is following the precedent set by England at the close of the war, and it will be singular if Russian interference in the Anglo-Afghan Congress does not prove a source of grave embarrassment, if not of great danger, to England. The Russian and English interests are too close in that quarter not to be recognized in any settlement that may be made with Afghanistan.—Chicago Tribune.

A Just Punishment.

Early in the fifteenth century, a band of Highland robbers, headed by one Macdonald of Rosse, having taken two cows from a poor woman, she vowed that she would wear no shoes till she had complained to the King. The savages, in ridicule of her oath, nailed horse-shoes to the soles of her feet. When her wounds were healed, she proceeded to the royal presence, told her story, and showed her scars. The just monarch instantly dispatched an armed force to secure Macdonald, who was brought to Perth, along with twelve of his associates. The King caused them to be shod in the same manner as they did by the poor woman, and, after they had been for three days exhibited through the streets of the town as a public spectacle, Macdonald was beheaded, and his companions hung.

Shocking Criminals.

The penitentiary management, determined not to be outdone by Edison, have introduced electricity as a mode of punishment. The statement having been made that prisoners exposed to this punishment suffered more than they did by the use of the ducking-tub, a reporter called at the prison and was shown the method of punishment by Deputy Warden Quinn and Dr. Drury, the prison physician. The electric apparatus is in a box ten inches in length, three inches high and three inches wide. It contains an electro-magnet. The prisoner is taken to the ducking-box formerly in use in the insane department. He is stripped and blindfolded before coming in sight of the water-box, and is then led around a corner of the interior cell building, and placed in the box, handcuffed, but not shackled at the feet. The room is warm, having fire in it day and night. He sits down in water three inches in depth. One pole of the battery is placed in the water. A sponge is attached to the end of the other pole.

Deputy Warden Quinn superintends the punishment, which consists of touching the bare skin of the convict in various places, rapidly, with the sponge. A prisoner turns a small crank attached to the electric apparatus. The concern is so small that it looks like a toy, but it makes the subject of punishment yell sometimes as though he was badly hurt or badly frightened. The reporter did not witness a punishment, but is giving what he was told at the prison. Dr. Drury says this mode of punishment does no harm. In some cases he says it is a physical benefit. The punishment is said to be effectual, on account of the man being blindfolded. He has no idea where or when he is going to be touched, and is not nerved against it, as one would be who takes hold of the poles of a battery with his eyes open and his thoughts concentrated for the expected shock. It is said that the mode of punishment has reduced the visits to the room 45 per cent. The dungeons have been dispensed with except five. About one man per week is sent there.—Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch.

A Very Strange Story.

A South London (England) journal reports a story which reminds us very much of the Gaffer Hexams and Rogue Riderhoods of the Thames. A drowning man from the Princess Alice offered a boatman £5 to save him. The latter called out that he "could not do it for the price."

"I'll give you £10!" screamed the half-drowned man.

"It's worth more than that, Gov'nor," composedly returned the waterman.

"No, but I'll tell you wot, I'll save you for £20."

There was no other alternative, for the boatman evidently meant what he said, and the victim consented. He was hauled into the boat and rowed ashore, and directly they got to the land the boatman demanded the money. Said the late victim:

"I would have given you £5 willingly, but, since you have shown yourself such a black-hearted scoundrel, you shall have nothing."

The boatman swore and stormed, but without avail, and all he could get was the name and address of the man, who said he might, if he liked, "take the law out of him." The boatman means to go to law, and he has commenced action against the man for breach of contract. A well-known South London solicitor has the case in hand.

Eaten by Cannibals.

Intelligence has been received from the Island of New Britain of the massacre of native Wesleyan mission agents, who were set upon and murdered, and their bodies eaten by the mountain tribes. The Wesleyan Church in Australia directs and supports evangelistic operations in the Friendly islands, the new colony of Fiji, Samoa, the lone island of Rotumah, and the group of islands of which New Britain and New Ireland are the largest. The mission is under the charge of the Rev. George Brown, who resides himself on one of the Duke of York group of islands. Eight of the teachers had expressed their wish and determination to visit the interior tribes of New Britain. They divided into two bands, in order to cross the islands at different parts. Four of them started from Blanche bay, and the other four made the northern side of the island their point of departure. The Blanche bay party returned next day to their point of departure. The other four teachers also reached the plateau in safety, interviewed the natives and were entertained for the night in one of the towns. A chief named Talili, who lived on the low land, but who had influence in the interior, sent a message to the town in which the unfortunate teachers were lodged for the night, beseeching the tribe to kill them. When the doomed men left the village the next morning the people followed, and, calling upon all whom they met working in the plantations by the way to join them in the deed of blood, at length fell upon the unarmed, unsuspicious teachers and slew them in savage fashion. The bodies were cut up, and the pieces sent here and there to the different towns, where they were cooked and eaten with cannibal ceremony and delight. The object of thus distributing the bodies was to implicate a large number of towns in the massacre—a customary device of savages. The Rev. Mr. Brown, on hearing of the massacre, adopted very severe reprisals, the character of which on the part of a missionary have been variously commented on by the Australian press. An expedition was at once organized, and the result of the reprisals was that at least fifty, possibly more, of the cannibals were killed, and many of the towns and plantations were destroyed.—Melbourne Argus.

A. T. Stewart's Palace.

The marked feature in Fifth avenue has, for the last ten years, been Stewart's palace, but since the outrage it holds a special distinction only second to St. Mark's. To build such a palace was Stewart's life-long ambition, but he was an old man before he entered it, and after only three years he exchanged it for the narrow house appointed for all living. At present it is occupied by an afflicted widow, whose mind is shattered by age and disease, and upon whom this blow has fallen with fearful power. The spot has been previously marked by misfortune. Townsend, the sarsaparilla man, made great wealth, and built the finest house in New York, but he failed and died miserably. Stewart then bought the property, and pulled down the splendid house, in order to make room for his palace. He was forced to occupy it before it was finished by the fact that small-pox broke out among his servants, and he was compelled to move for safety. Death soon snatched him from his palace, and afterward the widow got a serious fall, from which she has never fully recovered. The grand palace soon revealed grand defects, one of which was that its lofty stairs were too difficult of ascent for an aged woman, who is now imprisoned by disease and sorrow in her room in the second story. It is surprising to gaze on this grand establishment, which cost a million, and on which the taxes alone are $7,000, and realize that it is devoted to the sole use of this childless old woman. The servants, who number at least a half dozen, occupy the basement and attic, and are very fortunate in having such an easy and luxurious place. Mrs. Stewart now is favored by the attention of her brother, Charles Clinch, to whom she gave an adjacent house, in order to have the family near her at this time of age and feeblenesa.—New York letter.

Not more than half the church sittings in London are occupied.

THEODORE REED, Editor.

THURMAN ON BLAINE.

Speech of the Ohio Senator, Delivered in the United States Senate.

MR. PRESIDENT: I attempted to offer that amendment before the Senator from Maine proceeded with his remarks, but failed to have any opportunity to do so. I intended then to say that, whatever opinion might be entertained on this side of the chamber as to the competency of Congress to make all the investigations that these resolutions contemplate, yet we were disposed to waive all scruples of that character and suffer the resolutions to pass without opposition, if the amendment now proposed should be added to them. The Senator from Maine, however, having a speech carefully studied and prepared, exercised his right to deliver that speech before any amendment could be offered. I do not complain of that at all, nor do I now rise to make any extended reply to the speech that I have heard just now. Should this debate be protracted I may exercise my privilege of saying something in reply to the Senator from Maine, but to-day I shall confine myself to a very few general observations. The Senator is frank in one thing—his resolution is broad. It includes all the States. It provides for an investigation whether the rights of American citizens in connection with the elective franchise have been violated or interfered with in any of the States, but he frankly admits in the very outset of his remarks that that was not his purpose, that his purpose was to assail the Democracy of the South. He had two purposes in preparing a carefully elaborated speech—not to vindicate the right of suffrage throughout this whole Union, but to inquire whether the Democracy of the Southern States had violated the rights of American citizens, and then to find out what should be done with them.

Now, Mr. President, that is a very frank, and, I have no doubt, a very true statement of the animus of this resolution. Mr. President, I said there might be some doubts as to the propriety of this investigation. I repeat it. There may be such doubts, especially to-day. Here is the short session of Congress. We have, excluding the recess that we always take, less, perhaps, than two months within which to dispose of the appropriation bills and other measures of legislation that necessarily require the attention of Congress if the business of the session is to be disposed of and no extra session is to be called. And now, sir, the Senator proposes an investigation that I defy any committee that can be found to make, with anything like thoroughness—nay in any satisfactory manner, with anything like justness, either to those who are implicated or those who may be implicated—within the time that remains of the session of the Senate. It is an impossibility. I have therefore wondered why this resolution was introduced unless it was to be made a string upon which to hang speeches to arouse sectional hatred in one portion of this Union against an almost defenseless people in another portion of the Union. Now, Mr. President, this assault of the Senator from Maine is not an assault simply upon the people of the South. I said five months ago in a speech, which I beg pardon for repeating here, that it did seem to me as clear as anything in American politics could be that there was a deliberately-formed purpose under the pretext that there was a solid South to create a solid North to rule not only the solid South, but to rule one-half nearly, if not more, of the people of the North. I thought so then—I think so now. I thought then, and I think now, that a purpose more unpatriotic, more unjust, more fraught with ruin to this country, never entered the brain of man. That is my belief. Why, Mr. President, of what is it that the Senator of Maine complains? That there were not enough Republican votes at the South. That is the amount of it. And how does he make that out? He assumes, without one shadow of truth produced here, that the negroes of the South were prevented from voting, or forced, to vote the Democratic ticket. He assumes, therefore, that owing to these causes the negroes of the South are not represented by members of the House of Representatives who come from that section of the Union, or by Senators on this floor who represent the Southern States. What right has the Senator from Maine to say that the negroes of the South are not represented by chosen Representatives of the South and chosen Senators of the South? What right has he to vote those negroes on one side himself, and say the men who bear credentials of election do not represent their constituents? Why, Mr. President, it is a bare assumption on his part that he has no right to make. But, again, the Senator ought to have thought of this when he was framing his Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments, or when he was assisting in framing them. There were men then—men of his own party, too—who told him with long foresight that in the end property and intelligence will rule the land, and ignorance cannot. Mr. President, there were men of his party who foresaw that those people who have the intelligence, the education, and property will not be ruled by those who have neither, and in that it is not necessary to separate the community into white people and colored people; not at all is it necessary to do that. No, Mr. President, the result of these constitutional amendments was easy enough to be foreseen. I am not here to-day to justify the violation of the rights of any man, however humble he may be, or whatever may be the poverty of his situation. I am here for no such purpose as that. If I know my own heart, I am here as much in favor of respecting the rights of every man under the constitution as the Senator from Maine or any other Senator on this floor. But I do know that property, intelligence, and education will assert their supremacy everywhere on the face of this globe.

Now, Mr. President, let me say one word more on this subject. Who was it that drew the color-line between the whites and negroes in the South? Let me tell you, sir, that millions of money of the people of the United States were expended by your agents—the Freedman's Bureau agents—in getting every colored man in the South into loyal leagues and swearing them never to vote for a Democrat. That is where the color-line began to be drawn. That institution which took charge of the negro at the ballot-box took charge of him in the cotton-fields—everywhere—supervised every contract he made, allowed no contract to be made unless it had the approval of the agents of the Freedman's Bureau, and spent money and property called "captured and abandoned property" that was surrendered to it and many millions of money directly appropriated out of the treasury of the United States. It was that bureau and its agents who first drew the color-line. And yet, when the white people of the South, when the men owning the property and having the intelligence and education of the South, saw their very social system menaced with destruction; saw their very households threatened with ruin under an inundation of barbarism directed by the most unscrupulous of men; and, when they naturally came together, when they naturally united, as people menaced with danger ever will unite, then a cry is raised against the "solid South."

Oh, Mr. President, it will not do. This system of legislation toward the South that began ten years ago is reaping its fruit, and it is not by additional penal laws that you can better the condition of this country. What does the Senator want more penal laws for? Let him look into the statute-book on this very subject. Let him read the statutes in regard to the enforcement of the rights of citizens to vote, and I defy him to find in the statute-books of any civilized country on this globe a body of laws so minute, so searching, and bristling all over with penalties and fines and forfeitures as do these laws. But that is not all. In addition to that you have the vast machinery of Superintendents of Elections, Federal Supervisors, Marshals, Deputy Marshals—paid electioneers out of the treasury of the United States under the guise of being men to preserve the freedom of suffrage and the peace at elections. You have a whole army of them provided for by your statutes. What more does the Senator want? I think I see, Mr. President what is wanted. I think this is a note which is sounded to the people of the North that they must retrace their steps, and this very party, which required the amendments to the constitution to be made in the interest, it was said, of the colored population of the South, is now preparing to face about, retrace its steps, and undo what it did only a few years ago, either directly or by indirection. Indeed, I thought while the Senator from Maine was making his speech how much reason this country, and especially the southern part of the country, had to congratulate itself that the next House of Representatives will not have a majority of gentlemen thinking like the Senator from Maine; for, if he is right in what he said; if his threats are not mere idle wind (and I certainly do not attribute any such thing to him); if they are the deep-seated and permanent thoughts of those with whom he acts, then I should be prepared to see a House of Representatives in which there was a Republican majority exclude Southern members by the score; then I should have been prepared to see them decide themselves that the right of suffrage was prohibited down there to the negro, and then to see them in their supreme authority, as they would construe it, vote out the chosen Representatives of the South—not by ones, not by twos, but by the score. It is a fortunate thing for this country—it is a fortunate thing for our free institutions—that there is not in the present House of Representatives, and will not be in the next, a majority thinking as the Senator from Maine thinks, and willing to act as he is willing to act.

Mr. President, one word on the amendment I have offered. It is my own belief that there is a far greater danger that menaces our institutions, and menaces the rights of suffrage in this country, than that to which the Senator from Maine has alluded. Sir, the most disheartening thing to an American who loves free institutions is to see that year by year the corrupt use of money in elections is making its way, until the time may come, and that within the observation of even the oldest man here, when elections in the United States will be as debauched as ever they were in the worst days of borough Parliamentary elections in the mother land. Mr. President, there is the greatest danger. The danger is whether this country shall be governed with a view to the rights of every man, the poor man as well as the rich man, or whether the largest purse shall carry elections, and thus be a mere plutocracy instead of a democratic republic. That is the danger, and that danger, let me tell my friend, exists far more in the North than in the South. Sir, if he wants to preserve the purity of elections; if he wants to have this Government perpetuated as a system that can be honestly administered from the primary election to the signature of a bill by the President, let him set his face toward and exercise his great ability in stopping the floodgates of corruption that threaten to deluge the whole land and bring republican institutions into utter ruin and disgrace.
